With the sincere desire to see equal justice done to both Services, it has been with great satisfaction that we have learnt of the intended appointment of Vice-Admiral Fleeming to the Government of Malta. Whilst we have recollected that this island had, as its Governor, a Naval officer (Captain, afterwards Rear-Admiral Sir Alexander Ball), from the time of its capture, in the year 1800, till 1808 or 1809, when Sir Alexander Ball died, we have always considered that it ought to have been continued as a Naval Government; we trust the present impartial nomination of the Colonial Secretary is an earnest that, as vacancies occur in our other Colonies, which formerly Admirals or Captains of the Navy as Governors or Lieutenant-Governors, that the same justice will again be extended to the Naval Service; as the number of superior officers in each profession is nearly the same, that is to say of Generals and Colonels combined, as compared with the small number of Admirals and Post Captains holding rank as full Colonels; and, moreover, that the Navy have no similar appointments for its Field Officers as that of Colonels of regiments, held by above a hundred General Officers of the Army, that henceforward, out of the twenty-five or thirty Colonial Governments, the Navy will have a share, instead of as now but four or five only, and that the Governorship of New South Wales as well as every other which, heretofore, was held by a superior officer of the Navy, will, when Major General Bourke's six years have expired, revert, as in the case of Malta, to some distinguished officer of the Naval Service.

Regarding, as we do, the protection of our Channel Fisheries as a measure which is well entitled to the best attention of His Majesty's Government, as making an extensive nursery for our Navy, we have watched with much interest the progress of the Bill before the House of Commons for amending the laws at present in force regulating the Fisheries on the Coast of England and Wales. We have heard, then, with great regret, that the gallant Member for Brighton has been induced to accede to the representations of interested parties (that is to say, to the fishermen themselves

t which we consider the principal point in the oposed measure—we mean the providing of n per sized mesh for the traul nets, whereby all smaller sized fish would escape; for if it be ant that the prescribed mesh, as stated in the enth clause, shall be only two inches and a half, asured diagonally when the mesh is closed, as has en hitherto the usual method of measuring all s, thus leaving but one inch and a quarter from t to knot when open, then we unhesitatingly that the Bill will be futile; for, with this sized sh, every turbot, sole, dory, and other flat fish, ont a week old, will be caught. We will hope, vever, that the framers of the Bill now before rliament will yet amend this part of the new t, and will add to the seventh clause, after the rds "mesh or meshes of less size or scantling than inches and a half in the clear," the explanation lowing, namely, "that is to say, measured from t to knot in the SQUARE, when the mesh is OPEN."
is the words "in the clear" would have implied.
d it not been otherwise interpreted; and as ery law ought to be framed so distinct and plain t it would be impossible to create any dispute on any point in it, so we confidently trust that PTAIN PECHELL and Sir JOHN GARDE WALLER, ase patriotic motives in bringing forward the easure all must alike admit, will see fit to amend e seventh clause as we have suggested, for rely they never can have intended to have given ss protection to the brood of fish than before, d the old acts fixed the mesh at three inches and o lf, as is shown in the sixth clause of the new ill.

A MUCH be-puffed pamphlet was lately published y the Council of the ci-devant School of Naval rchitecture, and the notices which have appeared especting it have caused us no small amusement.
cting upon the principle recommended by Byron "Every man his own Reviewer," the ingenious thors of this truly ingenious pamphlet have erted themselves to a surprising degree, and ut with one device or another, in the shape of tters under various signatures, paragraphs, &c., ntrived to get long extracts, and reasonings ercon, inserted in various publications. In e outports (particularly in the West, where the mphlet appeared) a column of matter regarding Naval subject, ready cut and dried, was doubts acceptable to the editor; but we own we re a little astonished to find our excellent and lented monthly contemporary, the United Service rnal, fall into the trap so easily. We thought few lines sufficient to expose the fallacies con-ined in this pamphlet, which, with a quantity of orn-out matter, and disquisitions on the theory, ustrated by the everlasting wood-cut, is made up some loose calculations and erroneous state-ents. In proof of this, Mr. Blake, the Master hipwright of Portsmouth Dock-yard, has thought incumbent upon him to address a letter to the nited Service Journal, claiming some inventions hich had been assigned to Sir Robert Seppings.
The whole thing is made up of fallacies and mistatements, and the argument is founded on the ssumption that, notwithstanding considerable ums have been devoted to the education of class of Naval Architects, the institution has been broken up, and condemned, without affording the members thereof a single opportunity of proving their skill in ship-building. Now this is not true. They have had two opportunities or trials, as we have already shown, namely, the Sapphire and Actæon, both which ships are very far inferior to others of their class. The last, indeed, is so crank, that we are in constant dread of hearing that an accident has befallen her. These ships were both designed by Dr. Inman, the Master of the School, upon the principles and dimensions which resulted from scientific deductions, admitted by the members; and it is proved that the proportions are not the best that are available, but, on the contrary, very nearly the worst, indeed, inferior to what were usually adopted before the School was established. We should wish to know what the Council will say on this point, and how they intend disposing of this hitch, which it behoves them to do before the public will be satisfied that any new light can be thrown upon the question of ship-building by these theorists.

IN some of our early numbers we took occasion to mention the existence of an instrument (but little known), for measuring a base line at one view; and, therefore applicable to taking the distance during the ever varying positions adopted in Naval actions, or in chase, and also available for many other purposes at sea, such as estimating the true distance from a light-house, a buoy &c.; besides, not only answering the purpose of the common roming-up glass, whilst in chase or during a trial of sailing, but enabling the observer to ascertain within a yard how much ground has been lost or gained at any time.
We lately reverted to the subject in commenting upon the excellence of the shell practice on board the Phœnix steamer, and we have often wondered, that an instrument combining all the advantages of the best telescope we ever looked through, with the apparatus described, should remain in obscurity, its existence apparently unknown, when such an eager disposition is manifested for the perfection of every thing that can tend to improve those sciences, available for Naval or Military purposes. The invention was perfected by the celebrated mathematician, Dr. Brewster of Edinburgh, towards the close of the late war; and we believe the Duke of Wellington and some military officers availed themselves of it. Many instruments were also sent to India, but we are not aware of a single case where it has been used in the Royal Navy, or at sea,—the position of all others where it is most desirable, owing to the difficulty, from various circumstances, of obtaining the true measurement of one side of an angle, in order to calculate the others. Even Sir Howard Douglas, in his excellent Treatise on Naval Gunnery, although acknowledging the many difficulties which existed in taking the distance, and devising some ingenious executions for estimating the same, has totally overlooked the existence of the double image telescope, a description of which may be found in Dr.
Brewster's Treatise on Philosophical Instruments; and it is not more than two years since we saw a telescope, fitted for use, at the shop of Mr. Harris, Opticians, in Holborn, who was, we believe, engaged by the professor to manufacture them. For the steamers employed on the Coast of Spain, the ships about to compete in the experimental squadron, indeed for purposes of taking up a desired distance (precisely), for any occasion, these telescopes will be found so useful, that we trust the Admiralty will order them to be supplied; and should this be declined, we think it is the most useful instrument which a Captain of a ship can provide on his appointment, at the individual expense of a few pounds.

Some interest has been excited by the circumstance of Count los Valos or Valles having transacted business in the early part of the week at the Foreign-office. The Count is an aid-de-camp and confident of Don Carlos, and his visit has been attributed to his being charged with a mission, the object of which is to arrange, through the mediation of England and France, a matrimonial alliance between a son of Don Carlos and the Infant Queen of Spain. But we believe the more immediate object of his visit was to endeavour to negotiate for the release of prisoners, some of whom are at present confined in the Tagus.

Mr. Wason on Thursday night gave notice, in the House of Commons, that he would bring before the House the conduct of honourable members in voting away the rights of private property without hearing the evidence bearing upon the subject. The evil of which he complained has long been felt, and every person who has an interest in property, which may be affected by any of the measures which are referred to these committees, must rejoice that it is in contemplation to bring the working of the present system distinctly before the house with a view to the application of a fitting remedy. We particularly urge the Hon. member's attention to the proceedings on the Brighton Railways. It is said publicly that certain parties pledged themselves on one side, and were, without hearing the evidence, suddenly converted.

Royal Naval School.—On Wednesday the second general meeting for the present year, of the friends and supporters of this institution, was held at the school, Alfred-house, Camberwell, and was numerously attended.
The objects of the meeting were twofold—first, to confirm the report of the council of administration received at the meeting of the 31st of May last; and, secondly, to distribute among the scholars the prizes (including a gold and a silver medal) to which many of them, at the examination which took place a few days ago, had proved themselves entitled. Before the second, which was the principal object of the meeting, was proceeded with, Adm. Sir R.
Stopford was called to the chair, and a resolution confirmatory of the report above alluded to was unanimously agreed to. A short discussion then took place relative to the appropriation of a fund wherewith to build a school for the institution. Sir E. Codrington was selected to present the prizes. Masters G. Jennings and G. Christian were the two boys who had been named as deservedly claimants of the gold and silver medals.
Those prizes were given to them, as were also several consisting of popular books to others of the scholars, among whom Masters Domville, Hopley, Andrews, Birch, Harper, Tomson, Morgan, Payne, Scutt, and Barker, were conspicuous. Nothing could surpass the extraordinary proficiency in various branches of classical and mathematical knowledge, and in different modern languages, which these boys exhibited. But we feel called upon to lay more particular stress upon the attainments of the two young gentlemen, neither of whom was beyond 15 years of age, who gained the medals. The former of the two was the first boy in the school as far as general knowledge went, and the second was, in addition, the author of an English poem upon Columbus, which he read to the meeting amidst the most hearty applause.
Several prizes were also awarded to different boys for their proficiency in drawing, &c.

A fair damsel of seventeen, of a highly respectable family, at Aire, in the Pas de Calais, appeared on Sunday the 5th instant, as the representative of the Virgin Mary, in the procession of the Fête Dieu. She was, however, soon tired of her assumed character, for she eloped the same evening with an officer of the 4th Regiment of Parmesiers.—Galignani's Messenger.

attendant at St. Helena, died on Friday week of erysipe-

A Royal Sculptor.—The Princess Mary, one of the daughters of the King of the French, has executed some beautiful specimens of sculpture; and a statue just completed is spoken of as a chef-d'œuvre.

An article in the German papers explains the recent reports relative to the 20 000 Russian troops entering Wallachia, by the very simple statement that it relates only to "the change of the garrison of Silistria, which has always taken place every three months, but which fortress will be very shortly evacuated."

The reigning Landgrave, Louis of Hesse Homburg, arrived in town yesterday week from Germany. The Government steamer, with the remains of this much lamented nobleman on board, arrived at Spurnmouth on ancestry, in the family vault in Elgin Cathedral.

Exhibition of the Art of Self Defence.—The Prince of Orange having expressed a desire that, previous to his sons leaving England, they should witness an exhibi-

he mode of self-defence adopted by the lower classes his country, a private muster of the men most cele- ted in the annals of pugilism, &c., was got up on nesday afternoon at the School of Arms, St. James's eet, Messrs. Angelo having kindly granted its use tha occasion. At 3 o'clock their Royal Highnesses ved, attended by their suite, long previous to which room was crowded to excess. Among the company ent were Prince George of Cambridge, the Prince Salms; the Dukes of Grafton and Beaufort; Mar- sses Anglesy, Douglas, Douro, and Graham; Earls mouth, Errol, and Euston; Lords Willoughby de sby, Ribblesdale, Frederick and Adolphus Fitz- ence, Grimston, Ludlow, Hereford, F. Then followed a bout the same weapons between a Creole gentleman ed Lyons (stated to be 84 years of age) and Mr. H. gelo, jun., which strikingly exhibited the contrast ween the old and new school, and finished the sports. 5 o'clock their Royal Highnesses departed, after ng expressed themselves highly gratified with the imens they had witnessed. The veteran Jackson ated as Master of the Ceremonies.

Mr. Power, of Killane, is to be made a Baronet.

We have the authority of Mr. Rose, the rector of gton, to contradict the report that Earl Spencer has owed the example of his brother, and become a Ro- Catholic. Mr. Rose states that his Lordship was his own seat last Sunday, June 12, that he adminis- d the sacrament to him in the parish church on ter Sunday last, and he knows that he received it n on Whit Sunday last, in the parish church of worth, near Wiseton, his Lordship's seat in Not- hamshire.

National Literary Work.—His Majesty has been loously pleased to permit Captain Brenton to dedi- to him his "Naval History of Great Britain," now in se of publication. The gallant author is one of the st officers in the service, having been nearly forty s actively employed, during which period he has e a part in many a memorable engagement. Inde- lently, however, of his extensive experience, he pos- es unusual facilities for carrying into effect this great ary undertaking. In the first place, he has had free ss to official documents; secondly, the great Naval es who figure in his narrative, with many of whom as on the most intimate terms, have cordially assisted by putting him in possession of a variety of impor- facts not generally known, as well as numerous te letters, &c.; and, thirdly, his skill as a draughts- has enabled him to furnish some striking embellish- ts. Such a work from the pen of a professional er, faithfully recording the triumphs of the British In every part of the globe, during the most eventful od of British history—ushered forth under such aus- s—and preferring, altogether, such peculiar claims on le attention, may be emphatically called a national and must ensure a hearty welcome, not only from Naval profession, but also from the great body of lish readers. Yesterday week an operation was performed by Mr. Alexander on the Duke of Sussex's eyes. ## Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY, 13th June.—In answer to a question from the Marquess of WESTMEATH, Lord DUNCANNON stated that two Bills had been introduced into the other House, the one for the entire alteration of the present constitution of the Post-office establishment, and the other for transferring the management of the packets from the Post-office to the Admiralty. The Marquess of DOWNSHIRE impressed upon the House the importance of establishing a packet station on the west coast of Ireland. —A long debate ensued on the second reading of the Administration of Justice (Court of Chancery) Bill, which was moved by the LORD CHANCELLOR. Lord LYNDHURST moved as an amendment, "That the Bill be read a second time that day six months." The amendment was opposed by Lord Langdale and Lord Melbourne, and supported by Lord Abinger and the Duke of Wellington. On a division, the amendment was carried by a majority of 65. The numbers being—for the original motion, 21; for the amendment, 94. The Bill was consequently lost.

TUESDAY, 14th June.—The Marquess of LANSDOWNE stated, that the Government were not yet prepared to come forward with a plan upon the subject of Railways; but that Ministers, in the course of a very short time, should be prepared with a plan which he believed would be generally approved of. In the mean time he thought it desirable to introduce into all Railway Bills a clause subjecting them to any general plan which the House might think fit to adopt. The Duke of WELLINGTON was of a similar opinion, and read a clause to that effect, which he proposed should be introduced into all Bills. —The Universities (Scotland) Bill was read a second time, and ordered to be committed on Thursday fortnight. The House went into committee on the Municipal Act Amendment Bill, and a clause was introduced, reserving to the Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge the Justiciary powers which he at present possessed.

THURSDAY, 16th June.—After the presentation of several petitions in favour of the London Grand Junction Railway Bill, the Duke of RICHMOND said that he was not aware that in this country there were many railroads passing through crowded districts with locomotive engines, and he was anxious before their Lordships sanctioned that principle, that they should be quite sure that no danger of fire was to be apprehended from the use of those engines. He therefore gave notice that he meant to move for a select committee tu inquire into the subject.—The Birmingham, Bristol, and Thames Junction Railway Bill was read a third time, upon which the Duke of WELLINGTON moved that the following clause be added:—"Provided always, and be it further enacted, that nothing herein contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, to the exemption of this ur any other Railroad from the provisions of any general Act or general Acts for the regulation of Railroads, which may be passed with a view tu the advantage, protection, and security of the public, before the expiration of one year from the passing of this Act, if Parliament shall be sitting at the expiration of such period of one year, or if Parliament should not be then sitting, before the end of the next session." The Marquess of CLANRICARDE objected to the clause, as being inexpedient and unjust. The Earl of MANSFIELD was of opinion that the clause ought not to be adopted. Lord HATHERTON was of opinion that even if the clause were good, the present was not the proper time for effecting the object intended. The Earl of WICKLOW thought that the effect of the clause would be to paralyse the exertions of those who embarked in these great enterprises. Lord ASHBURTON was of opinion that the best course would be that their Lordships should appoint a committee to clear the matter up, and to hear the opinions of the parties who had suggested the necessity of this precaution. The Marquess of LANSDOWNE supported the motion. After a few words from the Marquess of Salisbury and the Duke of Richmond, the House divided—for the Duke of Wellington's clause, 33; against it, 15; majority, 18. The clause was then added to the Bill, and the Bill was passed.—The South Eastern Railway Bill was read a third time and passed.

FRIDAY, 17th June.—The Duke of Richmond, at the request of Lord Melbourne, postponed his observations on the Report of the Post-office Commissioners until Monday.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer, attended by a large body of the Commons, appeared at the Bar to request a conference with their Lordships on the subject of the amendment to the Irish Municipal Bill. The Conference was agreed to, and the Marquess of Lansdowne afterwards read the reasons of the Commons for disagreeing to the amendments; when Lord MELBOURNE moved that the Bill, as amended by the Commons, be taken into consideration on Friday next. Agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 13th June.—The House met at twelve o'clock, for the purpose of forwarding public business; but the greater part of the sitting was occupied with a discussion on the affair between Sir F. Trench and Mr. R. Wason, both of whom were brought up in the custody of the Serjeant-at-Arms. After a great deal of negotiation and parleying, both having mutually explained, and given the House an assurance that the affair should not be carried further, they were discharged from custody.—The further consideration of the Lords' amendments on the Irish Municipal Corpomtions Bill was resumed. Mr. S. CRAWFORD gave notice that at the proper time he would bring forward a motion for including all the corporate towns in this Bill which were in the first one, and divide the House upon the question. All the clauses struck out by the House of Lords down to the 35th were then restored, after which, it being three o'clock, the House adjourned.—The Speaker resumed the chair at five o'clock.—The Herne Bay Pier Bill was read a third time and passed.—A new writ was ordered for South Warwickshire, in the room of Mr. Sheldon, deceased.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said that the proposition he had submitted for the alteration of the duty on the first class paper, would take effect from the October quarter; and on stained paper in July. He thought it would be both just and expedient not to allow a drawback. For the purpose, however, of affording accommodation to the trade, he had provided not only that the privilege of manufacturing and storing in bond should be continued, but that in case any very great quantity of a particular paper affected by these regulations, should remain on hand in the stationers' stocks on the 10th October, allowance should be made for it.—Mr. RICHARDS complained of some perversion of a speech of his which had appeared in The Globe newspaper.—The House resolved itself into a committee on the Marriages Bill. Mr. POULTER objected to clause 18, which enacts that marriages may be celebrated before the superintendent-registrar. Mr. Baines supported the clause, and Sir R. Inglis opposed it. Dr. LUSHINGTON said that if this clause were omitted, the whole remedy of the Bill would be left out. Lord J. RUSSELL thought the principle involved in the Bill a good one, and that they were bound to maintain it. Sir R. PEEL did not consider that they had any right to interfere with the solemnization of marriage by the Dissenters, but thought that members of the Established Church should not be allowed to dispense with the religious ceremony. After a few words from Mr. Law, Mr. Pryme, the Attorney-General, and Mr. Trevor, the committee divided—for the amendment, 58; against it, 123: majority, 65.—This and several other clauses were then agreed to.

TUESDAY, 14th June.—The Southampton Waterworks Bill, the Preston and Longridge Railway Bill, and the Wessenden Reservoir Bill, were severally read a third time and passed.—A great number of petitions were presented, among which was one by Mr. D. W. Harvey, from persons in the county of Radnor, complaining of proceedings at law adopted against them by the Commissioners of Woods and Forests.—Sir F. TRENCH complained of the inconvenience of the prison rooms belonging to the House, which were so unfit for the purposes for which they were intended, that he had the most serious apprehensions of the consequences, should he ever again become an inmate of them. The Speaker said that every endeavour would be made to remedy the evil.—On the motion that the report on the Tremouth Railway Bill be taken into further discussion, Mr. C. BULLER moved that it be taken into further consideration that day six months. The amendment, on a division, was lost by a majority of 73, and the Bill was ordered to be printed.—Lord MAHON inquired what progress had been made in the negotiations between Spain and the South American States respecting the recognition of the independence of the latter powers by the former, and was informed by Lord Palmerston that Generals Soublette and O'Leary were still at Madrid, and that there was every probability that the negotiations would be brought to a satisfactory termination.—The House proceeded with the further consideration of the Lords' amendments on the Municipal Corporations (Ireland) Bill, upon which Mr. S. CRAWFORD stated his intention of moving that the towns in schedule C. be restored to the Bill. He then moved that Bandon be included in the towns which were to have a mayor and council. The amendment was seconded by Mr. Serjeant JACKSON amidst considerable laughter. A lengthened discussion ensued. Ultimately the House divided—for the amendment, 8; against it, 148; majority, 140.—A committee was then appointed, on the motion of Lord John Russell, to draw up reasons against acceding to the Lords' amendments.

WEDNESDAY, 15th June.—The Speaker took the chair at 4 o'clock; but there being only 37 members, the House was adjourned.

THURSDAY, 16th June.—A petition was presented by Mr. CUTLAR FERGUSSON, from Kirkcudbright, complaining of the want of lighthouses on the Scotch side of the Solway Firth, whereby numerous shipwrecks, and great loss of life, were frequently occasioned on the coast.—Mr. HUTT obtained leave to bring in a Bill for the better regulation of the Trinity-house at Hull.—A select committee was appointed to consider the most effectual plan for raising of money to carry into effect certain improvements in London and Westminster.—Mr. O'CONNELL wished to add to the subjects of inquiry before the committee just named, an investigation into the state of the law relative to lotteries, foreign or otherwise, in which schemes have been advertised or circulated, or tickets or shares disposed of, in the United Kingdom. The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said he had given directions for the preparation of a Bill upon the subject, which he would refer to a committee.—The Registration of Voters Bill was then recommitted, and after considerable discussion the clauses up to the 19th were agreed to.—Mr. BROTHERTON then moved that the Chairman report progress, which led to a lengthened conversation. Ultimately the motion was agreed to, and the House adjourned.

FRIDAY, 17th June.—Lord G. Lennox brought up the Report of the Committee on Stephenson's Line for the Brighton Railway: Mr. Alston brought up a special Report from the committee on Rennie's Line. Both were ordered to lie on the table.—Mr. G. YOUNG presented a petition from the East India Maritime Officers, praying for compensation. Sir J. C. HOBHOUSE said no man more than himself estimated the value of the services of the officers of the East India Company. He questioned not their merits, but he must confess, after again looking over the papers, with respect to the particular case in question, he had arrived at the same conclusion to which he had come before. After some further discussion, Mr. YOUNG gave notice that on 7th July he would move that the petition be referred to a select committee.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said that the committee appointed to draw up reasons to offer to the House of Lords for disagreeing to certain amendments made by their Lordships in the Irish Municipal Corporations Bill had finished their report, which was then read by the Clerk. It stated the necessity of good correspondence existing between the two Houses of Parliament; that the Bill was framed on the principle of a reform of abuses, retaining a system of Municipal Government, but that which was returned from the House of Lords abolished Municipal Corporations in Ireland altogether, and placed the Corporate funds under a Board of Commissioners. Sir R. PEEL hoped it would be distinctly understood that the reasons were given under protest, and were not the opinions of the entire House. The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER replied that the understanding on such occasions was, that they were to be considered as the reasons of the majority. The Clerk then proceeded with the reading of the reasons, which having been agreed to by the house, a great number of the members proceeded to the House of Lords, to request a conference.—The House went into committee on the Registration of Voters Bill, when Mr. PRAED moved as an amendment on the 49th clause that counsel be allowed to appear in support of votes before the revising barristers. The amendment was lost by a majority of 46. Several other amendments were moved, but negatived, and the clauses up to the 60th were agreed to.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—The Minister of Marine has just given an important mission to Capt. Pardaillan. He has instructed him to visit the English Antilles, there to examine the effects of the emancipation of the negroes. Capt. Pardaillan is a distinguished officer. He commands the Fabert brig, with which he is also to visit the Dutch and Spanish colonies.

SPAIN.—An evening Paper states, on the strength of a letter from Madrid, that Queen Christina has been for a long time married to her favourite, Munoz, the ceremony having been performed by the Jesuits of La Granja. Three children are the fruit of the union; these are being brought up at Grenada, the Bishop of that city superintending their education. Munoz is a man of simple habits, without ambition. He exercises, however, considerable influence; the Council is often held at his house, and his advice generally predominates. He is desirous that the Queen should withdraw from State affairs and go and enjoy the fortune which she has invested in the Bank of England—five millions, and two millions more in M. Ardouin's hands, without reckoning the jewels which Ferdinand left her, and which are estimated at several millions more. If matters become more complicated, the Queen may be induced to adopt this step; but in restating these reports we are far from guaranteeing their perfect authenticity.—Courrier Francais.

SAN SEBASTIAN, June 9.—At about half an hour before daylight, the enemy having received an additional reinforcement of five battalions, made an effort to regain possession of Passages. A strong body of the Navarese troops, the Navarese, had silently approached the heights on which is placed Ld. J. Hay's battery, and where clinging up it, when they were discovered by the sentinels, who gave the alarm. There was a picket of the Zaragoza regt. stationed in a house half way up the mountain. The three Carlist battalions, 1,200 men, attacked most vigorously. They first fired against the door, which they succeeded in partially breaking open; but they met with a hot reception from within. The British sailors and marines, by whom the battery was manned, descended from the fortified height to protect the Spanish soldiers who were standing out in the picket-house,—they drove the enemy away; whilst a shower of grape-shot from the battery did great execution. As soon as the enemy's movement was discovered, signal-rockets were thrown up from the fort, and Gen. Evans ordered 200 men of the 8th regt. to cross the river, to co-operate with the Commodore; but although this order was promptly executed (boats having been supplied by the navy), the assistance was not required. In the meantime the companies of the 4th British, supported by two other and the regt. itself in reserve, were sent forward towards Alza; they drove in the enemy's pickets on that side and caused the enemy to evacuate his positions before Passages, and retire to Lezo. The loss on our side is two English soldiers killed and two Spaniards; and 18 wounded. Lieut. Langley, Royal Marines, was wounded in the thigh, but not dangerously. The loss on the part of the Carlists must have been severe. A reinforcement of marines from H.M.'s ship Tweed has been sent round to Passages to-night. Passages is in a complete state of defence against the attempts of Don Carlos's whole forces, should the cause them to be brought against it. It is reported in town that Iturriza is killed. There were six soldiers of the British Legion and three Chapgorris taken prisoners on the 6th, and barbarously murdered. They were pinioned naked to rings in a wall, then shot in the calves of the legs, afterwards in the thighs, and finally in the abdomen, leaving them afterwards to die in torments.

— June 9. The official returns of the loss in the sortie of the 6th inst. are as follows:—Killed—British, 4; Spaniards, 18; total, 64. Wounded—British, 1; Spaniards, 68; total, 143. Officers wounded—British, 8; Spaniards, 10. It is well ascertained that the insurgents had 700 hors de combat, of whom full 200 are allowed by good informants to have been killed. The names of the British officers wounded are:—Capt. Du en; 1st. reg.; Capt. James, and Lieut. Pearce, 4th; Capt. Wnod, 6th; Lieut. Coldstream, Lieut. Light, and Ensign Raby, 8th; Ensign Dillon, 9th. Some of these officer's wounds are severe, but none dangerous.

BELGIUM.—The King and Queen, and the Prince Royal, are gone on a short visit to Paris. The King gave a private audience to Rossini on his recent visit to Brussels, who presented to his Majesty an unpublished piece of music of his composing. The King has since sent the composer the Insignia of the Order of Leopold.

SAXONY.—Accounts were received on Munday from Dresden, bringing intelligence of the death of the King of Saxony. His Majesty expired at the castle of Pilnitz on the 5th. A proclamation has been issued in the name of his present Majesty Frederick Augustus, nephew of the deceased King, who has been, since 1830, co-Regent. At that period the late King's brother, Prince Maximilian, renounced his right to the succession in favour of his son, who has now ascended the throne accordingly.

UNITED STATES.—The New York papers to the 20th, and those of Philadelphia to the 21st ult. have been received. From the communications contained in these papers, it would appear that Santa Anna has suffered a signal defeat.

JAMAICA.—No order recalling the Governor has been received by this packet. But his Excellency has been required by his Government to call the Assembly together, and to make full and ample reparation to the house for the violation committed by the Governor of its privileges. The Governor has called the Assembly to meet on the 24th inst. for the despatch of business.—Kingston Chronicle, May 7.

Theatres.

KING'S THEATRE.—This Theatre has been the great metropolitan attraction of the week. On Thursday the Queen and a select party were present, as were the Duchess of Kent and her interesting daughter. Long before the rising of the curtain every seat in the theatre was occupied, and numbers were accommodated with seats upon the stage. The entertainments were for the benefit of the enterprising and deserving manager, M. Laporte, who provided an ample bill of fare for the amusement of his patrons. The whole of the admired opera of I Puritani, a new ballet by Deshayes, called L'Amour et la Folie, and Gnecco's comic opera, La Prova d'un Opera Seria, the latter for the first time this season, were the entertainments. The ballet is a very pretty one, exceedingly well got up, and furnished occasion for some very elegant dancing by the four established favourites of the season—Mademoiselles Romain and Carlotta Grisi, with Conston and Perrot. Gnecco's piece is well known as a great hit in its way; and the audiences usually understand it so well, and enjoy it so much, that it seems throwing away a great card to suffer so much of the season to pass away without giving it. Grisi and Lablache particularly were admirable. "God save the King" was sung by all the performers, and a numerous and miscellaneous chorus. It was received with the utmost enthusiasm, and the appearance of the audience standing, the front of the boxes lined with well-dressed women, was one of the finest and most imposing spectacles that can be imagined. The entertainments did not conclude till near 2 o'clock.

COVENT GARDEN.—An opera in two acts, called The Sexton of Cologne, was produced at this theatre on Monday evening, and met with a very fair reception. The music is by Mr. Rodwell, and the drama from the pen of Mr. Fitzball. The plot of this piece is taken from a story which is familiar to us, and which we believe has appeared in one of the Annuals. The main feature is, the interment of the Burgomaster's daughter, who, to all appearance, dies on her wedding day, and, according to custom, is buried within a few hours after in all her bridal finery. The Sexton of Cologne, to save his family from starvation, resolves to descend into the tomb and rob the Lady Adelaide of her jewels. The first ring he draws from her finger is the charmed one; the spell is broken, and the lady recovers from her death-like slumber. A great mistake has been made in the part of the Sexton, there are several opportunities for some effective scenes had the Sexton been a grave man instead of a fool,—this part should have been of the same kind as the Monk in Scott's "Lay of the Last Minstrel," it would then have been highly effective, and given an interest to the opera. The music of the piece was heard to great disadvantage, as the principal tenor was labouring under severe indisposition; there is however much that is pleasing though not all original,—several of the songs we are certain will become popular. The song in the second act, sung by Collins, who (though suffering from a severe cold) was rapturously encored, is a very pleasing composition. The opening duet is an old acquaintance at third hand. The scena in act second, for Miss Romer, is a spirited piece of music, and the air in the finale to the first act also displays great taste, they were both well executed by Miss Romer. Miss Turpin sang her first ballad in a very pleasing style, it was given with considerable naivete, and well merited the encore it received,—her acting was also loudly and deservedly applauded. There were several duets and trios in the opera on which we cannot offer criticism, as Mr. Collins was unable to give effect to his part in them. The scenery is exceedingly beautiful, and reflects credit on Mr. Marshall.

LYCEUM.—A new drama in three parts, called The Farmer's Story, was played for the first time on Monday evening, proved successful, and has been repeated every evening since to tolerable good houses. This piece is from the pen of Mr. Bernard, and in its construction is similar to several of this gentleman's productions. There is little novelty in either the plot or situations, nor can we compliment the author on the manner in which he has worked out this drama, it is by far too unconnected and sketchy. The principal dramatis personæ appear to have been taken from the play of The Gamester, they are Mr. and Mrs. Beverley and Stukely in humble life. The piece, however, is not without interest, and may serve for a week or two until something better can be procured. The principal character in the drama, Mrs. Lockwood, was sustained by Mrs. Keeley, and to her exertions we mainly attribute the success of the piece, her acting was throughout natural and affecting. Mr. Serle's Lockwood we cannot praise, he has too much of the manner and gait of a pedagogue to stir our blood. Mrs Hemmings and Mr. Bland did their best for two very indifferent parts. The comic portion of the piece (which might just as well have been kept for any other drama for all that it had to do with The Farmer's Story) was entrusted to Wrench and Oxberry; all we shall say is, we could have wished them something better suited to their talent.

QUEEN'S THEATRE.—On Thursday night Master Henry O'Connell had a benefit at this theatre, which we are inclined to think turned out a loss. It was from beginning to end a disgraceful exhibition—a scene of riot, row, and confusion. This unseemly disturbance arose (as a morning contemporary justly observes), "from the rint not having been collected by the son with the facility with which it is obtained by Mr. Daniel O'Connell, who he calls his FATHER," and consequently his inability to defray the expenses of his evening's amusement. Surely the magistrates ought to look to this system of humbug, at a regularly licensed theatre.

ASTLEY'S.—This popular theatre continues its attractions. Durrow has dramatised Lalla Rookh, which forms a splendid spectacle, got up without regard to expense.

VAUXHALL.—These delightful gardens have opened, with the prospect of a successful season. There are considerable and judicious improvements, and but for the rain, the exhibition of last evening, in celebration of the Battle of Waterloo, would have been more splendid in every respect than any of late years.

Literary Notices.

The Services of Field Marshal the Duke of Wellington, K.G., during his various Campaigns from 1789 to 1818, compiled from Official and Authentic Documents. By Lieutenant-Colonel Gurwood. Volume V. John Murray.

WE rejoice at the rapid progress of this invaluable work: the fifth volume includes the Despatches, and other important documents, from 8th August, 1808, to 30th March, 1810, a period replete with stirring events in Spain and Portugal, and of the highest interest to every military man and the historian. An extract or two, taken at random, will best show the general value of the work. In 1809, the gallant Duke, then Viscount Wellington, with reference to the proceedings of a General Court-Martial on a Lieutenant, accused of unofficerlike and ungentlemanly conduct in an affray, of which crime the Court "honourably" acquitted him, offers the following able comment on "honourable acquittals:"—

"It appears that the affray in which the Court have found that Lieut. ——— was concerned, originated in a brothel, in which Lieut. ——— was with other officers; and although his conduct in the affray might have been distinguished by his activity to quell it, and merits the acquittal which the Court have sentenced, I should not do my duty by them, or by his Majesty, who has intrusted me with the power of confirming their sentence, if I did not draw their attention to the use of the term honourably, which it contains. It is difficult and needless at present to define in what cases an honourable acquittal by a Court-Martial is peculiarly applicable; but it must appear to all persons to be objectionable, in a case in which any part of the transaction, which has been the subject of investigation before the Court-Martial, is disgraceful to the character of the party under trial. A sentence of honourable acquittal by a Court-Martial should be considered by the officers and soldiers of the army as a subject of exultation; but no man can exult in the termination of any transaction, a part of which has been disgraceful to him; and although such transaction may be terminated by an honourable acquittal by a Court-Martial, it cannot be mentioned to the party without offence, or without exciting feelings of disgust in others; these are not the feelings which ought to be excited by the recollection and mention of a sentence of honourable acquittal. I believe that there is no officer upon the General Court-Martial who wishes to connect the term honour with the act of going to a brothel; the common practice forbids it, and there is no man who unfortunately commits this act, who does not endeavour to conceal it from the world and his friends. But the honourable acquittal of Lieut. ———, as recorded in this sentence, which states that he was concerned in an affray, which is known to have originated in a brothel, will have the effect of connecting with the act of going to a brothel, the honourable distinction which it is in the power of a Court-Martial to bestow on those brought before them on charges of a very different nature, by the sentence which it may pass upon them. I therefore anxiously recommend to the General Court-Martial to omit the word honourably in their sentence."

A letter from Lord Wellington to the Military Secretary at the Horse Guards, recommending Major Coghlan, 61st Regiment, for promotion, affords the gallant Editor the opportunity of paying a tribute to the memory of that brave officer:

"Major Coghlan had been wounded and left at Talavera and had escaped from prison on his march towards France. He was soon afterwards promoted to be Lieut.-Colonel of the 61st, in the command of which regiment he was shot through the heart at the battle of Toulouse, on the 10th April, 1814. He was buried, under fire, in a temporary grave, on the position captured from the enemy; but, on the 12th, was removed, by the Compiler, to the Protestant cemetery in Toulouse, where the Commander of the Forces, Major-General the Hon. Edward Pakenham, Lord Fitzroy Somerset, the Hon. Alexander Gordon, Sir John Colborne, Lieut.-Colonel George Napier, and all the officers of the army then in Toulouse paid the last tribute of respect to his remains. He lived in person, mind, and conduct the model of a British officer; and he died, where he had often distinguished himself, at the head of his regiment, in the moment of victory."

For reference this is unquestionably the most valuable military and political work of our times, and should have a place in every library.

Excursions in Switzerland. By J. FENIMORE COOPER, Esq. Author of "The Pilot," "The Spy," &c. 2 vols. Richard Bentley.

IN visiting the romantic country of Switzerland, Mr. Cooper has been actuated by other views than those which generally influence travellers. Belonging himself to the greatest republic in the world, he was anxious to inspect personally a similar form of government on a small scale, and to estimate its influence on the customs and opinions of the people. It is to this we owe the peculiar character, and some of the peculiar interest of the present work, which, we are of opinion, throws more light on the social, moral, and political condition of Switzerland, than can be derived from any other book extant on the same subject. Mr. Cooper's views and remarks, though they are sometimes unpalatable to the English, are always forcible and original, and deserving of earnest attention; and the reader cannot fail to be struck with certain symptoms in his present volume indicating that if he does not love England more than formerly, his admiration of his native country has considerably cooled since his return from Europe to America. This is rather an edifying fact.

But in pointing out the political tone, which here and there manifests itself in his volumes, we must guard our readers against the notion that such is their prevailing characteristic. On the contrary, their chief feature is narrative, embracing the events which transpired during the author's journey among the sublime Alps, many of which he fearlessly scaled. Nothing, indeed, can be more graphic and picturesque than his sketches of the grotesque old towns of the different Cantons; nothing more faithful, and, at the same time, poetical, than his descriptions of the magnificent scenery of this mountain-region under the varying influences of storm, mist, sun-rise, and sunset.

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY.

As the following letter received from Major General Sir Henry Wheatley, Keeper of the Privy Purse testifies:—

Sir,—I am honoured with the King's command to express His Majesty's sense of your polite attention in sending the two bottles of Essence of Ginger. His Majesty has been pleased to direct me to forward you ten pounds in payment for it—inclosed you will find that amount.—I am, Sir, your's obediently,

St. James's Palace, June 25th, 1835. H. WHEATLEY

To Mr. Decimus Woodhouse.

WOODHOUSE'S ÆTHERIAL ESSENCE of GINGER is particularly recommended to all cold, phlegmatic, weak, and nervous constitutions; it is certain in affording instant relief in Cholera Morbus, Spasms, Cramps, Flatulence, Languor, Hysterics, Heartburn, Loss of Appetite, Sensation of Fulness, Pain and Oppression after Meals; also those Pains of the Stomach and Bowels which arise from Gouty Flatulencies; Digestion, however much impaired, is restored to its pristine state, by the use of this Essence for a short time, if taken in Tea, Coffee, Ale, Beer, Porter, Cider, or Wine; it corrects their Flatulent Tendency.

The undernamed, and 208 other Medical men have given certificates of their unqualified approbation of the value of this Essence, as also of its superiority over all other similar preparations. Drs. James Johnson, Physician to his Majesty, A. Halliday, S. Ashwell, R. Rowley, A. Middleton, C. London, Davies, Surgeon to their Majesties, J. Pereira, O. Pilcher, Salmon, F. Tyrell, T. H. Curtis, Apothecary to his Majesty, C. Millar.

This Essence is prepared only by DECIMUS WOODHOUSE, Operative Chemist Extraordinary to his Majesty, 18, King William-street, New London bridge; and sold by him, wholesale and retail, in bottles, 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., 10s. 6d., and 21s. each; and may be had of all Medicine Venders.

TO PREVENT FRAUD.

THORN'S POTTED YARMOUTH BLOATERS, for Toast, Biscuits, Sandwiches, and Wine in Pots, 1s. and 2s. each. The high repute and immense sale this delicate preparation has induced several would-be tradesmen (who not having an idea of their own) to attempt an Imposition by labelling a pot exactly like his, thereby to deceive the public and injure him, thereby actually applied to his printer for the purpose); well knowing they cannot prepare the Fish, the receipt being a cold family one, and the secret in the curing of the Herring, by which its rancid qualities are destroyed, and it becomes so delicious a relish. It is easily detected by observing his signature, ALEX. THORN, on the side, and on the top, Proprietor of the celebrated TALLY HO! SAUCE, for Fish, Game, Steaks, Wild Fowl, and all Made Dishes, imparting a zest not otherwise acquired—the most economical now in use. In Bottles, 2s. and 4s. each, warranted to all climates. Wholesale at the Manufactory, Thorn's Oil, Italian, and Foreign Warehouse, 223, High Holborn, also of all wholesale oilmen and druggists; and retail by all respectable oilmen, grocers, and druggists in the United Kingdom.

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL,

unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, pre- serving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, rendering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and sustaining it in curl under the different varieties of atmosphere.

Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO., Perfumers to the Royal Family, No. 63 Oxford Street, London.

Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs Hannay and Co. were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to the Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individual who divulged it to them, or whose head would inevitably have paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties successively employed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn oaths of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three centuries.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed the greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and most uncivilised countries great value is set upon a fine head of hair. The great care is proverbial that is paid in the cultivation of the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, and art is there well known to succeed in outrivalling even the far-famed beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during the period of three centuries, and has been found unfailingly successful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, soft, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess as is done in some instances) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair upon cast iron—it will do no such thing; but, if regularly applied, it will re-produce the hair where nature ordained its existence, if lost from those causes to which baldness is referable; it will promote the growth of the hair generally.

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY,

sustain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a brilliant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a pure LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, unsophisticated with the deleterious articles usually employed to dye Oils red, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the hair, and although an oily substance, the

ORIENTAL OIL DOES NOT RENDER THE HAIR GREASY, and is therefore free from the general complaint against every other article in present use for the same purpose, including those filthy substances miscalled Bears' Grease, which are neither more nor less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil submitted to various manipulations to divest them of the fetid animal smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform principle. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dews of the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprive it of which it soon withers and dies; so the hair, unless properly nourished, becomes weak and gradually drops off; for, minute as a single hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human hair will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface covered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, and which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tendency, the hair is destroyed thereby. Thus it will be observed that those persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in life, which is merely caused by the acid caustic nature of the perspiration settling on the hair and being absorbed, which entirely destroys it; but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will prevent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury, and if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely removes the scurf, without the assistance of the dandruff combs, an operation so distressing to the heads of children.

Price 3s. 6d., 6s. 6d., and in pint bottles, with glass stoppers, 12s. each.

N.B.—HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL is particularly recommended to the notice of Merchants and Shippers Trading in the East and West Indies, being the only article for the hair that will survive a voyage to the East without turning rancid.

SARSAPARILLA.

"Great praise is due to Mr Hillyard for his very clever and much needed preparation of Sarsaparilla. His mode of preparing it preserves the necessary active qualities, which, according to the old mode, were allowed to evaporate, thus rendering it one of the most sure, as well as simple, remedies for purifying the blood."—United Service Gazette.

"In justice to one of the many preparers of Sarsaparilla, we must give the meed of praise to Hillyard's condensed preparation, knowing some friends of ours who have received much benefit from its use."—Fraser's Literary Chronicle.

Prepared only by Hillyard, chemist, 30, Oxford-street, five doors from Berners-street, and sold by him wholesale and retail; and retail by the following Agents—Prout, Strand; Willoughby, 61, Bishopsgate Without. RELIEF FROM PAIN.
IMPORTANT DISCOVERY IN MEDICINE.

LEFAY'S GRAND POMMADE.—This

extraordinary Preparation cures, by two or three external applications, the Most Excruciating, Gout, Rheumatism, Lumbago, and Sciatica, and all painful Affections of the Nerves, giving instantaneous relief in the most severe paroxysms. It has been extensively employed in the public and private practice of several French physicians, who have declared that in no case have they found it to fail in curing those formidable and tormenting maladies. Since its introduction into England, it has in every case fully maintained the high character its unrivalled success has obtained for it on the Continent. Patients, who had for years drawn on a miserable existence, and many who had lost the use of their limbs by rheumatism and paralysis, have, by a few applications, been restored to health, strength, and comfort, after electricity, galvanism, blistering, veratrina, morphia, colchicum, and all the usual remedies had been found useless. Its astonishing and almost miraculous effects have also been experienced in the cure of nervous and rheumatic pains of the head and face, paralytic affections, contracted and stiff joints, glandular swellings, pains of the chest and bones, chronic rheumatism, palpitation of the heart, difficult respiration, &c. It requires no restraint from business or pleasure. It does not cause any eruption, and may be applied to the most beautiful skin without fear of injury.

Sold, by the appointment of Jean Lefay, the Inventor, by his sole Agent, Stirling, Chemist, No. 86, High-street, Whitechapel, who will answer any inquiries (if by letter, post paid) respecting it, and also show letters received from numerous patients who have benefitted by its application. It can be sent to any part of the world, upon enclosing a remittance, and any part of London carriage free. Sold in Pots at 4s. 6d. each.

NOTICE.—As there is a spurious imitation, it is requisite to see that the name "J. W. Stirling," is engraved on the Government Stamp, outside the wrapper, without which security it cannot be genuine.

"I have made trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba. From William Henton, Esq., No. 8, Furnival's Inn, Holborn late House Surgeon to the Free Hospital, Oreville street, Hatton Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I know of; the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. This skilful construction combines security and ease with the most efficient power for every requisite of mastication and articulation, also adding support to any loose teeth; neither wires nor springs are used. This plan claims attention and has already secured the recommendation of the most eminent physicians and surgeons, to whom reference may be made. The Anodyne Cement, known only to Mr. A. JONES, preserves for many years tender and decayed teeth, allaying the pain and restoring their use.—64, Lower Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square. At home from 11 until 5. Mr. Jones is totally unconnected with any other Dentist in London.

LONDON and PORTSMOUTH RAILWAY DIRECT, with a Branch to CHICHESTER and BOGNOR, proposed to terminate in capacious DOCKS at PORTSMOUTH.

CAPITAL—1,200,000*l.*, in 24,000 Shares of 50*l.* each.—Deposit, 2*l.* per Share.

The Provisional Committee are proceeding with the necessary arrangements connected with the Branch advertised to Chichester, and an active survey of the line is being prosecuted for carrying into effect the original intention of this Company for constructing the intended Railway between LONDON and PORTSMOUTH by the most DIRECT and practicable line, as they have throughout acted under the conviction that any other, or more circuitous line must only entail on the passengers and transit of goods between those places additional cost of conveyance in proportion to the extra length adopted, without any corresponding benefit being derived. The Reports from the Surveyors on this line continue to be of the most favourable character, and it is well ascertained that neither Tunnel nor any formidable excavations will be necessary, and that the DIRECT line, via Guildford, Godalming, &c., will, to the great advantage of the Shareholders and the Public, be most easily practicable.

The promoters of, and the Provisional Committee of Management of this undertaking, abstain from fully publishing the measure until the results of the surveys will enable them to lay the exact route of the main line itself, and of the respective branches in detail before the public, so that efficient means of investigation may be afforded, which can alone secure public support and the sanction of the legislature.

Any information required, may be obtained at the Offices of the Company, No. 7, John-street, Adelphi, where applications for Shares will be received (if by letter, post paid), and also of the Company's Agent at Portsmouth J. N. Robinson, Esq.; or at Portsea, of Archibald Law, Esq., Solicitor.

J. MILLER, Secretary.

PROSPECTUS OF THE DEPOSIT & LOAN BANK COMPANY.—CAPITAL, £500,000,

With power to increase the same, if necessary.

In 100,000 Shares of 5*l.* each. Deposit, 1*l.* per Share. The remaining 4*l.* to be paid in two instalments, namely, 2*l.* per share on each call, of which two months' notice shall be given.

Office, pro tem., No. 39, Essex Street, Strand.

Secretary, Mr. W. MONTAGUE.

THE object of this Company is to afford the means of immediate pecuniary assistance to every one (of whatever station in life) who will deposit satisfactory security, in goods or otherwise, for the repayment of the Sums advanced, with equitable remuneration for the same, during such period as the loan may be required.

The extensive business transacted by those already engaged in lending money on deposits, and their immense profits, are of themselves sufficient reasons for the establishment of a Deposit and Loan Bank; but pecuniary facilities, such as this Company will be enabled to afford to every class of Society, by means of their large Capital and resources, are not at present attainable through the ordinary channels of deposit and loan.

It is intended that the laws, enacted for the regulation of those persons who are already occupied in similar pursuits, shall be scrupulously observed by this Company.

The abrogation or partial repeal of the Usury Laws involves the principle that "those who lend money are entitled to a reasonable remuneration;" and the Company will avail itself of the advantages to be derived by a fair, just, and honourable observance of this principle.

The business of the Deposit and Loan Bank will be divided into several departments, all of them to be conducted on such a liberal scale, as will be considered will the accommodation of the public generally, and the protection of the interests of the Shareholders.

Among the advantages to the Shareholders, it is intended that every one holding five or more Shares may make deposits of money at any time with the Company (agreeably to a scale hereafter to be determined), for which he shall be entitled to, and shall receive as interest thereon, 5*l.* per cent. per annum. And such Shareholders (holding two or more shares) who require pecuniary accommodation, shall always be entitled thereto, and shall not be called upon for a higher rate of interest than 7½ per cent. per annum, upon any loans they may obtain by the deposit of their goods, &c., as security.

Arrangements are making to extend to the Provinces the benefits offered by this Company, Branches of which will be established in most of the principal Towns throughout the Empire.

Applications for Shares to be addressed (post paid) to the Secretary.

A second Prospectus will be ready for delivery in a few days.

W. MONTAGUE, Secretary.

PORTSMOUTH, JUNE 24th.—(From our own Correspondent—The Royal Tar steamer came up from St. Sebastian in 67 hours on Saturday afternoon. Colonels Baron de Rottenburg and M'Cabe; Lieuts. Inman and Tottenham; Surgeons Florence and Greenwood were passengers, together with six men that had formed part of the band of a regiment, had been made prisoners, and would have been shot if great exertions had not been used to obtain their release on the ground of their being non-combatants. The passengers confirm the report of Capt. Garniston and Dr. Laughry of the Marine Battalion being wounded—the latter severely. The Royal Tar went to London the same night. There has been no naval movement at this port during the week, except the arrival of the Seaflower, with 30 volunteer seamen for the squadron, and her departure again for the eastward.

The President was paid off on Monday, and upwards of half of her men were entered next day on the books of the Madagascar, and allowed a month's leave. She has been begun to rig in the basin. The Madagascar is to take out as supernumeraries Lieuts. Baskerville and Harvey, and six boatswains and gunners for the West India squadron. The Inconstant has been cuppered, undocked, and hauled under the sheers in the basin. Her masts will be in by Monday noon, and it is fully expected that Capt. Hayes will commission her on Wednesday. Lieut. Sackst Hope, late of the Beacon, is to be First Lieutenant. The Asia, 84, has orders to proceed to Plymouth, and will go thither so soon as the weather moderates. The Buffalo will hend sails on Monday, and proceed on her voyage on the 10th July. Ships in Port—Vanguard, Asia, Bellerophon, Pembroke at Spithead, Britannia, Madagascar, Buffalo, Beacon (in dock), Emerald, Crackey, Maitland, and Katherine Stewart Forbes, transports, in harbour.

The Charybdis, Lieut. S. Mercer, Commender, arrived at Sierra Leone on the 2d April last, in company with the Spanish brig Elmismo, captured at Ambriz on the 2d March, with part cargo. The Charybdis had also captured on the 5th February, off St. Thomas' the Spanish schooner Matilda, with her entire outward bound cargo, invoiced at 15,000 dollars, and the Spanish brig Trident, in Loango Bay, on the 14th February, with a full cargo, invoiced at 30,000 dollars. These vessels were taken under the new treaty in consequence of being fitted for the slave trade. The Ligera, Spanish schooner, in endeavouring to escape, was chased on shore by the Charybdis, at Ambriz, on the 27th February; she was immediately abandoned by the crew, and shortly afterwards bilged.

An American Ship of the Line.—A Journal of the United States gives the following details of the ship Pennsylvania, which is one of the most astonishing constructions that ever floated on the ocean. It is 225 English feet in length and 58 in width, and is large enough to contain 2,000 men a number superior to the whole of the American army which gained the battle of Chippewaw, and more than the population of a large town of a county of that name. It measures 30,000 tons, and when laden with flour will contain a sufficient quantity to supply bread to 15,000 persons for a whole year. It carries 140 guns, and draws 28 feet of water. One of its anchors weighs 11,669 pounds, and the pumps are of iron, and contain from 100 to 200 gallons.—Herald. [As if to put to shame the dimensions of European Navies, the proportions of this Leviathan, a little varied, are published once or twice a-year in the United States, and generally copied into the English newspapers. Sometimes the paragraph relates to her immense capacity, and more frequently it is contrasted with the dimensions of French or English first-rates, to display her immense superiority. Our readers will be surprised to learn (if an American story can surprise them) that "this most astonishing construction that ever floated on the ocean" has never floated at all, neither is she likely to float; for having been upwards of twenty years on the stocks, and originally constructed in a hurry, of unseasoned timber, she is supposed to be quite rotten. Our transatlantic rivals have too much good sense to increase their Navy with ships of the unwieldy class and indifferent proportions, when a great draught of water would render them objectionable for passing the bars of their harbours, in a country, moreover, where there is no flow of tide to render docks available.—Ed.]

The Greenwich school vacation took place on Saturday last, and will expire on the 6th August.

Royal Marines, Woolwich.—On Saturday last two privates were stopped by the horse patrol on Shooter's Hill road, about half past nine o'clock, and were conducted by him, as they could not produce any pass, to Major Wright, K. H., a Major of the division, who resides near the spot, and he directed the usual course to be pursued, when they were lodged in the Charlton cage, the next morning taken before a magistrate, who ordered them to be given up to the division. It is supposed they intended to desert, as one of them had sold the shoes off his feet.

On Friday se'nnight, the wind blowing fresh, Charles Rushton, a lad of 17 years of age, jumped from the lower deck of the Bellerophon into the water, to save a man who was exhausted and drifting past the ship, at Spithead; he had fallen overboard from the Vanguard, full a mile distance. His gallant conduct met its best reward: he saved his fellow creature's life.

On the Lacne, 18, Comm. Sidney Smith, being paid off into ordinary, Charles Charleston, Quarter-master of that sloop, received a medal, and a gratuity of 15*l*, for long services and good conduct.

On Monday evening Col. Sir John Savage, accompanied by Capt. W. Burton, as his assistant, arrived at Portsmouth to make his half-yearly inspection of the division of Royal Marines in that garrison, hitherto performed by Major-Gen. Sir James Cockburn, when the bells struck up a merry peal in honour of the gallant Colonel's arrival. In consequence of the few men remaining in quarters owing to the several draughts on the division for the North Coast of Spain, and the line of battle ships, the inspection took place in the barrack-yard on Monday and Tuesday, when the soldier-like appearance of the men, as well as the perfect arrangement in the respective offices, called forth the Inspecting Colonel's unqualified approbation. On Tuesday, at one o'clock, the inspection of the Royal Marine Artillery, under the command of Capt. Menzies, at Fort Cumberland, took place, when that branch of the corps proved that they maintained their hitherto efficient practice both in firing shot and shell; and on Wednesday he inspected the laboratory at Southsea Common, under the direction of that talented officer Ca Stevens, of the RI, Marine Art., which was most high approved of. On Thursday Sir John Savage departed the inspection of the Plymouth Division.

Woolwich Dock-Yard, June 24th.—The Confian st.-v., Lieut. Waugh, was paid off on Friday and has been taken into dock, in place of the Alban st., which was hauled out into the river, and Lieut. Tinli hoisted his pendant on board her on Thursday. Lie Shoubler, of Lightning, hoisted a pendant on board Pluto st.-v., which had been taken out of the basin Tuesday; but orders have since been sent down that Lie Sayer will take her out to Spain, and carry Command M'Dougall passenger, who will assume the command the Salamander, and Lieut. Duffill will turn over to Pluto (his old ship), as Lieut. Sayer is to be first of Salamander. Pluto sails, it is expected, on Monday, will take out her long eighteen astern, and ship a thirty-pounder. Athol (28) troop-ship, Com. Karley, will next week, as she has taken her stores in, and, it is said, take a company of Artillery. Ships in Commission Port—William and Mary yacht, Firebrand, Alban, Pluto, st.-vs., and Athol troop-ship. In Dock—Con auer. In the Basin—Blazer, Messenger, and Lightni st.-vs., and Diligence tr.

By the Ranger packet, we have accounts from Rio 17th April, Bahia 30th April, and Pernambuco 7th M The South American squadron was all well. The Dub (with the flag of Sir G. Hamond), the Harrier and Rep were at Rio; the Harrier was to sail on 20th April, w Mr. Mandeville, the Minister Plenipotentiary at Buen Ayres, and suite, who went out in the Ranger. The Ran was to proceed to England immediately on the arrival the Rover, expected daily with freight from the Pacif The Blonde, Talbot, North Star, Basilisk, and Sparro hawk, were in the Pacific; the Cleopatre was at Northern Ports; the Actæon at Buenos Ayres; the Hor and Spider packets were employed in conveying the ma to and from Buenos Ayres.

Plymouth, 24th June.—The Drake lighter is loadi with stores, also with rigging, for the Inconstant, at Por mouth. Humouze lighter arrived on Thursday, and Tortoise on Saturday, from Falmouth, after weighing, a mooring, and relaying the moorings in Carrick roads the Packets, and the Astrea. Swale lighter has arri from Falmouth, with unserviceable stores returned fr Packets. Flamer st. arrived from the Mediterranean Tuesday, she brings no news. Minden 74, was paid advance wages yesterday. We hear that she is to get und weigh the moment the Asia appears in sight. Arethu will sail in a few days for Liverpool. Levinia next week for the same place. Mulgrave is fitted w jury-rigged gear for conveyance to Pembroke. The Gibraltar will be broken up at Pembroke. In the Ha bour—Royal Adelaide, Imogene, and Magpie. In Sound—Cornwallis and Minden.

An official question has been put to the men of the ord naries and yard craft (they being about to be put in co mission) to know if they are willing to serve under su circumstances, and be eligible for active service whenev required; those who decline will receive their discharg The above commissioning of the ordinary, &c., will speedi take place.

The Duke of Buccleugh's splendid yacht, Flower Yarrow, off Deptford Dock-yard, has been visited by t highest ranks this week, and is reported to afford high g tification.

The most rapid naval promotion in the British navy is the Hon. John Rodney, fourth child and third son of t first Lord Rodney, made a Lieut. 10th Sept., 1788; Co mander and Post Captain 14th October, 1780; and have every reason to believe he was made a Lieutenant i mediately on completing his six years.

The Bengal Merchant and the Henry Porcher are fitting, with the Earl Grey, at Deptford, for convict s barkation.

The fitting of the Prince Regent yacht, at Deptford, the Imaum of Muscat, proceeds rapidly. The old furnit is to be partly returned, and part will be used on the p sage out; the new laid by till her arrival. This splen did vessel will be gilt almost immediately, and be high worthy of observation when completed. She will proceed her destination in August next.

The complement of the Hercules being now complete she has been ordered to proceed to Spithead, to join squadron there assembled; and directions have been re ceived at the rendezvous, on Tower Hill and Ratcliff Highway, not to enter more seamen for the Asia or Va guard, the crews of these ships being also completed.

Capt. Festing, of the Cornwallis, has been compelle from ill health, to relinquish the command of this ship. See Appointments.

Mr. Wm. M'Auley, Assistant-Surgeon of the Linn upon whom we announced a Court-Martial to have be sitting, in our last, upon a charge of drunkenness, havi admitted the charge, has been sentenced to be dismiss the brig. This lenient sentence has been occasioned, consequence of some extenuating circumstances brou under the consideration of the Court.

The Students of the Royal Naval College were officially inspected on Tuesday last, by Admiral Sir P. Durham and Rear-Admiral Sir F. Maitland, previous to the Midsummer vacation; they awarded the first Mathematical Medal to Mr. Jas. Alex. Dunbar, a son of the late Capt. Sir James Dunbar, Bart., R. N.; and the second Medal to Mr. Alex. G. Wast, a son of Vice-Admiral West.

Mr. Daan, the Driver, has been at work near the Royal George wreck, and this week brought up a metal 24-pounder gun, with the following inscription on it:—"Henricus VIII. Anglie Francie et Hibernie Rex. Fides Defensor Invictissimus E.F. M.D. XXXXII. HR. VIII. Arcanus se Arcanis Cesenen feeit." It is lodged at the Gun-wharf.

The Agnes sch., which was run down and sunk at her anchors about two months ago, near the buoy of No Man's Land, Spithead, was weighed on Tuesday, and towed into Portsmouth Harbour. The Government granted the owners some lumps, a lighter, and the aid of some men-of-war's men; the latter, of course, being remunerated.

The Volcano steamer will be launched from Portsmouth Dock-yard on Thursday next.

CAVALRY.

Royal Horse Guards, Blue.—After the review on Saturday, the inhabitants of Kensington were agreeably surprised at the gates of Holland-park being thrown open for the reception of this regiment, on their return to Windsor—Lord Holland, on being applied to, having kindly given his assent to Colonel Hill—where, by the judicious arrangements of Quarter-Master Turner, each soldier received a bottle of porter, with bread and cheese, supplied by the worthy host of the Holland Arms; after which they proceeded, highly gratified with their entertainment.

17th Drags.—A misunderstanding occurred at a ball last January, given at Meerut, which led to a meeting between Lieut. F— of this corps, and Dr. B. of the 26th, but the affair terminated without injury to either party.

22d—depot has arrived at Galway.

38th—has marched to Canterbury. Ens. Boce is gone on leave. The senior commanding officer, Lieut.-Colonel Torreas, remains on the Staff as Adj.-Gen. in India.

40th—Van Diemen's Land.—Capt. Sergeantson, late of this reg., was barbarously murdered, near Campbell-town, on 30th November, 1835. The body was found in a bush on a by-road leading from Haurith to Wanstead; the head was bruised as if from a club, and a gunshot entered the breast. Such was the surprise and horror of the inhabitants, that a large reward was immediately offered by the inhabitants of Hobart-town, in addition to the sum offered by Government, for the discovery of the murderer. Captain S. was a very distinguished Officer; he signalised himself in the Peninsular war, and served in the 28th reg. at Waterloo. He was on the point of returning to England with his family.—Hobart-town Courier.

47th depot—3 cos. and hd.-qrs. moved from Buttevant to Cork on 22d and 23d.

49th—Ens. Rowco is dismissed the Army by sentence of General Court-Martial, at Dinapore, for intoxication at Mass, being then officer of the day on duty.

51st—The serjeants entertained to dinner at Belfast on Saturday the serjeants of the Scots Greys, to celebrate the anniversary of Waterloo. Both corps fired a feu-de-joie early in the day, and the barracks were illuminated in the evening.

61st—are at Trincomalee, and rather sickly. Major Cherleton was to succeed Major Darrah of 97th, as Commandant at Galle. Col. Darley is Commandant of Trincomalee.

67th—Three cos. and head-quarters moved from Kinsale to Cork on 22d.

72d—A detachment 6 r. and f. arrived in Dublin from Cork, and proceeded to Omagh on 19th. Maj. Maclean has been placed in arrest by Col. Smith, Dep. Quarter-Mast.-Gen., commanding the new Province, for some correspondence between him and a Capt. Stretch of the Provisionals; it is not known whether a court-martial will be the result, but he had been a fortnight in arrest, and the case was gone down to Gen. Sir D'Urban, the Governor. There is a Court of Inquiry ordered to assemble at Fort Beaufort, and Maj. Maclean's case will be laid before it.

77th—Capt. Raines having made his defence to the charges preferred by Cap. Clerke, at the court-martial in Mullingar—Major-Gen. Macdonell, President—next day Capt. Clerke summed up in reply, when the proceedings closed, and the finding of the Court was transmitted to the Horse-Guards.

78th depot—Capt. Lindsay, 1 serj., and 33 r. and f. lately under orders to join service cos., but countermanded, arrived by st.-v. at Dublin from Cork, and proceeded for Armagh on 19th. This reg. has relieved 97th at Kandy, and Major Douglas is appointed Commandant of that place.

84th depot—Maj. MacBean has returned from the service cos. at Jamaica, and will shortly take the command of the depot.

85th—The Stukesley tr. arrived at Cork harbour on the 18th inst., and the 1st div. of this reg. (not hd.-qrs.) embarked on board that vessel on the 21st instant for Halifax. Maj. Jackson has assumed the command.

Royal Artillery—Hd.-Qrs. During the howitzer practice, such has been the admirable precision that the flag-staff has been three times cut down, and it is singular to remark, that it has been effected by the same gun, but by different individuals. Private Lyons of Maj. Walker's co., 9th batt., was placed in confinement for breach of discipline, when he subsequently destroyed his necessaries, and then shot himself through the head; an inquest was held on Monday last, when the verdict temporary insanity was returned, and he was buried on Tuesday last, with military honours. This rash act is attributed to the effect on his mind, of his being the only defaulter not liberated, on the occasion of the Prince of Orange's last visit to this Garrison. A General Court-Martial has been held on a Gunner of the F. B., for assaulting a bombardier, in the execution of his duty, while separating him from fighting another soldier, when this man drew his sabre, and inflicted a serious wound on the bombardier; the sentence is not yet known. The Minutes of a Gen. Court-Martial were read on Parade, last Tuesday, on Private Robertson, of the 6th batt., at Edinburgh, for drunkenness, and striking an officer, and knocking down a non-com. officer of the 74th regt., for which he has been sentenced to 14 years' transportation. The half-yearly Inspection by the Master-Gen. will take place on Monday next. Several artillery men, most of whom served at Waterloo, have been pronounced by medical inspection unfit for further service; and will pass the next Board for their discharge. On Thursday last, the Landgravine of Hesse Homburg honoured the Garrison with his presence. He arrived about 11 o'clock, and was received with a royal salute, the Standard of England was immediately hoisted at the Mortar battery. The royal visiter proceeded to the Marshes, where the Rocket Troop exhibited their skill, and fired several rockets within two or three yards of the target, and once sent a rocket through the bull's eye. The Arsenal was also inspected, and the Mortar battery was put in requisition; in the course of the second round, the staff set up as the mark, was cut in two, which closed the practice, and the Common became next the scene of attraction. Three troops of Horse Artillery, and three brigades of the Field Batteries, the former under the immediate command of Col. Williams, and the latter of Col. Cleaveland, received the Landgravine, attended by the Master General and the whole of the Staff of the Artillery, with a general salute, when the manœuvres commenced, the usual formula was adhered to, and the batteries performed their part in brilliant style; but though the Horse Brigade executed their movements with beautiful precision, after the order to "dismount the gun and limbers," it was some time before two of the guns got into action, which is the more remarkable, from the usual expert displays, but the rest of the spectacle was highly interesting. His Serene Highness and suite subsequently sojourned to the Artillery mess-room, where he partook of those elegant refreshments usually provided, and departed highly gratified with the anxious endeavours to convince him of British excellence in this proud arm of England's defence. Lieut.-Col. D. Campbell, 1st Batt. is placed upon the retired list, and Maj. Bridge, 3d Batt. has got his rank.

Militia.—The Officers of the Royal West Middlesex Militia, have announced a dinner to be given by them to Col. Sir John Gibbons, on the 27th inst.

The controversy between the Members of the United University Club, on the question whether a smoking-room should be attached to their grand club-house, now building near St. James's Palace, Pall-mall, was decided on Thursday, after having undergone a previous discussion some days ago. The elders of the institution expressed themselves decidedly against the custom of smoking, while the junior advocates for cigars and fuming defended the practice with great zeal and animation; and on a division the anti-smokers were left in a minority.—Evening Paper.

Major-General Lord Fitzroy Somerset, as Military Secretary to General Lord Hill, held a Levee on Tuesday, at the Horse Guards, which was attended by several distinguished officers.

The Prince of Orange with his two Sons, accompanied by the Master-General and a brilliant cortege, on the 17th inst. visited the Woolwich Academy of the Gentlemen Cadets, and was present at the examination of the young aspirants for Military renown. They were in line on the Parade to receive His Royal Highness, and, on his appearance, they presented arms, the band of the Royal Artillery playing "God save the King." The Prince took up his position at the Camp colour, when the Cadets marched past in slow time, and evinced a military precision in their movements, which would have done honour to "older heads" than theirs. His Rl. Highness then proceeded, attended by Sir Hussey Vivian, and the Staff of the Garrison, to the Cadets' College, where they were received by the Lieut.-Governor, Colonel Gravatt, and the Officers of this important establishment, when the examination of the young gentlemen took place, which was conducted by Col. A. Dickson, D. A. G. The proceedings excited considerable interest, from the marked attention evinced by the Prince to every minutia of the examination, and elicited many flattering, though just, encomiums. H. R. Highness in the evening, with the whole of his Staff, dined with the Royal Artillery, on which occasion, the splendid plate of this distinguished Corps, including the magnificent present of His Majesty, was exhibited. There were present to meet his Royal Highness, the Marquess of Anglesea, Lord Hill, General Lord Strafford, Lord Fitzroy Somerset, Lord Edward Somerset, the Duke of Beaufort, Sir H. Hardinge, Sir J. Kemp, Sir W. Clinton, Sir J. Elley, Sir S. Warren, R.N., Sir W. Gordon, Sir F. Mulena, Sir J. Macdonald, Sir E. Dishrowe, Sir J. Smith, Sir J. Maclean, Master-Gen. of the Ordnance; Generals Miller and Salmon; Colonels Sir A. Dickson, Sir R. Gardiner, J. May, Drummond, Anson, Munro, M'Cleverty, Sir Leith Hay, &c. H. R. Highness and attendants quitted about nine o'clock, under a double royal salute, cheered by hundreds of spectators and "Soldiers" who had shared the dangers and glory of "Waterloo" with him.

Favourable accounts have recently been received from Major H. D. Campbell, Governor of Sierra Leone, who return to this country on leave is not at present expected.

Lieu.-Gen. Sir James Lyon is to succeed Maj.-Gen. Sir Edward Blakeney in the command of the Army in Ireland this summer, and Sir Edward will have a command in the Mediterranean, as Maj.-Gen. Ponsonby is coming home from Malta.

Maj.-Gen. Sir John Buchan, accompanied by his Aide-de-Camp, Lieut. Forbyre, 35th Regt., left Athlone on Tuesday week for England. The troops in the western district are to report to head-quarters, Dublin, through the Brigade-Major at Athlone, during Sir John Buchan's absence.

The 18th and 82nd are the next regiments for service, the 33rd and 35th follow in succession, all having returned home in 1832.

East India Intelligence.

On Wednesday a Quarterly General Court of Proprietors of East India Stock was held. The Chairman (Sir J. R. Carnac) laid before the proprietors a communication from the President of the Board of Control, announcing the intention of Government to assimilate the duties on East and West India sugars imported into this country. This communication gave general satisfaction. The Chairman stated, that the warrants for the payment of the half-year's dividend on the Company's stock would be ready for delivery on Wednesday, July 5. Sir C. Forbes animadverted on part of a speech in the House of Commons on Friday last, by Sir J. C. Hobhouse, in which, speaking of the decision of that court in the case of Captains Glasspoole, Newall, and Barnes, he expressed it as his opinion "that the Court of Proprietors, strictly speaking, had no right to discuss questions of that kind." Sir Charles maintained that the Court of Proprietors had a special right to decide on pecuniary claims of that description—a right which was recognised by several by-laws founded upon acts of parliament. A desultory conversation followed, which was terminated by Mr. Wigram, who pointed out the irregularity of the course taken by the hon. baronet in introducing this subject when there was really no question before the Court. On the question that the Court do adjourn, Mr. Mills adverted to Sir John Hobhouse's speech, and said, if the words had really been used by him he would be slow in acknowledging them; and he was sure, if not in that case the whole body of proprietors would come forward and assert their rights and independence, and they might rely on receiving the cordial support of the gentlemen at that (the directors') side of the Court. If the doctrine of the right hon. baronet were to be maintained, then the Courts of Directors and Proprietors were of no other use than to register the acts and decisions of the Board of Control. For his own part, if that were the case, he would rather give up his seat in the Court, and let the whole affairs of the Company be managed on the responsibility of Government. Mr. Weeding took a similar view of the subject. Mr. Wigram contended, that the doctrine of Sir J. Hobhouse

he did use the words, was utterly at variance with the law. Mr. Twining hoped that means would be resorted to for obtaining the opinion of Sir J. Hobhouse on the subject.

By Calcutta papers of Feb. 19, we learn that much damage had been done by frost in the neighbourhood of Meerut, and the snow was two feet deep at Mussoorie, with intense cold.

Orders have been received for the abolition of the Custom House at Ferruckabad, but the town duties are still to remain.

By a recent letter from the camp near Goomsur, it appears that Mr. Russell arrived there on the 11th Jan., and has been diligently employed ever since; but matters were at first somewhat suspended, as it was reported that the Rajah died early in the month. This is now considered a false report, and the Rajah is supposed to be concealed among the hills; but he and his friends will soon be stirred up, as the Louisa had arrived at Goomsur on the 4th Jan., bringing reinforcements and two six-pounders, which had been landed at Vizagapatam, and safe arrived in camp.

The General Orders of 18th Jan. contain a resolution of the Court of Directors, granting full teenage to the officers of the European regiment stationed at Ghazeepore, Dinapore, and Hazareebaug.

A meeting has been held in Calcutta, for the purpose of obtaining subscriptions for a bust of the late John Palmer, Esq.

COURT MARTIAL.

LIEUTENANT JOHN BECK,

At a General Court Martial assembled at Ahmedabad, on 7th September, 1835, Lieut. John Beck, 9th N. I., was tried on the following charge, viz., "For highly unsoldierlike and disgraceful conduct, in abandoning a party escorting himself and baggage, after the said party had been attacked on the march towards Ahmednuggur in Guzerat, and while it was engaged with a body of insurgents near the village of Huglore, on 7th May, 1835." On which charge the prisoner was found guilty, with the exception of the word "disgraceful," as the Court did not consider his conduct to have arisen from personal cowardice, and he was therefore dismissed the honourable Company's service; but under the peculiar circumstances of the case, strongly recommended the prisoner to the merciful consideration of the Commander-in-Chief. In consideration, however, of the recommendation of the Court, and of the high character which Lieut. Beck has hitherto borne as an Officer and a gentleman in his regiment and in the service, and taking into consideration the high principles of honour by which the Officers of the Bombay Army are actuated and guided, the Com.-in-Chief did not deem it necessary to make an example by carrying into execution the sentence awarded by the Court in this instance, and therefore extended a full pardon to Lieut. Beck, in the confident anticipation that his future career will be such as to reflect credit upon himself, and to occasion no regret at having this leniency extended towards him. Lieut. Beck was released from arrest and ordered to return to his duty.

THE DYING MIDSHIPMAN.

NAVARINO.

["Previous to the termination of the action one of our Midshipmen, a promising youth of fourteen, was struck by a cannon shot which carried off both his legs and his right hand with which the poor fellow had been grasping his cutlass at that moment. He lay in the gun-room as nothing could be done for him; and I was informed by one of the men that he repeatedly named his mother in a piteous tone, but soon after rallied and began to inquire eagerly how the action was going on, and if any more Turkish ships had struck. He lingered in great agony for about twenty minutes."—United Service Journal.]

"Oh! take me to my mother," cried the boy
As wounded on the deck he groaning lay,—
"Oh! take me to my mother!"
He knew that he was dying, and he wish'd
To breathe his last upon her gentle breast;
For thoughts of childhood beam'd upon his mind,
When sickness overcame him, and he lay
In weary suffering with his aching head
Pillow'd upon that heart which beat for him.
* * * * * * * *
He was the solace of her widow'd days,
The only tie which bound her to the world;
For husband, children—all but he, were gone,
And naught was left her save an only boy.
She watch'd him through his childhood's helpless state,—
She saw the buds of promise blossom forth
As reason dawn'd upon his infant mind,
And she was happy.
* * * * * * * *
Years pass'd—the child had grown into a boy,
And ardent hopes, and fond imaginings,
With eager longings for the untried world
Came o'er his thoughts. She felt that they must part;
And though to her it was a bitter pang,
Yet, putting all her trust in Providence,
She sent him forth that he might win a name
Which would be class'd with others of renown,—
The brave defenders of their country's rights.
And such was his fond hope upon that day
Of bloody fight on Navarino's shore.
Vain wish!—it was to be his first and last!
* * * * * * * *
He knew that he was dying—that his days
Were number'd—that for him the glorious sun
Would never shine again—he felt it hard
That he should leave so beautiful a world
And close his eyes on all that he held dear;
And then his mother!—who would now supply
His place in her affections? Who would tend
The growing wants of cheerless—helpless age,
Or smooth the rugged downhill of her life?
Do not then blame him if the struggling tears
Came coursing down his cheeks—if filial love
Would weep for her whose hopes were wreck'd in him.
* * * * * * * *
He felt that life was ebbing, and he ask'd
How fared the battle's strife? and when he heard
That British valour had achieved success—
All other feelings were absorb'd in joy,

THE STATE OF THE INDIAN ARMY.

But it would not be right to concur, in ascribing such increase wholly to this cause; for it has always been found in the Armies of India, as in those of every other Military Empire, ancient or modern, that in periods of peace, when Soldiers are long stationed in the same Garrison or Cantonment, without any active occupation or excitement for body or mind, beyond the performance of monotonous routine duties, greater inducement and facility to certain description of crimes are presented, and increased dissatisfaction evinced, with the restraint of strict subordination.* From my own experience, limited as it has been, I can state, that during our occupation of Rangoon, in the year 1824, under circumstances of the severe privations attending the commencement of the Burmese War, and the incessant calls for harrassing duties, through the most inclement season of the year, when men were daily carried to the grave, by sections from different Regiments, through diseases brought on by fatigue, and want of animal food, I recollect but one General Court-Martial having been assembled for the whole of that large force—European and Native; and this remark applies not only to the great portion of Madras Troops then in Burmah, but to the whole of the Coast Army; almost every Corps of which, in consequence of demands for that war, was more or less moved throughout the year 1824, when the number of General Courts-martial that were held in it, was, European 2, Native 6,—Total 8. On the contrary, in periods of peace, I never passed a year in any Garrison or Cantonment, however small its Force, without several such Courts being assembled, always in far greater numbers than was found necessary during the war for the whole body above referred to; and, from 1826, in the early part of which year, the Burmese War closed, to the year 1830, the latest period to which I possess the calculations, the number of General Courts-martial under the Presidency of Fort St. George, progressively increased as follows:—

| | In | European | Native | Total |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Number of General Courts-martial held annually in the Army of Fort St. George, from the year 1826 to 1830 . . . . . | 1826 | 11 | 13 | 24 |
| | 1827 | 20 | 17 | 37 |
| | 1828 | 25 | 17 | 42 |
| | 1829 | 21 | 22 | 43 |
| | 1830 | 24 | 27 | 51 |

giving a total, for the five years, of no less than one hundred and ninety-seven; which exceeded by about seventy the number held in the preceding five years.

I am aware, Sirs, that at Head-Quarters the following reasons were deemed sufficient to account for this great increase, without charging the Army with greater demoralization than at earlier periods, or impugning the discrimination and judicious exercise of power of its presiding Authorities;—First, that in the year 1824 the jurisdiction of Military Courts was extended to all criminal offences committed by Soldiers beyond the distance of one hundred and twenty miles from the Presidency:—And secondly, that in the year 1829 the power of Appeal to General Courts-martial was given in all cases in the Native Army.

But an impartial view of the case will shew that to neither of these causes, and much less to the latter, can be attributed this very increased employment of the powers of Military Law: for in fact, the Regulation of 1829 was not published until the end of May in that year; and consequently, its operation, even if ever considerable, could not within this time have become very extensive. Besides which, the privilege of appeal from the Minor Courts thereby granted to the Native Troops was limited to European General Courts; and it will be seen that the greater number of trials held by these in the period named, took place in the year previous to the Regulation, viz. in 1828. In addition to which it must be considered that this very great progressive increase, more than doubling in five years the number of General Courts-martial, occurred whilst the Army was subject to very extensive and continuous reductions in every arm, consequent upon the termination of the Burmese War: an opportunity naturally taken of relieving the Ranks as much as possible of bad characters.

It appears evident therefore that the evil originated in other sources: and it being universally admitted to be most desirable to arrest its progress, if only for the sake of relieving Officers of the irksome and incessant duties of Courts-martial, and of depriving Non-commissioned Officers and Privates of that familiarity with trial and punishment which the very frequent exercise of the power of Military Law has a tendency to produce; we have every inducement to search out the true cause of the apparent deterioration in morals and subordination, and to apply the requisite remedy.

I apprehend that among those who have had opportunity of observing the state and practice of Military Law in the Madras Presidency of late years, there are very few who will not concur with me in ascribing to two or three particular sources a large proportion of the evil referred to, viz.:—

stantly changed the Stations of their Legions; and when unoccupied in the Field, employed them in the construction of Military Works, or other undertakings of public utility. Such is the lesson which the experience of the the greatest Military Nation on earth suggests; and that it was not lost on the late Emperor of the French, is proved by the constant activity and exercise in which he also kept his Armies, whether in war or peace. But with this experience, how much at variance is our practice in the East; where Corps, the British Regiments especially, are kept for years in succession at the same Station, and scarcely ever exercised on that extended scale of movement which can alone prepare Troops for immediate Field Service. Witness the long continuance of His Majesty's 13th Regt. of Light Dragoons at Bangalore, without any active service, or extended field practice. On the trial of a Private, which in the year 1831, it became my duty as Prosecuting Judge Advocate, to prove no less than eighteen previous convictions, in trials he had undergone at that Station, between the years 1820 and 1831.

* Extracts from the Records of the Office of the Judge-Advocate-General of Fort St. George.

to the before-mentioned uninteresting nature of the duties in a period of prolonged peace and inactivity,—the diminished powers which in Corps, Garrisons, and even Divisions, are now allowed to Commanding-Officers in controlling their Troops,—and the increased disposition at Head-Quarters too rigidly to review and comment on the proceedings of Minor Courts-martial, and to augment the duties of the Judge-Advocate-General's Department by referring to trial by General Courts, matters which might otherwise be more promptly disposed of*.

Formerly, and also during the most recent hostilities, while Commanding Officers exercised greater power in advancing the meritorious, they did not hesitate also to administer punishment more summarily and arbitrarily than is now allowable; subject as they have thus been made to the very scrutinizing and jealous observation of Head-Quarter Authorities, in the absence of similar claims on their powers of direction and control. Hence it has followed that Commanding Officers rather than risk censure by exercising their power of effectually checking offenders in the commencement of a vicious career, or endure having their judicial conduct so minutely supervised and remarked upon by Divisional Deputies-Judge-Advocate, have become indifferent to that progress in crime on the part of such characters which must subject them to the jurisdiction of the higher tribunal, and expose them to the degradation of more public and severe punishment. And these are the causes, combined with the variations and imperfections of the existing very old Military Law of India, the anomalies of which have been greatly increased by the existence of three distinct Judge-Advocates-General neither of them of legal education, which have in public opinion tended principally to produce the increased frequency of our General Courts-martial, and the severity of the punishments awarded.

It is believed, Sirs, that for some length of time the Army of India has been pervaded by a darker gloom than ever has befallen it; resulting "from the extensive reductions, in both the European and Native Commissioned and Non-Commissioned ranks, which followed the close of the Burmese and Bhurtpore Wars,—the consequent extreme slowness of promotion,—the general diminution of the number of superior Commands and Staff-places,—and the reduced allowances of those remaining." The discontent arising from these sources, connected solely with the Indian Army, is, if we may credit statements lately published in Home Journals, now extending to the Royal troops serving in India; amongst whom a corresponding dissatisfaction has been excited by a partial enactment on the subject of punishment, and whose feelings, mental and physical, have thereby been brought into extremely invidious collision with the Native soldiery: a position of things that if not already productive of serious embarrassment to the Local Governments, may very naturally be expected to have that effect, should the superior wisdom and power of the Home Legislature fail to correct it. I allude to the abolition by law of Corporal punishment in the Native army, while both in law and practice the usage is retained for their British Comrades. (To be Concluded in our next.)

* "A General Order we have now before us, entitles His Excellency Sir Henry Fane to the greatest praise, and to the best thanks of the Army at large*. Who can have forgot the paltry Charges which some General Courts-martial lately held had to inquire into? From all points of the compass, and from all distances, from one hundred to five hundred miles, were Officers of the highest rank convened, to inquire into and pass sentence on some petty affairs which were worthy of a couple of old washerwomen to sit in judgment on! We say nothing of the enormous expense these General Courts-martials lead to,—that is paid by the Government, and on that point we need not distress ourselves†. But does not the frequency of such Courts on matters of such trivial importance, and absence of guilt, materially lessen the dignity of Courts martial in general, and 'diminish that awe,' as Sir Henry Fane properly expresses it, with which they ought to be contemplated by the Army at large? To be sure it does: and we appeal to the experience we have of late years had of these matters in this country, whether we are not borne out in the assertion.

"But there is a further and not less serious consequence which must follow this practice of convening General Courts-martial on trifling matters, and without sufficient grounds. It of necessity lessens that high respect for the convening Authority which it is essential for the interests of an Army should exist. When this link is broken, the power of that individual for any beneficial purpose to the Army ceases; and he becomes an object of contempt and hatred: from which moment, the interests of the Service require that he should withdraw from a situation which he has so unworthily filled."—Indian Journal, November 1836.

* His Excellency observes in this General Order, most truly:—"That the endless number of Courts-martial in India is a general topic amongst Military men in England, and is the subject of general condemnation among soldiers."

† The expense to Government attending the assembly of General Courts-martial in India, cannot be imagined by men who have not served there. It has been somewhere stated in print, that the total costs of two such Courts assembled in the Madras Presidency for the trials of two Officers, on Charges preferred by Head Quarter Authorities, on the advice of the present Judge-Advocate-General of that Army, of all and every part of which Charges both were most fully and most honorably acquitted, did not fall much short of, if they did not exceed, a Lack of rupees!

Literary Notices.

On Defending and Strengthening Out-posts. By Capt. Jebb, Royal Engineers. Egerton.

This truly valuable little work must prove essential to every officer entrusted with duties of so difficult a nature as those so ably treated of, if he will but follow its principles, and apply them to the circumstances that fall in his way. When in difficulties and dangers, he has only his own abilities to trust to, or, as the writer says, "To make the best of it." The merits alone of this publication will no doubt give it consideration and influence, but as pearls are small and not easily found, the talented author will, it is hoped, forgive our attempt at "showing him up," that those in search may, with the least loss of time, be gratified by the discovery. This little volume not only deserves all that can be said of it as a military work replete with instruction, but, from the humourous and easy style of diction, is truly amusing. In learning how to defend the upper story of a house, the strong hold below being taken by the enemy, one cannot help smiling at the effect described of hand-grenades thrown amongst the assailants below, which "would make it very lively work in the lower regions." The author adds, "but we must not feel too secure in these good quarters: the assailants may set fire to the house, or make arrangements for blowing it up, which, under most circumstances, it might be prudent to receive as a formal notice to quit." He reconciles himself to the ejectment by the orthodox opinion—"Le but de l'art defensive est de gagner du tems."

Again, one's good humour is brought into action by his playful description of the doughty men of yore, "fellows who, in the ordinary course of a morning's amusement, would give and take blows for half-an-hour, every one of which would have annihilated a rhinoceros." Badajos is an instance engraven on the recollections of Englishmen of the propriety of the maxim quoted, the splendid defence of which by a small garrison, caused many a brave pulse to cease to beat, "That time might not be lost."

At a moment when our Navy are at war with the Carlists of Spain, and our countrymen on shore are engaged in a warfare of, at least, a disagreeable nature, knowing that if they "do not kill the Carlists, the Carlists will kill them,"—the treatise on strengthening and defending outposts (that plainly shows how to make the most of every ditch, hedge, hurdle, rock, road, or hollow), in the hands of our side, would be odds against the enemy; and, where the ground is so peculiarly applicable to its tenets, and the examples shown so likely to happen in many parts of Spain, might save many a Briton from ignominious slaughter, and substitute sound repose for that description of attention (anything but pleasing) the Spanish peasant is so willing, and so well calculated, to offer. The author very justly says, "A man of energy and resource will do much more for himself than a man of rule." True, indeed, and such a one with these principles of defence so clearly defined, would be invincible, if, without any such knowledge, he could hold his own. The exposition in soft ground, of the facility of construction and importance of ditches, breast-works, trenches, pickets, &c., are not to be mistaken; on hard ground the filling system, where one cannot excavate, is equally clear, though more troublesome and requiring more materiel, as bags, basket work, &c. The abbatis any one can establish, after reading Captain Jebb; his plank defences, or mutual support, are plain enough, and valid enough. Clearing the space in front of works, and turning things to account that need not be cleared away; communications along the whole line; the vicinity of higher ground to be avoided; the force to be united as much as possible; no labour to be lost; taking advantage of natural hollows; the distribution of men to the tools they have been used to handle; rockets too (ye valuable terrifying devils, how ye hiss, hum, and burst; ye are hosts within yourselves); loop-holes to be above the reach of men from without (at Waterloo the French advanced to a loop-holed wall, and fired at the defenders), and his advice to complete a little first. "There is more wisdom in doing a little well than in attempting too much," is all so entirely of a piece, of such wholesome conception, and such beautiful arrangement, as to render this advice to the young officer well worth having, if the 'carrying out' his orders, the attainment of distinction, the preservation of himself, and the men under his command, the doing his duty with zeal and fidelity, are yet to be objects nearest to an honourable mind and humane heart. We might proceed to speak of the author's description of stockade work, defence of copses, that obstructions of any sort "derange the order of soldiers," and add security to the party attacked; trap holes (in which a man falling should suppose himself killed); his description of barricading with "whatever comes to hand;" defence of outbuildings, villages, bridges; the division and application of the means to different portions of the work; and memo., that "the officer is not ubiquitous" (or as certain Commanding Officers are supposed to be, Subalterns, Serjeants, Corporals, Captains, being made to stand still, and see how their duty is done); all bespeak the deep consideration he has given his subject, and that he has become so far completely its master as to have done his work well, and therefore right easily.

Recollections of an Artillery Officer: including Scenes and Adventures in Ireland, America, Flanders, and France. By Benson Earle Hill. 2 vols. Richard Bentley.

A LIVELY, witty, versatile book, full of anecdote, fun, fighting, and adventure, such as no other life but a soldier's could furnish. Mr. Hill is a hustling, gallant fellow, gifted no less with humour than with the spirit of enterprise, and the combination of these two qualities induces him to seek "even at the cannon's mouth," not only "the bubble reputation," but that other bubble, a good jest. Nothing seems to damp either his military ardour, or his affection for a ludicrous scene, or a sparkling bon-mot. What cares he for the dangers of a hot skirmish? According to the old song

"A bottle, and kind landlady, Cures all his pain."

As the variety of the present "Recollections," constitutes their great charm, so it almost precludes the possibility of regular analysis. We shall content ourselves, therefore, with an acknowledgment of the pleasure we have derived from the work, and with giving an extract or two from its pages.

A Kentuckian Soldier.—"Returning from the river side, I perceived a tall figure approaching me, whose appearance I think worthy of description. He was a young man, of about two or three-and-twenty, good looking, but pale from a recent wound, indicated by his arm being tied up in a pocket-handkerchief, somewhat the worse for use; his hair was dark, and long enough to reach his shoulders; he wore a high conically-shaped hat, which, from its napless state, had, perhaps, been handed down in his family from the days of the arch-hypocrite Oliver, and worn now as an appropriate covering, for one who would have been, 'when that old hat was new,' a fitting representative in the Rump parliament. His dress consisted of a coarse reddish-brown cloth coat, with huge metal buttons, a waistcoat of deer-skin, and trowsers of thick dreadnought. This singular biped came up to me, with a strange shambling gait; and, after clearing his mouth of a quid, followed by two or three copious expectorations, he with a strong nasal twang thus addressed me:—'I say, you Britisher, I calculate you're a doctor?'—'No, I am not; but, if you want a surgeon,' I replied, 'I will show you the way to the hospital.'—'Want a surgeon! I guess I do most tarnation bad. I require to have my arm cut off, for it's beginning to stink, I calculate, and that's what I do not mean to submit to on no account.'—'My good fellow, I hope there will be no occasion for such a violent measure as amputation; where were you hit?'—'Why in the wood just here away, at the back of this God damned plantation.'—'I mean, where is your wound?'—'Slick right through my elbow joint, I guess; and ever since I got the knock, which was the night your folks first showed, my arm has been so everlasting stiff, I calculate I shall never more use axe or rifle with it.'—'Come, come, don't be afraid of...'—'Afeard! who the hell ever knew me to be afeard of man or beast? No, no, young stranger, tayn't our way in the woods. I was reared in old Kentuck, and afore I was ten years grown, I've stood to have a tin mug knocked to immortal smash off my head by a rifle ball, just to show there was no want of pluck in Ebeneezer Bruce, and I do make so bold as to say, they found that out t'other night, when your 'tarnal creatures mowed us down pretty considerable thick.' I couldn't help thinking, when I found myself wounded and taken prisoner, what hell fire luck my brother Bob had in stopping at home, although he was appointed ensign to our company of Rifles only the last time we mustered, I guess.'—'What prevented his joining, at a time he was so much required?'—'Oh, I calculate he was sparking, and wouldn't leave his gal, no how.'—'Well, Mr. Bruce, as I understand that is your name—'—'Bruce is my name, I guess, and father's before me, which you may think strange, but I don't.'—''Tis a very ancient and noble name; doubtless you can trace your descent from the great Robert Bruce, King of Scotland.'—'There you make a most damnation misapprension; if I thought father had a drop of king's blood in his veins, I'd cut his heart out; no, no, he comes of honest folk, grandfather and grandfather's father were weavers in Glasgow, North Britain, I guess: why, bless your eyes! father only left the old country five years before I was pigged, as mother calls it, 'cause she had two on us in the same litter.'"

Hostess of the Hotel Royal, and the Mysterious Unknown.—The fair hostess of the Hotel Royal had, on one or two occasions, been remarkably civil to me, in accommodating friends passing through the town, and other delicate attentions; and as, during Sir Alexander's absence, I was obliged to live en garçon, I thought I might as well dine at the table d'hote of my sprightly friend, and called to ask if she could make room for me.—"Mon Dieu!"

he exclaimed; "I'm glad you mean to dine with me to-day; because you will have an opportunity of seeing e very extraordinary person. He has just arrived, and asked at what hour the dinner was usually served; to say truth, I expected he would have ordered refreshments in his own room; but he is alone, and, I suppose, prefers dining in company."—"Who is this person, madame?"—"Ah, ah! that is my secret. I shall not tell you who he is, till he is gone; but contrive to sit near him, for he is one of the greatest men of the day."—"Is it Count Du Val?"—"Du Val! diable, non! Girouette and bête as he is, I would not sit down with him. The gentleman I mean is a man of honour and principle; not one who cries Vive l'Empereur and Vive le Roi in the same breath: but say you will come; 'tis but half an hour to the time."—"If so, why need I go, madame?"—"As you please; we shall find something to talk about, or amuse us till then, doubtless."—Time fled.—"Madame, le diner est servi." announced the garçon.

Offering my arm, I led the lady to the head of the table, and then looked about for the stranger: travellers by the Diligence filled almost every chair; one was vacant, opposite to a stout, middle-aged man, with ruddy complexion, coarse features, and the appearance of a farmer or carcase butcher. Madame, without calling this guest by name, paid him the most civil attentions; he ate rapidly, and drank his wine like a man accustomed to it. He presently asked me to assist him to something near me, and this led us into conversation; but, instead of "What a fine day it has been!" or "Do you think we shall have rain before night?" which is constantly the commencement of acquaintance in England, the stranger said:—"You belong to the English Artillery, I perceive—have you many of that force here?"—"Not at present, sir; it is the headquarters of a particular portion, but our men are much scattered."—"Have you served? what is your rank?"—"I have served a little; I am a lieutenant."—"Were you in Spain?"—"No; my first service was in America."—"In the Canadas?"—"No: in Louisiana."—"Hah! you were defeated there," and his eyes flashed as he spoke. I bowed in acknowledgment. "Who commands your force there?"—"Colonel Dickson."—"Dickson!—the same who was in the Peninsula?"—"Yes."—"He is a good officer, no excellent officer; he knows his business well."—"May I beg to tell him of your consideration, and ask your name?" The unknown's brow lowered.—"Excusez! I fancy praise him without any need of that."—"I request your pardon for my having committed such rudeness."—"Not at all; 'tis natural. Madame, let me have coffee in my own room."

Bowing to me, as much as to imply that I had not driven him away, he retired. I became anxious to know who he was; there was certainly about him that peculiar air which showed he was in the habit of being treated with deference, although his manner and voice were as vulgar as his person was coarse and ungainly. Madame had resolved to keep her secret till his departure, and all my endeavours to satisfy my curiosity were fruitless, although I stuck to her skirts, and tried all means of persuasion in my power.

At length the travelling carriage of the incognito came to the hotel-door; he drove off, and now the mystery was to be explained.

"Well!" demanded madame; "what do you think of my guest?"—"Nothing particular, either good or bad."—"Who do you think he is?"—"Oh, a sutler, a vivandier, who has grown fat by selling bad brandy to the troops."—"Fi, donc! he is no marchand, but a marshal."—"Provost-marshal, I suppose."—"Copin, no! he is a peer of France."—"He must look well with a coronet on his full hand,"—"He is a duke, and one of the first soldiers of the day."—"Well, I thought he was a soldier I confess, by his lanest praise of my colonel"—"Your colonel would have given his little finger to have had the opportunity of seeing so great a man; but you, you little wretch, have been ogling me all dinner-time, and spoiling my stockings with your dirty booty instead of attending to——"—"To whom, then? Out with it at once."—"To Marshal Soult, Duke of Dalmatia; he it was, you graceless monster, that you dined with: are you not overwhelmed with the honour?"—"Au contraire; I would rather sup with you, tête-a-tête, than dine with all the Marshals of France."

Ion. A Tragedy. By T. N. Talfourd. Edward Moxon.

WE have already given our opinion of the merits of "Ion" as an acting drama; it is now our more pleasing task to notice it as a dramatic poem, and as such we unhesitatingly rank it amongst the first of modern date. How truly refreshing to those who labour in the sterile tracts of criticism is the occasional privilege "to hold high converse with the godlike few." To us it gives a renewal of strength; we feel gratified and refreshed, and are thankful; for "the labour we delight in physics pain."

There cannot, we feel assured, be two opinions respecting the many beauties which lie scattered through every page of this sweetly written poem. Its characters are all beautifully and powerfully drawn, particularly that of the hero, which is finely, indeed splendidly, moulded, and deserves unqualified praise.

Clemanthe endeavours to dissuade Ion from his interview with the tyrant Adrastus:—

"Clemanthe.—To the Palace!
Knowest thou the peril—nay the certain issue
That awaits thee? Death! The tyrant has decreed, Confirmed it with an oath, and he has power
To keep that oath, for, hated as he is,
The reckless soldiers who partake his riot
Are swift to do his bidding.
Ion.—Heaven has call'd me,
And I have pledged my honour. When thy heart
Bestow'd its preference on a friendless boy, Thou didst not image him a recreant; nor Must he prove so, by thy election crown'd.
Thou hast endow'd me with the right to claim Thy help through this our journey, be its course
Lengthen'd to age, or in an hour to end,
And now I ask it:—but my courage hold,
And with thy free approval send me forth
In soul apparell'd for my office.
Clemanthe.—Go!
I would not have thee other than thou art,
Living or dying—and if thou shouldst fall—
Ion.—Be sure I shall return
Clemanthe.—If thou shouldst fall,
I shall be happier as the affianced bride
Of thy cold ashes, than in proudest fortunes."

Mr. Talfourd is particularly happy in his delineation of the female character: his Clemanthe is perfect. We can believe Ion when he exclaims—

"I'll gaze upon thy loveliness, and drink
It's quiet in;—how beautiful thou art!—
My pulse throbs now as it was wont—a-lying,
Which owns so fair a glass in mirror it, Cannot show darkly."

A spirit of mildness, of purity, of timid breathlessness, seems to steal over us when we hear her speak; her gentle numbers fall upon our ears, beautiful as moonlight on a tranquil lake.

Clemanthe is aware that Ion has bound himself by an oath to take the life of Adrastus, and fears lest the remembrance of the deed will cloud his future days with horror:—

"Clemanthe.—Shall I to the palace,
And, as the price of my disclosure, claim
His safety? No! 'Tis never woman's part,
Out of her fond misgivings to perplex
The fortunes of the man to whom she cleaves;
'Tis hers to weave all that she has of fair
And bright in the dark meshes of their webs, Inseparate from their windings. My poor heart
Hath found its refuge in a hero's love,
Whatever destiny his gem rows seal
Shape for him;—'Tis its duty to be still,
And trust him till it bound or break with his."

There are many scenes in this drama of powerful interest: the final parting of Ion and Clemanthe; the interview between Adrastus and Ion; Ion's address to the people of Argos just previous to his slaying himself; with several others, are very finely touched. We regret that our space is so limited that we can only afford this little niche; but no extracts can do justice to Mr. Talfourd, or satisfy our readers. We now take leave of the talented author, and offer the ardent tribute of our unqualified admiration.

We had almost forgotten to mention the Notice, instead of dedication, which accompanies this drama. It is a just tribute to the memory of that excellent and worthy man, Dr. Valpy (vivat post funera virtus), and does honour to the head and heart of Mr. Talfourd.

Travels and Adventures in Eastern Africa, Descriptive of the Zoolus, with a Sketch of Natal. By Nathaniel Isaacs. 2 vols. Edward Churton.

Mr. Isaacs' work being principally a diary of occurrences and observations during a residence at Natal, we think the title rather out of character; but though we make this objection, we acknowledge there is very useful and entertaining matter in his volumes. In 1822 our author, at the age of 14, left England for St. Helena, where his uncle, a merchant, resided; but in two years, becoming tired of the monotony of the counting-house, and having a strong predilection for the sea, he, in 1825, accompanied Lieut. King, R. N., in the brig Mary, in a voyage to the Cape of Good Hope, and from thence proceeded to the East Coast of Africa, to open an intercourse with the natives. The vessel arrived at Table Bay in August: she thence sailed for the Eastern Coast of Africa, and was wrecked off Port Natal in October. Mr. Isaacs thus, at the early age of 17, was cast among semi-savages, and in a country of which but very scanty correct information has reached us. He states that the details in his work are from personal observations and incidents occurring within his own knowledge, and we will add that, though he is but a young author, some of his suggestions are well worthy the attention of commercial men. The publication is well got up, and contains some very spirited engravings.

The Magazine of Domestic Economy. Vol. I. Orr and Smith.

THE first volume of this very cheap Magazine is now completed. It furnishes a comprehensive view of in-door and out-door economy, and rich and poor may consult it with advantage. We know of no work that we can recommend as more valuable for private families; and further, several of the articles, in point of style, are highly talented compositions.

Journey through Arabia Petræa to Mount Sinai. By M. Léon de Laborde. John Murray.

A VERY able translation of the principal portion of work that has already acquired considerable celebrity o the continent and in this country, and which is justly sai to present ample living evidence of the fulfilment of pro phecies delivered nearly three thousand years ago, and e the same time discloses to our view scenes, ruins, mon ments, costume, still almost wholly scriptural in thei character. The illustrations to the volume are splendi specimens of art.

OPERATIONS IN SPAIN.

MY DEAR ——, Yesterday was another day of glory i the annals of the Legion. An officer engaged can giv little general information relative to an action upon, o rather along, a space of three miles. Our present lines ex tend from those we took at San Sebastian to the heights o this village and Passages, at least three miles. Yesterday morning, at one o'clock after midnight, sharp firing wa heard to the right, that is, towards General Shawe's post i front of St. Sebastian; gradually it seemed to extend to n on the extreme left in front of Passages. We thought little o it at first, but at last, towards six in the morning, som light troops advanced to the post where our regiment ha two companies stationed (about eighty men), called Cea Casaris, and told us we should not remain there half-an hour. Here was it my hard fortune to be stationed, an too true was the intelligence, for our enemies cried out t us while delivering their fire. A large force of 600 me now came down upon us with savage yells and abuse Here we stood, and blazed away at them, till an succou arriving from General Chichester, and finding ourselve flanked on both sides by the enemy, and our communicatio with the Brigadier-General cut off, we were obliged to mak a retreat through a wood to the water's edge. Here we ma the 8th regiment, 800 strong, who speedily drove the enem from the post which they had driven us from. We now ascended the hill, and were ordered to push on to an out post where some companies of the 4th and 1st had been re pulsed by a very superior force. We took it at the point o the bayonet, but were again driven from it by fresh force composed of the Navarese, the bravest troops of the in surgents. We then sent to the Brigadier for support, wh sent us one company of the 6th, with their Lieut.-Col Harley and Losack; charged again, and again the post fe into our possession, which we kept against the repeate efforts of the enemy, until, finding it impossible to make lasting impression on the British, they retired, completel foiled in an attempt to take our positions with a force of 1 battalions against 9 !!! Our total loss amounts to 100 me killed and wounded, and three or four officers wounded, only—two of the 4th Fusiliers, Capt. Sidney James and Lieut. Fred. Peirce. That of the enemy is said to be immense—many compute it at 800!!! Justice must at all events be given to them: they fought with determined fury, and sustained the attacks made upon them with bravery, but were forced to yield to the cool courage of the British Legion. The 4th lost 29 men and two officers. The attack on the right, it appears, was but a feint; our brigade, was to have had the pleasure of being cut to pieces by them; and the chief attack was sustained by the 1st, 4th, and 8th regiments of British and a regiment of Spaniards, who soon gave way, but rallied under the brave Pastor. Cordova must answer for the manner in which he has exposed the Legion to the accumulation of forces brought against them by the rebels. This morning the enemy have entirely disappeared. We have been under arms all night, expecting a night attack. I am nearly exhausted with fatigue. We were all devilish glad to find they had decamped this morning. I think a battle once a month is plenty. Here in one month and one day I have had three! making my fourth affair, counting that of the 16th January last. †

THE VANGUARD.

Sir,—Various misrepresentations having been made respecting the qualities of this splendid ship—the Vanguard, and particularly in the Port papers, I am led, as an act of justice, to state facts as they really exist, in order that the country, and the Navy especially, may learn the truth.

This ship, instead of being, as has been industriously circulated in reports made by interested individuals, below her calculated line of flotation, before even her guns or stores were put on board of her, is at this moment, with four months' provision and stores complete, and with 375 tons of water, and 80 long 32-pounders mounted, together with 80 tons of coals in her coal-hole, within less than an inch of the line of flotation calculated by the Surveyor of the Navy, as she draws at this time 23 ft. 11 in. aft, and 22 ft. 11 in. forward, and has her lower deck sill, at the lowest part, 7 ft. 1 in. out of the water.

Further than this, she is capable of stowing with ease eight months' provision and 412 tons of water, and, as The Hampshire Telegraph has truly observed, is "A NOBLE-LOOKING SHIP." To these positive facts I will add, that her gallant constructor must indeed regard this specimen of his skill with pride and satisfaction, and must anxiously look forward to the promised trials with ships of her own class, which will, I am satisfied, confirm all that he so confidently expects. AN OFFICER OF THE NAVY.

Portsmouth, 10th June, 1836.

CLAIMS OF GOOD SOLDIERS FOR THEIR DISCHARGE.

Sir,—In looking over a file of your papers the other day, which accidentally came within my reach, I was much pleased with certain observations therein contained; and understanding you particularly to express yourself an enemy to everything bordering on oppression, I take the liberty of making you acquainted with my case, and, in doing so, beg to assure you it is only echoing the feelings of many a man at present in His Majesty's service.

The King's warrant authorises commanding officers of corps to recommend for discharge, from time to time, men of good character, and according to a graduated scale, thus:—

| Period. | For men serving in the Cavalry. | For men serving in the Infantry. |
|---|---|---|
| Under 7 years' actual service | £60 | £20 |
| After 7 years' do. | 35 | 18 |
| 10 " | 21 | 15 |
| 12 " | 15 | 10 |
| 14 " | 12 | 5 |
| 15 " | 6 | Free Discharge at home, and 2 months' pay abroad. |
| 16 " | Free Discharge. | Free Discharge, and three months' pay at home, and 6 months' pay abroad. |
| 17 " | Free Discharge and 3 months' pay. | Free Discharge and six months' pay at home, and one year's pay abroad. |
| 18 " and to 21 " | Free Discharge and 6 months' pay. | Free Discharge and 1 year's pay at home, and one and a half year's pay abroad. |

Now, Sir, I am what the officers call a "devilish fine looking fellow," and knowing myself to be one of general good character and conduct (excuse me sounding my own trumpet), and after having served His Majesty faithfully for 15 or 16 years, I feel grieved that my repeated applications for discharge should not have been, nor, as I am led to expect, will be forwarded, duly recommended, for the consideration of the authorities, having the power to release me from my engagements; because my appearance reflects credit on the corps (how very flattering!) and moreover that I am a generally well-behaved soldier, not disposed to give trouble to the officers or non-commissioned officers placed over me; if, on the contrary, I were a blackguard, an ugly soldier, one who had been tried two or three times by Courts-Martial, a drunkard, or a married man with a large family, disposed to annoy officers and non-commissioned officers, my application would meet with ready attention; this I am sure of, because men such as I have described meet every day with the reward intended, solely for the good and faithful soldier, and directly in opposition to His Majesty's most gracious warrant.

I cannot, for the life of me, understand by what means men placed in such responsible situations as commanding officers of regiments (where so much good may be done), can evade the true meaning and intent of the humane warrant here alluded to; but true it is, that merit, so far as this regulation goes, does not always meet its reward. Zeal for their regiments, it is said, prompts commanding officers to act thus. Zeal!!! 'tis all balderdash!

I would now, Sir, give you my name, the regiment I belong to, and its station, but if I were to do so, a host of enemies would rise up against me, and the consequences to me prove ruinous; my present aim is to show, if possible, through the means of your valuable publication, the eyes of the Commander-in-Chief to this grievance, in the hope he will be pleased to adopt such measures as will ensure a more strict observance and obedience to His Majesty's warrant.

If general officers at their half-yearly inspections were, in addition to the inquiries they are at present directed to make, instructed to be informed by the men themselves, the officers commanding companies, as well as the commanding officers, whether due attention had been given to the benign intentions of our gracious King, in facilitating the discharge of the well-conducted and deserving soldier, it would, I sincerely believe, be applying a remedy to my complaint, and as "prevention is better than cure," leave no cause for others to follow thus in my footsteps.

Having carefully abstained from introducing the name of any individual against whom I may have cause to complain, it is to be hoped this may attract their attention, and lead them in time to follow the good old golden rule of "doing unto others as they would wish to be done by."

June 1. A GRENADIER.

THE DONKEY FRIGATES.

Sir,—I perceive in your last week's Gazette that you describe two vessels as Donkey frigates, and sometimes you also apply the term Jack-ass to H. M.'s vessels. I know what a frigate is; but not wishing to expose my ignorance in conversation, may I beg, in behalf of myself and several other readers of your paper, that you will define those terms, and tell us for what reason you apply them to ships.

Bath, June 22, 1836. INQUIRER.

[The term "jack-ass," or "donkey" frigates, is applied to 28-gun ships, which are generally commanded by Captains just posted. They were, during the war, very inefficient vessels, being slow and leewardly, owing to their height from the water, and being, we presume, the worst class of ships, were selected several years back to experiment upon, with a view to improvement in Naval Architecture. The consequence has been that considerable alteration for the better was effected in their construction and armament, and they have become favourite vessels on the score of economy, performing all, or nearly all, required from a frigate in time of peace, at less than half the expence. This may probably be the meaning of the term "donkey," as applied to hard workers at little cost. They would disappear in time of war, as they have not sufficient force to contend against the frigates of rival States, and, excepting the few of Sir William Symonds's construction (which have proved excellent vessels), they are generally dull sailers, and, without the ability to fight or run, they would fall easy victims under the long-guns of a frigate, as we witnessed during the war in the capture of the Cayenne and Levant by the Constitution, with very trifling loss.—ED.]

MADRAS COURTS-MARTIAL.

Sir,—A year has nearly elapsed since a letter, signed Mysore, and dated "London, June 20th," appeared in your Gazette, No. 126, June 27, 1835, but I hope your readers have not forgotten yet the subject headed "Madras Courts-Martial." The author had "observed, from your editorial notices, that you exercise your own discretion in publishing or withholding the whole, or portions of the communications of your correspondents." Now I trust, Sir, that you will, for justice' sake, favour me with a corner of your paper on this occasion. Your truly conscientious correspondent remarks that "surely your columns are not avowedly open to the aspersion of public functionaries, who, residing at a distance of many thousand miles, are completely precluded from repelling the attacks, contradicting the allegations, or explaining their conduct." I trust the writer of the above may have been misinformed as to the statement which he has inserted concerning Sir E. K. Williams. That officer was never a "personal friend of Sir G. Walker," nor did he reside with him on first landing as the writer of the account states. I can confidently assert that Sir E. K. W.'s residing with Sir George was not the case; for on the evening of that officer's first landing at Madras, he was kindly invited by Col. M'Leskell, then commanding the 89th regiment, to take up his quarters at his house during his stay at that place, of which offer he most thankfully availed himself. It may be true that Sir E. K. Williams was recommended to arrange the dispute privately; but what was the reason of his most "disinterested" Excellency thus giving his advice? Captain Walker was Sir George's nephew, and what affectionate uncle would not endeavour to get his nephew out of a scrape in which he foresaw his relation would be a loser. The whole transaction displays partiality on the side of the Commander-in-Chief. I will not occupy more room in your paper, Sir, although the defence of an officer of such merit might justly claim a more lengthened paragraph. I hope ere this Mysore has more prudence than to give publicity to such reports, unless he can bring forward good and satisfactory evidence on which to ground his statements.

CALUMNIARUM VINDEX.

LIBERTY MEN FROM H. M. S. PRESIDENT.

Sir,—I read with no small astonishment, in your paper of Saturday, the announcement of the intention, said to be sanctioned by the Admiralty, of allowing such of the crew of H.M.S. President as entered for the ships fitting, one month's leave of absence, thus still further encouraging them to go to London to spend their money, leaving the honest tradesman who have supplied them with goods on credit in the lurch. I trust the Lords of the Admiralty will not be induced by any interested representations to sanction such a proceeding in any other case, and I beg the insertion of this letter in your popular paper, in order to call attention to the fact; for if this is to be the case, they had better order the ships to the river at once to be paid off.

Portsea, June 20, 1836. J. M.

[We have noticed the contents of our honest correspondent's letter elsewhere.—ED.]

 The Letter of "A." on the Civil Appointments of the Navy, is from its length unavoidably postponed till next week. "Tristram's" third Letter on Lloyd's Register, did not reach us in time. "A worn out Naval Officer," shall be attended to.

Bunoust.—"There are men," says a recent French paper, "whom death seems to have no power to touch, and whom the rudest shocks leave uninjured; such is one Bunoust, of Bethune. A soldier, from 18 years of age, he received during the wars of the empire several severe wounds (in consequence of which he was pensioned), and was pierced through the intestines. The last wound was so unexpectedly and inexplicably cured that the chirurgical operations which effected it, as well as the cure itself, were noted in the annals of surgery and medicine, where every one could satisfy himself of the fact. After many years' absence, Bunoust returned to the domestic hearth, and it must be confessed, that the brave regimental trooper preserved, in civil life, the habits of his military existence. He made himself merry on Chuique and other strong liquors, and soon fell passed in public-houses and cantoons whole days and nights in carousals. Lately, having consecrated three days and nights to such orgies, he passed through the Place d'Armes, where his wavering step, besotted look, and above all, perhaps, his great height (he is about six feet), gathered above thirty blackguards, who soon joined him with cries and shouts, that terror seized him, and he ran for refuge into a neighbouring warehouse. Squatting down behind several sacks, he ventured to peep above them, beheld the same rout of vagabonds, and hard by, an officer. Reason half forsook him at the sight, and already impressed with the idea that he was sought for to be shot, he trembled in every limb. He, nevertheless, upon the entreaties of a member of the family, returned home with his brother, sat down at the family board, but refused to take any food, suffering them to perceive his fears of poison, which his brother-in-law succeeding in dissipating. At last, after the judicious representations of the latter, who reproached him for the scandal occasioned by his ill-idleness and debauchery, he went into a room on the first story, in which he bolted himself, narrowly inspected the apartment, undressed, and gave his brother, who had accompanied him, leave to retire; he left Bunoust walking about in his shirt, which freak continued for about an hour, but was summoned to him imperatively and anew, for the poor men finding his brother had left him, had suddenly opened the window, and in the position of one who throws himself into the water for a dip, had precipitated himself head foremost into the street. By this fall he fractured his skull near the base of his neck, and gave himself a severe contusion on the shoulder. Bunoust was raised from the stones, on which at first he laid, by a friendly hand, and there is every reason to think that his new wounds will not have disastrous consequences. Put into the hospital by the proper authorities, the most assiduous cares are bestowed upon him.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, JUNE 25, 1836.

In the late debate on Mr. Bannerman's motion, relative to the Promotions in the Army and Navy, Mr. Hume, with his accustomed liberality and good feeling, and with his uniform close adherence to truth, observed, "That there was no service so well paid as the Naval and Military Services of this country!" That so palpable, so outrageous an untruth did not meet instant contradiction, from the different gallant officers by whom he was surrounded, has astonished as much as it has grieved us. Can Mr. Hume, with all his knowledge and calculations, be really so ignorant as not to be aware that the Naval Officers of his favourite country America, as well as of France, are doubly as well paid as those of the British Navy, and though the Military Officers, in the latter of these foreign states, have not, we believe, larger allowances than those of our Army, yet in the former, that of America, they are very much better paid than British Military Officers? Ought this, then to be as we would ask of Mr. Hume? but we ask it more confidently of the British Nation—of those who, with larger and nobler minds, can better appreciate the gallant deeds of our brave defenders in war! Ought any country in the world, we demand, to pay its Naval and Military Officers better than England should pay hers? or have the officers of any other state in the universe, more richly merited this reward from a grateful country, than British officers have deserved it from that country which they have so heroically fought for against every enemy on the globe, and whose renown they have so proudly risen to the highest pitch of exaltation?

Can it be known to Mr. Hume, that whilst the pay of a British Naval Officer will barely cover the expences of his mess, that the officers of the French Navy of every rank have a separate allowance, and a most liberal one too, for this purpose, and that whilst the Captain of an English ship-of-war is compelled by the usage of the Service, to keep a table at which to entertain some of his officers daily, and which generally takes every shilling of his pay, that the Captain of even a French frigate has between three and four hundred a-year for this express use, thereby enabling him to save his personal pay for the benefit of his family. Whereas with us, unless an officer has a private fortune, it is impossible for him to seek the command of a ship in peace if he desires to maintain that respectability in this station, which has always heretofore been considered to be attached to it,—namely, the entertaining some of his officers daily at his table; and very many of the most distinguished men in the Service have, we know, positively, most unwillingly abstained from applying for the command of a ship of late years, solely from this cause;—their being unable to keep a table without doing serious injury to their families and this, too, notwithstanding that by this course they, under the existing regulations, shut themselves out from ever hoisting their flags. Ought, then, we repeat, this cruel injustice to be continued for another year, or even for another day? But it is not the higher ranks alone in the Naval Service that are compelled to incur heavy expences on being called into active employment: every rank in the Navy is alike exposed to similar losses;—the Lieutenant and the Midshipman too must each sacrifice full a hundred pounds, besides his pay, the very first year that he receives his appointment, and in each successive year, likewise, his indispensable outlays will very far exceed his salary from the Government.

It is in the point of keeping a table, however, that the expences of the Naval Captain so far exceeds that of the Military Field Officer of corresponding rank, for, whilst the latter has but at most a hundred a-year to pay for his mess, the former is, we may say, compelled by the usage of the Service to expend, in a ship of the line or large frigate, full four times this sum in entertaining a proportion of his officers daily at his table.

Again,—with regard to the statement of the Honourable Member for Middlesex, "that there was no service so well paid as the Naval and Military Services of this country," by which of course is meant, that no civil employment under the Government is so liberally remunerated. Let us look at the facts as they really exist.

The returns to the House of Commons have shown the very reverse of this statement to be the truth. For example:—In the Treasury Department we have seen that a clerk, a Mr. Wadham Wyndham, after but sixteen years' services and when but thirty-eight years of age, has been allowed to retire on a pension of five hundred and twenty-five pounds per annum, being just two hundred and sixty pounds a-year more than those Colonels of the Army and Captains of the Navy receive, who have been serving in every clime for fifty years, and have hazarded their lives against the enemy above a hundred times.

Again,—in the same Department we observe the name of a Mr. George Harrison, who, after twenty-seven years of those fatiguing and laborious services in Whitehall, is permitted to enjoy a retiring allowance of only two thousand two hundred per annum! being about the amount of half-pay of six Major-Generals or Rear-Admirals, with sixty years' arduous and distinguished services each in defence of their country. So much, then, for the correctness of the declaration made by the matchless Member for Middlesex, to whose early attention we would direct the returns to which we have referred, and which were granted through the motion of Mr. Tooke on the 10th of June, 1833. In these he will find numerous other facts, giving the lie to his recent assertion, that of all the public servants of the Crown, the officers of the Army and Navy were the best paid, for he will discover by these data, that even the common Messengers, after but twenty to twenty-five years' services in the public offices, have retired allowances nearly treble in amount to that of the half-pay of the deserving Lieutenant of the Navy and Army, after about double this length of service; and further, that the Door-Keepers of the House of Commons are far better remunerated by the Government than the Captain of a 74, or the Colonel of a regiment of the line.

Ought this, we once more fearlessly ask, to be suffered to continue for another year? We earnestly would call Lord Minto's and Lord Howick's attention also to the returns to which we have herein alluded, and then we feel convinced that, with their liberal colleagues, they will see the justice and the right, in spite of Mr. Hume, of proposing measures for the bettering the condition of every grade of officer in His Majesty's Service.

Some months since, viz. in our paper of the 6th February (No. 158), we commented upon the reliefs of officers and men belonging to regiments serving in the West Indies, and we now revert to the subject, imagining, however well planned any measure recommended for adoption may be, if not coupled with economy, in the present day, it will hardly meet with the consideration its proposers or advocates may anxiously wish for. It is with this impression that we recommend that His Majesty's ships, while on voyages of experimental cruising might be employed to convey annually a company of each regiment serving in the West Indies, and return with one home.

We are well aware that the conveyance of soldiers in men of war is not popular with the royal tars, still we are fain to hope it is an ill-grounded prejudice only, and one to be overcome. Sailors and Soldiers serve the same King and the same country, the same interests should consequently guide all,—paltry distinctions as to the arm of the service they belong to should not for a moment bias their actions. There has been ever in the Army too much jealous feeling (can we call it so?) between the Cavalry, light, heavy and very heavy, between the Artillery, Engineers, Guards and the Line, and a je ne sais quoi between the Army and Navy; these are all mistaken and improper feelings: as we said before all serve the same master and the same cause, whether dressed in blue, red, green, or yellow; whether English, Irish, or Scotch; whether Catholic, Protestant, or Dissenter; the same motive alone should actuate them,—"in unity is strength."

A soldier going on board a man-of-war should strictly conform to the rules laid down for the ship's guidance in which he is embarked; and the sailors, on the other hand, should make every allowance for the soldier's want of knowledge in ploughing the deep, good naturedly bearing in mind that he can, as he has often done before, plough well the ranks of whatever enemies may hereafter be opposed to him;—with such feeling in the breasts of all on board, the soldier will pull the rope when put into his hand, or make himself useful in any other way his brothers of the sea may wish to employ his services, and when the "padaagger" has it in his power, the tar, unable to use his hand legs, will receive assistance from the soldier in turn.

It is lamentable to observe upon the manner in ch drafts are sent to join regiments on foreign ions,—in hired vessels, called freight ships, nout a gun (unless it may be in the bottom of ship to assist as ballast), a firelock, or even a ss on board for protection in case of need. not long ago when a large detachment was so arked, and on its way to Barbadoes, that n nge piratical-looking vessel was observed to pparently in chase; this continued for several rs, the pirate gaining ground fast, during which the officers' ladies were n good deal alarmed, the gentlemen not a little so, knowing well if vessel spoken of turned out to be what she eared they were likely to go into the other ld on a plank, but fortunately they were not to this last shift. Although the freight ship not attacked, still, we have but assured, every on board continued to think (and do so to present moment) that the vessel in chase was rate, and it was afterwards supposed she sheered n consequence of seeing so many men on board, no doubt imagining them prepared in some e or other, and with interest, to return any lt that might be offered. Supposing for a oent, that this vessel, or freight ship, had been lured, and the cargo of live stock consigned to deep, we should afterwards have taken, when late, the precautionary measure of "locking stable after the steed had been stolen." While ime to prevent such an event, would it not be er to embark drafts (instead of in freight ships) an-of-war, armed, but undermanned in proporto the number of soldiers taken on board? the iers to be told off to separate watches (in com- with the men-of-war's men), and to do their , or work, as apprenticed sailors, which we suppose them during the voyage.

ervants of the Crown cannot do too much, nor they know too much to be of real use to their try. An infantry soldier might be made ble of not only working great guns on shore also on board ship, and, in fact, be prepared ender himself useful in the performance of any ico he may be called upon to assist in, in cases nergency, and if he knows but a little before- (in this case a little learning will not be a gerous thing) the better will he be prepared to ute what may be required of him in the hour eed.

ow, taking into consideration what we have ady published in recommendation of the onal relief of soldiers from the West Indies out the assistance of His Majesty's ships, it be necessary to bear in mind (while potting the yearly relief of regiments) that there are resent nine regiments in the Leeward Islands five in Jamaica, which, at the lowest calcun, would employ four extra transports anly; and, as we said before, where economy is order of the day, how can we induce Mr. Hume ess he is sent to the West Indies and experis a touch of the black vomit) or people of his d to consent, much less to advocate this exe. If this small matter of expense could be rid of, then we say relieve regiments every five. We propose men-of-war for this service, if a certain number must needs be kept in mission, why not employ them in the performe of this humane duty?

STATEMENT has just been published, by order he House of Commons, on the motion of Mr. rles Wood, Secretary to the Admiralty, entitled "All Reports and Communications which have been received at the Admiralty from Flag Officers, and others, of the sailing qualities of His Majesty's ships Vernon, Castor, Pique, Magicienne, President, Vestal, Barham, Water-witch, Snake, Serpent, and Rover, and of the Medea, Spitfire, Tartarus, Blazer, and Firebrand, steam-vessels, from the date of the Vernon being first commissioned to the present time."

This document is far too voluminous for publication in our columns, but we rejoice at its existence, as it will enable us at once to silence misrepresentations, by reference to the official accounts; and as the Parliamentary Papers are now available to every one who chooses to purchase them (the price of this volume is ten shillings), any impartial person may satisfy himself of the superiority of the Surveyor's ships, even when compared with the President, Barham, and Castor, being the presumed best of their class, produced by other builders; and of the unworthy attempts which have been so sedulously made by the School of Architecture, aided by a portion of the press, to mystify the public respecting them.

The greatest portion of the volume before us is filled with detailed accounts of each day's trial between the Barham and Vernon in December last, illustrated by diagrams, showing the bearings of the different ships, by Captain Elliott, Commander Hillyer, and Mr. Bellamy, the master of His Majesty's Ship Revenge; and they fully bear out the statement we have so repeatedly made, that owing to a greater spread of sail propelling a lighter body, the Barham had, in light winds, a slight advantage, seldom, however, exceeding the distance of a mile in a day's trial. In rough blowing weather, more particularly against a head sea, she is admitted to be greatly inferior to the Vernon, pitching and labouring more heavily; and our readers may recollect, that before the result of the trial was known, the traducers of the Surveyor pointed out this as the position when she would fail, that ship being, according to their showing, only calculated for smooth water. As regards stowage and stability, the Vernon presents an immense superiority, her heel being 6 degrees only, at the time when the Barham's inclination was eight, and the Revenge's ten degrees. A perusal of these minute details must lead every impartial person, even if he had not witnessed the trial, to the same conclusion as Captain Elliott, who in submitting them to the Admiral, observed, "that they clearly prove to you, Sir, the advantage that one frigate possesses over the other, according to circumstances of wind and weather;" an opinion in which the gallant Captain is by no means singular, it being that of every person in the Fleet, or indeed of every one who is sufficiently conversant with Naval matters, to appreciate the essential qualities of a man of war, so happily combined in this noble ship. We shall have some observations to make next week on the extraordinary discrepancy which appears in the Official Reports of the sailing qualities, &c., of the Vernon, in 1833, as compared with those of 1834-5. One would imagine they could not relate to the same ship. We would suggest a minute examination of the Logs at the several periods.

We are happy to learn that some improvements are in contemplation with regard to the rates of Officers' pay of the East India Company's Service. The pay of Captain is to be increased to eleven shillings and sevenpence, the pay of the Captain of His Majesty's Line Regiments. We also hear a report that it is intended to include the Sick Furlough in the periods lately fixed for Retiring Pensions: this we have continually advocated, and we shall be glad to find the report well founded.

We have received three letters, one of which we publish, written by inhabitants of Portsmouth, (evidently Jews,) upon the subject of a statement which appeared in our weekly letter from that port last Saturday, regarding the intention of entering the seamen of H.M.S. President on board the vessels fitting, and then giving them leave of absence for a month. We trust, if this design has been carried into effect, that it will be adhered to upon future occasions also, and form part of that system which the present talented Board of Admiralty have so successfully pursued of attracting volunteers to the King's Service, and retaining them therein, and we view the measure as a very good one, and pregnant with more beneficial consequences than are apparent at first view. To us it appears of little consequence to the inhabitants of a sea-port town, whether the men are discharged outright or re-entered, with leave of absence. In both cases they are at liberty to please their own taste in the mode of disposing of their money, and that leads three-fourths of them to prefer the attractions of Ratcliffe Highway, and the gaities of St. George's in the East, to the local indulgences available at the outports. Of this fact any one may satisfy himself, who witnesses the departure of the London coaches from Portsmouth and Portsea upon the day of paying off a ship; and we cannot perceive that the tradesmen, who have given credit on the faith of wages due, are in a worse position in the case of a man re-entered, who has leave of absence, and will return to the port again, than he who is absolutely discharged and does not rejoin the service, until he has passed through the hands of some crimp, who has probably consigned him to an East India voyage after his money was spent, and who may not return to that particular port for many years. On the contrary, as the seamen will receive his two months' advance in the port where his creditor resides, we consider that this system will be, in fact, beneficial to the latter, as affording him a better chance of payment. In common with the public at large, we have however little commiseration for the class of persons complaining, when we recollect the many instances of extortion we have witnessed, and the wholesale plunder of which poor Jack is the victim. And let not the worthies of Cannon Hard despair, "there is balm in Gilead;" if the water passes their mill there are plenty of the "peoples" located in those metropolitan districts which the sailor patronises, who will do ample justice to their profession; and as it seems a point pretty well established, that Jack is fated to expend the earnings of his three years in a few days on shore, we hope that the officers of his new ship will induce him, before he proceeds on his cruise, to add something to his kit, and leave it on board under proper charge. This will insure his return; the sooner he then proceeds to his long contemplated enjoyment the better, and we doubt not the practical effect of his appearance amongst the thousands of merchant seamen now in the port of London, and the many advantages of his situation as compared with their own, will induce considerable numbers to enter the King's ervice; and if means are provided for these liberty-men's" return, when their money is exended, they will assuredly be accompanied by any able volunteers for the frigates fitting out.

The cause of the Hon. G. C. Norton v. Lord Melburne came on for trial in the Court of Common Pleas on Wednesday, before Chief Justice Tindal and a special jury. The high rank of the Noble defendant, and the beauty and talents of the lady, whose conduct has been made the subject of this proceeding, occasioned the deepest interest. The court at an early hour was crowded to excess. The trial lasted fourteen hours, and the jury, after consulting for about a minute, returned a verdict for the noble defendant. The evidence got up as from discharged, drunken, and worthless servants, and it failed in every particular. We know pretty well all the movers in this brutal affair, beginning with the incorous individual who set on foot other inquiries, and who stimulated poor Mr. Norton throughout. The King and the straight-forward Duke of Wellington saw the matter in its true light, whilst some we could name hesitated not, from party animosity, to stab the reputation of a lady, as the means of destroying a political adversary. Our contemporary, The Morning Chronicle, says, "a more flagrant conspiracy, supported by more manifest perjury, has never occurred in the annals of Westminster-hall. It is to be hoped that proceedings may be adopted that will clear away the mystification which now surrounds this subject; and if the wretched individuals whose poverty induced them to consent to crime may be thought too contemptible for animadversion, their suborners bave not the same plea for impunity—they are worthy of and should meet with the full vengeance of the law."

The officers who have served in the 85th regiment since 1813, with as many of those in the regiment now that are at present in town, dined together at the Thatched House on the 18th June. The old Colonel, and indeed we may say regenerator of this highly distinguished corps, Major-General W. Thornton, presided, and the whole thing passed off most agreeably; for Colonel Macdougal, who was long in the regiment, and who has just arrived from service in India, Sir W. De Bathe, Lieut.-Colonel C. Fox, and about twenty other old friends and associates in the regiment, were present. It will be remembered that this corps, after distinguishing itself at the latter part of the war in France, and on several occasions in America, was successful in taking a strong post on the Mississippi, opposite to New Orleans, and, with a few Marines, were the only part of that ill-fated expedition that completely effected what they had to do. The gallant Colonel, now General Thornton, led them on this brilliant exploit.

We rejoice at these meetings of old friends; it is a heartfelt pleasure to the older officers who have retired, and an excellent opportunity for the younger ones to associate and take example from them, and in keeping up the credit and affection for their regiments. Some have retired from the Army; some have entered other professions, and came a long distance to meet their old friends. Mr. Gleig, the distinguished chronicler of the feats of the 85th (in his "Subaltern"), in which he served, and who is now Chaplain at Chelsea College, was present.

The dinner was unanimously approved of, and it was agreed that a similar meeting should take place annually on the 28th of May.

From a perusal of the matter that issues from the press on the subject of ship-building, we have often been led to re-examine the views we have adopted on this subject, but we can confidently say that the investigation has only served to confirm us in the statements we have frequently made in favour of Captain Symonds, although the subject is constantly under discussion. The dissertations are generally of a party tendency, and we do not find that any new principle is developed, or that any very erudite explanations of known systems are gone into; on the contrary, the statements are generally of a disreputable kind, consisting mostly of detraction from the high reputation of the most talented ship-builder that ever existed, the present surveyor of the Navy. While we thus publicly reiterate our known impressions on this controversy, we can safely affirm that our convictions arise from a careful examination of facts, from investigation into the truth of those facts, and from a philosophical inquiry into the deductions justly to be made from experiments the most extended and various. We recently noticed a pamphlet on Naval Architecture, by Mr. Beamish, and we have again read it with some attention. Although the writer promised to present numerous suggestions in favour of science for designing vessels he has omitted to notice the superior velocity of the new ships, which in war must be of vast advantage; and we also think the author has taken a very incomplete view of what has lately been developed on the important subject of Naval construction, in neglecting to mention the great benefits that have been shown to arise from an increase of breadth, which Captain Symonds has so ably carried into effect, and which the merest tyro in Naval matters will readily admit to be an improvement of no ordinary value. We do not believe there is a single designer of ships who would not now avail himself of the advantages of increased beam. In the Inconstant, building by Captain Hayes, at Portsmouth, we find that the old proportions on which he designed the Arrow, Champion, Challenger, and Wolf, are all abandoned, and the distinguishing characteristic of the present surveyor's system is adopted in a very considerable increase of breadth, although the gallant Captain denominated his principles previously to be fixed. The incalculable benefit of stability, united with fast sailing, must be evident to any one who considers that the effectiveness of a man of war, which heels too much to fire her guns, is wholly lost. The blind futility which has hitherto attended our ship-builders on this subject is wholly unaccountable, at least, it appears to be so now that the veil is lifted from the subject by a master spirit, who, we trust, will long preside over this noble art for its advancement. In pretending to describe the present state of Naval Architecture, Mr. Beamish has totally left out of the question the important advantages of Capt. Symonds' introductions, which are well known, from the throne to the most simple Jack tar, and has designated the new ships as having somewhat uneasy motions at sea, which (as if such a thing were unknown before in the Navy) he magnifies to such an extent as to say, that they are thereby rendered unfit for war purposes! But if Mr. Beamish would take the trouble to inquire, he would find that a greater number of accidents arose from the various oscillatory motions of the old ships, than from those of the new ones; and that those accidents were also of a more serious kind; yea, even to the fatal extent of causing the loss of ships and their whole crews, which calamity has not yet happened to a ship of the new kind. We are convinced that violent motions by no means necessarily belong to the new forms, but it may arise in them from bad stowage, insufficient masting, or other causes. It would seem, that should an accident happen to a new-class ship, similar to what befel the Challenger (one of Captain Hayes' construction), and which ended in her total loss, the opponents of Captain Symonds would be utterly in a paroxysm of despair for the Navy, and no bounds would limit their wailings; and yet, who can say that the winds and waves may not, under unavoidable circumstances, destroy even the best ship that can be built? The destructive imputations attached to the new ships are the creations of the writer's own brains, and proceed, in many cases, not so much from ignorance as from spleen, and spite, and self-interest. To those few writers who are so earnestly labouring to destroy the improved system of ship-building by their unjust statements, and who so industriously multiply their inebriations under different disguises we can only say it is a pity to see so much time thrown away. A talk is made of the press and pamphlets being against Captain Symonds, and that comparatively few writers advocate his system. We account for it by our foregoing remark, and also that evil principles are often more powerful in their operations than good ones; for we think it must be evident to any one, in the least acquainted with the subject, that the authors of the writing in question have a strong bias towards one side of the argument. But writing can never alter facts; the opponents of the new system make their case out by their superficial and quilled reasonings on paper. It is official statements and the opinions of Naval officers which must decide the question. To those who are willing to investigate this subject in such a spirit as to arrive at the truth, we would recommend a careful inquiry into facts for themselves. We may observe that before the present surveyor was installed in his office, the opinions of his merit as a ship-builder were undisputed. The great superiority of his vessel Columbine, in the experimental squadron of 1827, was manifest to the Navy; and Sir Thomas Hardy, than whom no better friend to the Navy exists, gave his decision for the professional merits of its builder, in preference to his rivals. Now if any other experimentalist in that squadron had gained the honours, would he not have expected an acknowledgment of them, instead of the vituperations which are constantly cast on the surveyor? An account of the experimental squadron was published in the Papers of Naval Architecture, vol. ii., page 283, by a writer who could have no bias towards the new system: and as he was a ship-builder, and sailed in the squadron, we may suppose him to be a fair judge on the subject. But will it be believed that this very person has been a principal writer against the surveyor since his appointment to office—yet such is the fact. The incompetency of the former surveyor as a ship-builder was well known, and made apparent by the experimental squadron, while the fitness of the present surveyor was generally admitted; and all disinterested men acknowledged the justice of his appointment, as resulting from a very decided superiority in his plan of ship-building. In the account of the interesting trial just cited, it is said, p. 280, "In moderate weather, Columbine behaved decidedly the best, and Challenger next; and all the others were nearly equal. In rough weather, Columbine retained the advantage, but it was not great." We thus see the remarkable coincidence of Captain Symonds' ship sailing well both in rough and fair weather. Of the third series of experiments, when the ships were deeply laden, it is said "Columbine retained her former advantages over the whole, but Challenger did not." This is the contrary to Mr. Beamish's statement. At p. 304, it is said, "the sailing qualities of the Columbine excited great curiosity respecting the peculiarities of her form." Only one ship out of 7 rivalled the Columbine in bad weather, which was the Acorn in the third cruise; but still there was a claim to superiority in Columbine, while Captain Hayes' ship had lost her stability, and with it all her good qualities.

We shall only add, that these observations have been in type some weeks, but that a pressure of other matter has delayed their publication.

The celebrated Abbé Sieyes died in Paris on Monday last, in the 88th year of his age. He was by turns a Member of the Constituent Assembly and of the National Convention, a Director and Consul of the Republic, a Count and Peer of the empire. He voted the death of Louis XVI., for which he was proscribed from France under the restoration. After the revolution of 1830 he, like all the other French exiles, returned to his native country; but he never re-appeared on the political scene. It is supposed he had prepared not less than 3 constitutions at various times for the benefit of France. The Constitutionnel affirms that the performance of the burial service at the funeral of the Abbé was refused by the Archbishop of Paris. The nephew of the deceased has sent to the Mayor of the first arrondissement 1500*l.* for the relief of the poor.

Ejectment.—A bill is before Parliament for facilitating the recovery of possession of tenements. It proposes that where a tenant or occupier of premises, the rent of which does not exceed 20*l.* per annum, holds over, the landlord may go before a magistrate, who shall issue his warrant directing the constable to assist in retaking possession. If the landlord has not lawful right to possession, an action will lie; but where he has lawful title to possession, no irregularity will make him a trespasser. The landlord, on getting possession, may remove the goods of the tenant, to whom notice of the place of removal must be then given. Where premises are held at a higher rate than 20*l.* a-year, the landlord, on bringing an action of ejectment, may apply to a judge for security for damages and costs.

A duel took place at Brussels on Friday week, between two gentlemen employed in the Department of the Interior, one of whom was killed on the spot by a pistol shot, fired at the distance of 40 paces; the other was slightly wounded in the breast.

An affair of honour took place in the vicinity of the town on Thursday morning last between the Hon. G. M. B——t and Mr. W. S. G——, when, after two shots were exchanged without effect, the challenger declared himself satisfied, and the parties left the ground.—Jamaica Standard, April 28.

On Wednesday the Conservative festival was celebrated at the English Opera House. The tables, which were laid for upwards of 700 persons, were crowded. A Gallant Antagonist.—The following incident reminds us forcibly of the old and affecting story of Valedine and Orson. On Wednesday last, at high water, a mate of a sutler and one of the marines had a violent quarrel on the edge of the pier, and finally came ws. One of the combatants received a blow which, ough unintentionelly, had the effect of making him over into the basin; there were at least seven feet water where he fell, and not being expert at swim-g, it was expected every moment he would go down. this dilemma his antagonist very courageously and nanely plunged in after him, and taking him by the ulder swam to the steps with him, and thus averted nost painful catastropha. The man who had thus n saved expressed the warmest gratitude to his oppo-t, and declared he would rather die ten deaths than ke another blow against so good and courageous a n. They both shook hands, and repaired to a neigh-ring public-house, where they cemented everlasting ndship with a glass of Burton ale.—Jersey Times.

A fancy fair was held on Tuesday last at Inmes' rsery Grounds, Woolwich, for the benefit of the ds of the poor Irish Orphans of Woolwich, which s numerously and fashionably attended, and the Com-ndant, Sir J. He was received on the steps by the ble Duke, who conducted his Royal guests to the gnificent gallery, where dinner was immediately served on the splendid silver service, the gift of the late King Portugal, Don John. The magnificent service of Pats. m china, presented to his Grace by the King of russia, was also used on the occasion. After the table s cleared, his Grace proposed "The health of His ajesty," which was drunk by the company amidst eering the most enthusiastic we ever heard, and re-ed by a large assemblage of persons who were con-gated in Hyde Park. His Majesty, in a very brief eech, expressed the pleasure he experienced at again eeting so numerous a company of warriors, whose ertions had been the means of restoring peace to urope, and he declared his determination to maintain at peace by every exertion in his power. Mr. Burford's Panorama of the Isola Bella.—Is cer-inly one of the loveliest pieces of poetry ever put upon anvass. It is sketched in the light of the summer soft ies. Nothing can be more exquisitely bodied forth ien the palace, with its splendid equestrian statue, its rraces, and its prodigality of blooot. Mr. Burford has one more than any man living to make us familiar with e aspect of foreign lands; and the Isola Bella is a lumph both of his taste in selecting, and his skill of xecution.

A duel has taken place in Ceylon, between an officer olding a high military command and a Member of Coun-l—neither party was hit.

It is rumoured that Parliament will be prorogued about the middle of next month, until the beginning of November.

We are glad to find that the St. Ann's Society Schools are to have the benefit of a Fete Champetre and Fancy Sale at the Surrey Zoological Gardens. This Institution is one of the best conducted in the metropolis, and richly deserves the support of the public.

The King of the French has created Captain Basil Hall a Commander of the Order of the Legion of Honour, in consideration of the services he has rendered to the sciences, and particularly those of navigation and astronomy.

British Auxiliary Legion.—Mr. Nugent Macnamara, a Lieutenant in this force, has written a letter respecting Carlist cruelties. He states that, "after the prisoners were taken, seven in number, they were chained to a wall and shot through the shins, through the calves of the legs, and then through the shoulders, and afterwards left to expire in the most excruciating agonies. The unfortunate victims were then stripped, and exposed for fifteen hours. A soldier of the Legion, of the name of Bolton, was treated with even more beastly barbarity—after gouging the unfortunate man's eyes out of his head, he was actually broiled in the presence of his son. Mr. Street, the Commissary, was another martyr to the Durango edict, and many others could be adduced."

A correspondent of the Morning Herald, who dates his letter Villa Franca, June 12, head-quarters of Don Carlos, says, "One anecdote will suffice to show you the feelings of the inhabitants of this part of the provinces, and will completely destroy the fallacious reports spread by the Christino agents, 'that the Bastan is well disposed towards the Queen!' I entered a farm house, about a league and a half south of El sondo; I found in it only an old woman and some children—all the other inmates were working in the fields. I entered into conversation with the venerable peasant. 'You have suffered much,' I observed, 'during the present war, and must be very anxious that it should be brought to a close.' 'Yes, Sir,' was her reply, 'No one knows the extent of all that we have endured since 1833; our granaries were well stored, we had 20 head of cattle, and our income was more than sufficient. Now our barns are empty; four oxen are all we possess to do the work of the farm, and the produce of our land is barely enough to pay the contributions.'—'You would then be glad,' I continued, 'to see an end put to the war at any price?' The old woman shook her head and sighed. I then ventured the great blow. 'Would you accept Isabella as your Queen?' The old woman started from her seat, and looking me full in the face, 'never, never,' she replied, 'I have already lost my only son, who bravely fell fighting by the side of Zumalacarregay; my poor old and almost decrepid husband is now toiling in the field; but should my Sovereign ever require his weak arm, he should joyfully join the army, and I would toil day and night to provide my mite towards the general expenses of my beloved Carlos.' Then turning to three helpless children the tears came into her eyes. 'These innocent babes,' she with difficulty uttered, 'are orphans; but there is a God above, who will protect them and the Monarch, in whose cause the father bled.'"

An evening paper states—"We have reason to believe that the Spanish Government show no disposition to treat, with the consideration they deserve, the eminent services of our gallant countrymen in Spain. General Evans has found himself obliged to return the Grand Cross of the Order of San Fernando, in consequence of the irregular and far from complimentary manner in which it was transmitted to him. We have even heard that General Espartero, his junior in rank, has been placed in command over his head. This is, no doubt, one of the results of Cordova's visit to Madrid. We also are informed that General Evans has remonstrated with the Spanish Government respecting the treatment the Legion has received, intimating, at the same time, that unless more attention is paid to their wants, he may be forced, on the conclusion of the first year's service, on the 1st of July, to claim the protection of his Government, with a view to the return of the Legion to their own country. We sincerely wish that he may put his threat in execution, should his remonstrances not be attended with the desired effect, for we have great reason to think that the liberal part of the Spanish nation are more and more indisposed to all sorts of foreign intervention."

The following are the late promotions to Lieut.-Colonelcies by brevet in this service:—Mr. Horace Beckham, 7th reg., June 6; Mr. W. Wakefield, 1st Lancers, June 14; Mr. W. Martin, 2d Lancers, June 11. The Royal Tar, steamer, will return to St. Sebastian in about a week, with stores and necessaries, and will carry about 170 recruits, principally raised from the discharged St. Helena regiment, lately arrived from that island in the Athol. The General Evans cutter, which sailed lately from Bristol with 150 recruits to St. Sebastian, is daily expected to return. The noble Duke stated that he was wholly dissatisfied with the evidence upon which the measure was founded, and was strongly of opinion that the idea of abolishing the office of Postmaster-general, and appointing commissioners in his stead, was wild and visionary; he should therefore oppose it.—After a conversation on the subject of the Packet Establishment in which the Duke of Richmond, Lord Duncannon, the Marquess of Westmeath, the Earl of Lichfield, Lord Ashburton, and Lord Wallace, took part, the Duke of RICHMOND gave notice that when the Bill came before their Lordships, he should move as an amendment that the fifth report should be referred to a select committee, and he should certainly take the sense of the House upon it.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 20th June.—Mr. G. PRICE asked the Secretary for Foreign Affairs whether this country was at war with one of the belligerent parties now in Spain—and if it was so, either under the name of co-operation, intervention, or non-intervention, whether any cartel had been arranged for the exchange of prisoners, in case His Majesty's troops should be unfortunately among the number? Lord PALMERSTON.—my answer is, that His Majesty's Government is faithfully executing its engagements in Spain, under the articles of the quadruple treaty. Mr. G. PRICE.—That is no answer to my question. My question was this—has there been any arrangement for an exchange of prisoners, in case any of His Majesty's troops should have the misfortune to fall into the hands of one of the belligerent parties? Lord PALMERSTON.—No communication on the subject has taken place with any person authorised by this Government, that I am aware of.—The House then went into committee upon the Stamp and Excise Laws, when the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER moved—"That it is expedient that the duty paid and payable upon every sheet or piece of paper whereon a newspaper is printed, shall in future be one penny, subject to such provisions respecting the size of newspapers, and the printing of supplements, as may hereafter be deemed advisable." Sir C. KNIGHTLEY moved as an amendment, "That instead of the reduction of the Stamp Duty on Newspapers, the Excise Duty on hard soap be reduced from 1½*d.* to 1*d.* per lb., and on soft soap from 1*d.* to ½*d.* per lb. Beaumont, who has been condemned to perpetual banishment in France, and intimated his intention of bringing that gentleman's case before the House.—Colonel THOMPSON presented a petition from the Radical Association of Kingston-upon-Hull against the Poor-law Amendment Act, but it being considered disrespectful in its language, the petition was, after some discussion, withdrawn.—Mr. HUME presented a petition from thirty-four architects who had sent in designs for the New Houses of Parliament. The petitioners set forth several causes of complaint against the commissioners, and prayed to be heard by counsel at the bar of the House; or that the House would be pleased to appoint competent persons to investigate the grounds of the report of the commissioners previously to a final decision upon the aforesaid designs. Mr. HANBURY TRACY defended the conduct of the commissioners, and denied that any favouritism had been shown to any party. —In answer to Lord Sandon, the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER stated that there was no intention of reducing the duty on hohea tea to one shilling.—Lord ERRINGTON presented a petition from Lord Aylmer, relative to his administration of the government of Canada; and at the same time gave notice that he would bring forward his motion for the production of Ld. WEDNESDAY, 22d June.—Mr. RIGBY WASON complained of a resolution (in regard to the Dunbam South West Railway Bill), which was passed on the motion of Mr. HUME without due notice being given to the Members of the Committee, and hoped he would withdraw the resolution. The resolution was withdrawn; but Mr. HUME intimated his intention of bringing it again forward.—On the motion for the further consideration of the Metropolitan Suspension Bridge being read, Mr. TOOKE proposed that it be deferred until that day six months. The amendment was lost by a majority of 79. —Mr. GULLY called the attention of the House to a denial given by Mr. HARDY on a former occasion of his having bribed the electors of Pontefract, and produced a letter in which the Hon. member had himself acknowledged having given 5,000*l.* as "head-money;" Mr. Gully then moved that the letter be laid upon the table, with a view to the appointment of a select committee to inquire into the subject. Mr. HUME then moved that the letter be printed. RUSSELL proposed, after the Tithe Bill, to take the Lords' amendments to the Municipal Corporations (England) Bill.—After that the Charitable Trustees Bill, and then the Pluralities Bill.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—A Toulon letter, of 19th inst, announces that the Minister of the Marine urges with the greatest despatch the rallying of all the vessels composing the squadron which is expected shortly to sail for the Levant. A ship of 100 guns, the Hercule, will be launched at Toulon on the occasion of the fêtes of July. Marshal Clausel has not yet left Paris, as stated by several journals, but is occupied in the capital with important details of military organisation.

SPAIN.—From the Sentinelle des Pyrénées.—Cabrera, with from 7 to 8000 men and 500 cavalry, is every moment expected in Navarre, whence an irruption is to be made across the Ebro. The number of parapets, redoubts, and fortifications of all sorts which the Carlists are raising in the vicinity of Onate, Bergara, Villafranca, and Toloso, is incredible. The Carlist artillery is at Mondragon. The 1st, 4th, and 6th battalions of Navarre are at Salenas de Alava, with Gen. Iturralde. The 1st, 3rd, 4th, and 5th of Alava are at Arsmayona, and the 1st, 2nd, and 4th of Castile, at Durango, under Gen. Eguia.

BELGIUM.—The King and Queen of the Belgians arrived at Paris on Sunday, and after dining with their Majesties and the Royal Family at the Tuileries, accompanied them to Neuilly. The tutors of the Prince of Coburg are going to pass a year at Brussels. The hotel of M. Weston, in the Rue Ducale, has been hired for them. The troops will go into the camp, at Beverloo, at the end of this month, and remain there till the middle of August. They will be composed of 17 battalions of Infantry, two regiments of Cavalry, and some batteries of Artillery.

SYRIA.—On the night of the 14th April a soldier having deserted from the regiment in garrison at Jerusalem, the Commandant held thirty-six of his company responsible for the deserter, and condemned them to 100 strokes of the cane each if the dalinquent was not found within four hours. Upon this two companies revolted, broke open the doors of the Government Palace, and demanded from the Bimberchi the keys of the town and powder magazine. On his telling them that the Governor held the keys, they ran him through with the bayonet, and proceeded to attack the Governor's house, but, finding it barricaded and defended, they went with great noise to the Bethlehem gate, and descended from the walls into the fosse of the town, taking with them their arms and baggage. In the morning of the next day five soldiers were brought in, who, in descending from the walls, had broken their legs or arms; the rest, 400 in number, took the road to Karak. The insurgents are said to have been joined by some Arabs of the desert, and to amount to 15,000 men.

Law and Police.

KING'S BENCH, Monday, 20 June.—Lillie v. Price.—Sir W. Follett stated this to be an action brought by Major Sir John Scott Lillie, against Mr. Price, an attorney, for having sent a letter to a Mrs. Crowe, reflecting on his (the plaintiff's) character. The defendant was the owner of some property at Fulham, and he agreed to grant leases of some part of this property to the husband of Mrs. Crowe, who in a great degree attended to her husband's business, upon which the defendant had written a letter to her, stating, that he understood Sir J. Lillie had been to her husband again and promised to grant him leases, which he had no means of doing; that he did not know a more artful man; that his property was mortgaged for more than it was worth, and he had no more power to grant leases than he (Price) had, and he hoped her husband would not become the dupe. Witnesses were called, who produced the letter and gave evidence of the defendant's having admitted writing it; but upon cross-examination it appeared that the defendant at the time he had written the letter was acting as the attorney for Mr. Crowe. Sir F. Pollock for the defendant, said that this was a privileged communication, it being a letter written by the defendant in the character of an attorney towards his client. Lord Denman interposed, and asked the jury if it was not a communication made by an attorney to his client. It was not a very proper letter, but it was for them to say whether it was not a letter written by an attorney to his client. The Jury immediately found a verdict for the defendant.

INSOLVENT DEBTORS' COURT, June 20.—James Stewart, a Lieutenant in the Navy, was opposed by a creditor of the name of Blackburn. The insolvent had been twenty-seven years in the Navy. In 18[illegible] he had been put on half-pay, and he had subsequently obtained an appointment in the coast blockade service, but had not been able to discharge the duties of it from illness. His half-pay amounted to 91*l.* 5*s.* a-year, out of which he had to support a wife and two children. The application of the creditor was to obtain a portion of the half-pay for the benefit of the creditors. The Court could not apportion any part of the half-pay for the purpose prayed. The effect of their so doing would most probably be to oblige the insolvent again to incur debts, and again to bring him before the Court. He was entitled to be discharged forthwith.

Theatres.

KING'S THEATRE.—The admired opera of Anna Bolena was played for the first time this season on Saturday last, and, owing to the enthusiastic manner in which it was received, repeated on Tuesday. Grisi and the ensemble of the opera were as great as last season, and nothing could be more exquisite than the masterly singing of Rubini in "Vivi te," into which he has introduced the extreme of refinement, and made it one of the most attractive and popular pieces that ever caught the taste of the fashionable world. It was encored on both nights. Mademoiselle Assandri, in Seymour, which was played for the first time, is advancing in public favour. Owing to the importance of the new opera, now in preparation, I Briganti, and the necessity of numerous rehearsals to do it justice, Tamburini has been compelled to postpone his benefit.

COVENT GARDEN.—This theatre prematurely closed a successful season on Wednesday night with Sheridan Knowles' play of the Wife and the Sexton of Cologne. The house was crowded to the ceiling.

STRAND.—On Monday evening we had some difficulty in obtaining a seat, owing to the crowded state of the theatre to witness the performance of the successful burletta, called The Poachers in Petticoats. We have no hesitation in saying, that it is by far the best piece Messrs. Hammond and Jerrold have as yet produced from the very clever manner in which EVERY character in the piece is sustained, we shall feel much surprise if it does not materially enrich the treasury of this theatre. The character which Mrs. Nisbett sustains, affords her an ample opportunity for the display of her powers of pleasing:—she personates, with admirable versatility of talent, the characters of a modern Man of Ton and a simple Country Lass, and in both is seen to great advantage. Mr. Hammond, by his rich humour, renders the part of the Farmer highly amusing; his performance gave the greatest satisfaction. Miss Daly, Miss Fergusson, and Mr. Forrester, have each characters well suited to their talent, and they acquitted themselves admirably to the amusement of the audience. This burletta has been produced in a style which reflects the highest credit upon the managers, and must prove attractive for some time to come. The juvenile performances are a great drawback to the evening's amusement. "Othello's occupation is not gone."

Madame Dulcken and Mr. Moscheles.—These celebrated piano-forte players were to have had a trial of strength at Blagrove's concert on Monday evening, but the gentleman declined playing on the same evening with so formidable a rival. The report in the musical world is that Moscheles was over-matched. Madame Dulcken, therefore, will now rank as the first pianist in England.

THE WRECK OF THE FRANCIS SPAIGHT.

Harrowing Narrative, as related by one of the Crew.

THE Francis Spaight, a fine vessel of 345 tons burden, laden with timber, sailed from St. John's, Newfoundland, on the 24th November. The crew amounted to 14 men, including the captain and mate, many of whom were indifferent hands. Nothing could be finer than the weather for the first 8 or 10 days of the voyage, but it afterwards came on to blow so hard, that they were obliged to drive before the wind under a mizen topsail. At 3 o'clock in the morning of Dec. 3d, an alarm was raised by a cry of confusion on deck, the vessel, it appeared, either having wild, through the carelessness of the helmsman, or perhaps from her bad trim, suddenly broached to, and fell like a log in the trough of the sea. In less than an hour she lay on her beam ends, the greater part of her crew saving themselves by climbing on her side, and clinging to the rigging. Pat. Cusack and Pat. Behane, however, were drowned in the forecastle, and William Smith, the mate, in the after cabin, into which he had fallen accidentally only a few minutes before. Having cut the fore and mizen mast away the ship almost immediately righted. As soon as she righted, being already filled with water, she settled down in the sea, and there was scarcely a portion of her to be seen except the poop and the quarks. Sea after sea rolled successively over them; they knew not the full horror of their condition until the dawn of the morning. They then discovered that their provisions had been washed overboard, and as the casks were filled by the sea, they had no means of procuring at any fresh water. The gale continued on unabating through the morning, and about 10 o'clock in the forenoon a vessel was suddenly descried to the westward, and for some time it was thought possible her course might be near them, but she stood far away beyond the reach of signal, and was soon out of sight. That day and the next passed away without the slightest change in the weather. On the third it began to moderate, . . . .

Their greatest suffering was hunger, or rather a sinking of the stomach, and from thirst, neither of which had any conceivable means of allaying. There were 15 men alive, and of these not one had tasted a morsel of food since the wreck; and for drink they had only three bottles of wine, which were found in the cabin; this was served out in wine-glasses at long intervals. In seven days after the appearance of the first vessel, another was seen on the weather-quarter outward bound, and only 4 miles north. The hopes of the crew were again revived, but their anxiety was intense for a short time. An ensign was hoisted on the mizen-mast, and part of a sail; the day was very clear, and she could not but see it, at least the wretched men thought so; but she bore away from the former, and was soon lost to their view. How they lived through the succeeding five days it would be hard to tell, but no one tasted food: some few endeavoured to eat the horn buttons of their jackets, the only substitute for nutriment that occurred to them.

On the 19th Dec., the 16th day since the wreck, the captain came off deck and addressed them about their miserable condition. He said they were now such a length of time without sustenance that it was beyond human nature to endure it any longer—they were already on the brink of the grave, and that the only question for them to consider was, whether one or all should die? His opinion was that one should suffer for the rest, and that lots should be drawn between the four boys, as they had families, and could not be considered so great a loss to their friends as those who had wives and children depending on them. The lot having been cast, it fell upon a boy named O'Brien. The poor fellow heard the announcement without uttering a word. The men now told him he must prepare for death, and the Captain said it was better it should be done by bleeding him in the arm, to which O'Brien made no objection. The Captain then directed the cook, Gorman, to do it, telling him it was his duty—but Gorman strenuously refused. He was, however, threatened with death himself by the men, if he continued obstinate, and he at last consented. O'Brien then took off his jacket without waiting to be desired, and after telling the crew, if any of them ever reached home, to tell his poor mother what happened to him, bared his right arm. The cook cut his veins across twice with a small knife, but could bring no flow of blood. They were relieved by the boy himself, who immediately desired the cook to give him the knife. When he got the knife, and was about to cut the vein, the Captain recommended him to try his left arm, which he accordingly did. He attempted to open the vein at the bend of the elbow with the point of the knife, as a surgeon would, but, like the cook, he failed in bringing blood. The Captain said, "This is all of no use, 'tis better to put him out of pain by at once bleeding him in the throat." At this O'Brien for the first time looked terrified, and begged hard that they would not do so. To this wish there was some expression of dissent from the men. O'Brien now roused, and driven to extremity, seemed working himself up for resistance, and declared he would not let them; the first man, he said, who laid hands on him, 'twould be worse for him; that he'd appear to him at another time; that he'd haunt him after death. The poor youth was, however, among so many, soon got down, and the cook was once again called upon to put him to death. The man now refused more strenuously than before, but weak and irresolute, and seeing that his own life would absolutely be taken instead of O'Brien's, if he persisted, he at length yielded to their menaces. Pale and trembling, he stood over O'Brien, who was still endeavouring to free himself from those who held him. One of them now placed the cover of the tureen under the boy's neck, to save the blood, and several cried out to the cook to do his duty. The horror-stricken man over and over again endeavoured to summon up hardihood for the deed; but when he caught the boy's eye his heart always failed him, and then he looked supplicatingly to the men again. Their cries and threats were, however, loud for death—he made a desperate effort—there was a short struggle, and O'Brien was no more.

As soon as this horrid act was perpetrated, the blood was served to the men; but a few of them, among whom was Mahony, refused to partake of it. They afterwards laid open the body, and separated the limbs; the latter were hung over the stern, while a portion of the former was allotted to immediate use. Shocked as, for the sake of human nature, it is to be hoped many were at the scene they had just witnessed, a gnawing hunger came upon them all when they saw even this disgusting meal put out for them, and almost every one, even the unwilling boys, partook more or less of it. This was the evening of the 16th day. They then lay down to rest, but several were raving and talking wildly through the night, and in the morning the cook was observed to be quite insane. His raving continued during the succeeding night, and in the morning the veins of his neck were cut and the blood drawn from him. This was the second death. On the night of that day Michael Behane was mad, and the boy George Burns on the following morning; they were both so violent that they were obliged to be tied by the crew, and the latter was eventually bled to death. Michael Behane died unexpectedly, or he would have suffered the same fate. Next morning the Captain came off deck, and feeling too weak and exhausted to keep a look-out any longer, desired some one to take his place above. Harrington and Mahony went up very soon after; the latter thought he could distinguish a sail, and raised a shout of joy, upon which those below immediately came up. A ship was clearly discernible, and apparently bearing her course towards them. Signals were hoisted with as much alacrity as the weakness of the survivors would allow, and when she approached, and was almost within hail, their apprehension of her passing by, like the former vessel, was so great, that they held up the hands and feet of O'Brien to excite commiseration. The vessel proved to be the Agenoria, an American. She put off a boat to their assistance without any hesitation, although the weather was so rough at the time, and there seemed to be such an apprehension of its swamping, that the crew came out in their shirts. The survivors of the Francis Spaight were all at length safely got on board the American, where they were treated with the utmost kindness.

Sir Walter Scott, in one of his letters, lately brought to light, alluding to his fondness for planting and agriculture, playfully says, "I promise you my oaks will outlast my laurels; and I pique myself more on my compositions for manure, than on any other compositions whatsoever to which I was ever accessory."

VICTORIA.—BY MR. CLANCEY.

Fair daughter of England, well proud mayest thou be
Of the shouts that arise with the cup filled to thee!
No echoes are they of lip-homage alone,
'Tis the heart of a nation that calls thee its own—
The voice of a people, who feel that thy name
Presages a future, well worthy the fame
That for ages hath followed—through storm and through shine, (God grant it may ever!) their banner and thine—
Victoria!
Victoria! Oh! in thy name is a spell,
All discord to banish, all faction to quell!
And rally the valiant, the wise, and the good,
Round the throne that, as yet, hath each tempest withstood."
That throne—shall it ever to ruin be hurled,
On which anchor'd so long the best hopes of a world?
No! Brightly beside it ariseth thy star,
And our hope is to peace, as our shield was to war,
"Victoria!"

A person complaining to Dr. Parr, "I believe I am inoculated with dulness to-day." Parr replied, "Indeed! I always thought you had it in the natural way." Another, thinking to flatter the Doctor by saying, "It would require many volumes to contain all you know;" "It would require many more to contain all you do not," was Parr's mannerless answer.

Ole Bull.—Mr. T. Cooke, who is an inveterate and hardened punster, in answer to a question where Mr. Ole Bull came from, said, "from Cowes." Punning, like mocking, is catching. "Yes," said our friend Parry, "and when he was dining lately at Ox-furd, a cockney present observed—'Did you heifer see a better calver.'"

The celebrated Colonel Crocket is no more. He fell as a warrior of his redoubted character should, in war in Texas. The following is the state in which the deceased, "half horse, half alligator," fell:—"Crocket was found (within the Alamo, a fort,) in an angle made by two houses, lying on his back, a frown on his brow, and a smile of scorn on his lips; his knife in his hand, a dead Mexican lying across his body, and twenty-two more lying pell-mell before him in the angle."

This Company, from its various plans of accommodation, affords greater facility to parties wishing to insure than any establishment of the kind in London.

1. Premiums may be paid quarterly, half-yearly, or annually.
2. Insurers for Life, and on the regular Scale, may leave half the Annual Premium for five years unpaid, at interest, to be deducted eventually from the Policy, or paid off at convenience.
3. The ascending and descending scales apply equally to the opulent and those of limited income, and the moderate and judicious rates of this Company well deserve the attention of the public.

Insurances from Parties residing in the Country may be effected by corresponding with the resident Director, EDWARD BOYD, Esq., at the Office, No. 3, Waterloo-place, Pall-mall, London; or by application to any of the Agents in the country.

An Operative Tradesmen, 25 years of age, may secure to his Family at death £100, by paying Quarterly 16s. 7d., or 1l. 18s. 5d. Annually.

Tradesmen very often loose large sums by young Noblemen and Gentlemen dying previous to the parties whose estates or property they would inherit. such losses may be easily avoided by insuring the younger life against the older, at a trifling expense. For instance, the Premium to be paid, if 30 predeceases 60, would only be 1l. 1s. 4d. per cent.; 30 against 70, 1l. 6s. 7d. per cent.; and in the like proportion for the different ages.

TO PREVENT FRAUD.

THORN'S POTTED YARMOUTH BLOATERS, for Toast, Biscuits, Sandwiches, and Wine, in Pots, 1s. and 2s. each. The high repute and immense sale of this delicate preparation has induced several would-be tradesmen (who not having an idea of their own) to attempt an imposition by labelling a pot exactly like his, thereby to deceive the public and injure him, (having actually applied to his printer for that purpose;) well knowing they cannot prepare the Fish, the receipt being an old family one, and the secret in the curing of the Herring, by which its rancid qualities are destroyed, and it becomes so delicious a relish. It is easily detected by observing his signature, ALEX. THORN, on the side, and on the top, Proprietor of the celebrated TALLY HO! SAUCE, for Fish, Game, Steaks, Wild Fowl, and all Made Dishes, imparting a zest not otherwise acquired—the most economical now in use; in Bottles, 2s. and 4s. each, warranted in all climates. Wholesale at the Manufactory, Thorn's Oil, Italian, and Foreign Warehouse, 223, High Holborn; also of all wholesale oilmen and druggists; and retail by all respectable oilmen, grocers, and druggists in the United Kingdom.

LONDON and PORTSMOUTH RAILWAY DIRECT, with a Branch to CHICHESTER and BOGNOR, proposed to terminate in capacious DOCKS at PORTSMOUTH.

CAPITAL—1,200,000l., in 24,000 Shares of 50l. each.—Deposit, 2l. per Share.

The Provisional Committee are proceeding with the necessary arrangements connected with the Branch advertised to Chichester, and an active survey of the line is being prosecuted for carrying into effect the original intention of this Company for constructing the intended Railway between LONDON and PORTSMOUTH by the most DIRECT and practicable line, as they have throughout acted under the conviction that any other, or more circuitous line must only entail on the passengers and transit of goods between those places additional cost of conveyance in proportion to the extra length adopted, without any corresponding benefit being derived. The Reports from the Surveyors on the line continue to be of the most favourable character, and it is well ascertained that neither Tunnel nor any formidable excavations will be necessary, and that the DIRECT line, via Guildford, Godalming, &c., will, to the great advantage of the Shareholders and the Public, be most easily practicable.

The promoters of, and the Provisional Committee of Management of this undertaking, abstain from fully publishing the maps, &c. until the results of the surveys will enable them to lay the exact route of the main line itself, and of the respective branches in detail before the public, so that efficient means of investigation may be afforded, which can alone secure public support and the sanction of the legislature.

Any information required, may be obtained at the Office of the Company, No. 7, John-street, Adelphi, where applications for Shares will be received (if by letter, post paid), and also of the Company's Agent at Portsmouth, J. N. Robinson, Esq.; or at Portsea, of Archibald Low, Esq., Solicitor.

PROSPECTUS OF THE DEPOSIT & LOAN BANK COMPANY.—CAPITAL, £500,000,
With power to increase the same, if necessary.
In 100,000 Shares of 5l. each. Deposit, 1l. per Share. The remaining 4l. to be paid in two Instalments, namely, 2l. per share at each call, of which two months' notice shall be given.
Office, pro. tem., No. 39, Essex Street, Strand.
Secretary, Mr. W. MONTAGUE.

THE object of this Company is to afford the means of immediate pecuniary assistance to every one (of whatever station in life) who will deposit satisfactory security, in goods or otherwise, for the repayment of the Sums advanced, with equitable remuneration for the same, during such period as the loan may be required.

The extensive business transacted by those already engaged in lending money on deposits, and their immense profits, are themselves sufficient reasons for the establishment of a Deposit and Loan Bank; but pecuniary facilities, such as this Company will be enabled to afford to every class of Society, by means of their large Capital and resources, are not at present attainable through the ordinary channels of deposit and loan.

It is intended that the laws, enacted for the regulation of those persons who are already occupied in similar pursuits, shall be scrupulously observed by this Company.

The abrogation or partial repeal of the Usury Laws, recognising the principle that "those who lend money are entitled to an equitable remuneration;" and the Company will avail itself of the advantages to be derived by a fair, just, and honourable observance of this principle.

The business of the Deposit and Loan Bank will be divided into several departments—all of them to be conducted on such a liberal scale, as will be consistent with the accommodation of the public generally, and the protection of the interests of the Shareholders.

Among the advantages to the Shareholders, it is intended that every one holding five or more Shares may make deposits of money at any time with the Company (agreeably to a scale hereafter to be determined), for which he shall be entitled to, and shall receive as interest thereon, 5l. per cent. per annum. And such Shareholders (holding two or more shares) who require pecuniary accommodation, shall always be entitled thereto, and shall not be called upon for a higher rate of interest than 7l. per cent. per annum, upon any loan they may obtain by the deposit of their goods, &c., as security.

Arrangements are making to extend to the Provinces the benefits offered by this Company, Branches of which will be established in most of the principal Towns throughout the Empire.

Applications for Shares to be addressed (post paid) to the Secretary.

A second Prospectus will be ready for delivery in a few days.
W. MONTAGUE, Secretary.
39, Essex-street, Strand, May 15, 1839.

MESSRS. DELCROIX & CO., Perfumers to their Majesties and the Royal Family, beg leave to inform the Nobility and Gentry that they have now completed their SPRING STOCK of NEW and FASHIONABLE PERFUMERY, and have also just imported, from Paris and the South of France, a choice selection of the most approved articles of the day. They respectfully recommend the following esteemed preparations to the attention of their Patrons and the Public:—

Delcroix's celebrated Esprit de Lavande aux Milleflours, for the pocket handkerchief.

Delcroix's Vegetable Extract, for cleansing and beautifying the hair.

Delcroix's Aromatic Mecca, Almond, Rose, Camphor, and Vegetable Soaps.

Delcroix's much esteemed Old Brown and White Windsor Soaps.

Delcroix's long approved Circassian Opiate, for preserving the teeth and gums from decay.

Delcroix's Genuine Russian Bears' Grease and Huiles Antique.

Messrs. D. and C. have recently obtained Injunctions from the Court of Chancery preventing certain parties from selling a spurious imitation of their Esprit de Lavande aux Milleflours and Vegetable Extract, both of which will in future bear their signature on the labels, and their address, 158, New Bond-street, on the back of the bottles.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove:—

"Sir,—For many years I suffered by Corns; latterly I felt such excruciating pain, having five on my left foot, that the frequent bathing, paring, and filing of them in no way relieved me. For months I could not wear boots, and for ten or twelve days not even shoes. I tried ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN SOLVENT, of which I find you are the Proprietor: after using it two days, I could wear shoes, in four days, one of the Corns, the most painful, was entirely eradicated. By this one I suffered more in particular, as it was between my toes. I have in a week after, and since, been able to wear boots. Having experienced this benefit in eight Corns in my own person, and having recommended this SOLVENT to many Patients of mine, who all have been cured, I deem it but just to give you this testimony, to use it as you may think proper. I am, Sir, your obedient servant, D. EGHAN, Surgeon Dentist."

1, Southampton-street, Strand,
16th March, 1836."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely ineffectious but mischievous: it is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Sold by J. A. Sharwood, 85, Bishopsgate Without, in Bottles, at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.; and, by appointment, by most Medicine Vendors.

Immediate and soothing relief afforded to the Skin and Complexion, in cases of Tan, Sun Burns, &c., by

HEALTH, BEAUTY, and LONG LIFE.—An eminent medical writer has remarked, and experience has proved the fact beyond dispute, that those who are attentive to keeping the Stomach and Bowels in proper order, preserve health, prevent disease, and generally attain robust, cheerful, and healthy Old Age. For that truly desirable purpose are particularly adapted, being prepared with the Sulphate of Quinine, Extract of Chamomile Flowers, and the most choice stomachic and aperient drugs of the Materia Medica.

They have in all cases proved superior to every other medicine in the cure of Stomach and Liver Complaints, Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Sensation of Fulness, Sick Head-ache, Pain and Oppression after Meals, Habitual Costiveness, Flatulence, Shortness of Breath, Stomach Coughs, Spasms, Worms, and Fits in Children and Grown Persons, and all Disorders incident to the Stomach and Bowels. They are also truly efficacious in the cure of Colds, Agues, Asthmas, Rheumatism, Gout, Jaundice, Dropsy, and Gravel, and an excellent restorative after any excess or too free indulgence at table, as they gently cleanse the bowels, strengthen the stomach, sweeten the breath, cheer the spirits, brace the nerves, induce a healthy action of the liver, improve digestion, and invigorate the whole system. Females who value good health and personal appearance, should never be without them, as they purify the blood, remove obstructions, pimples, cutaneous eruptions, sallowness, &c., and give the skin a beautiful, clear, healthy, and blooming appearance. Persons of a plethoric habit who are subject to head-ache, fits, giddiness, dimness of sight, or drowsiness, ringing noise in the ears, which indicate too great a flow of blood to the head, should be particular to take them frequently. They are so mild and gentle in their action that children and persons of all ages may take them at any time, as they do not contain mercury or any ingredient that requires confinement or restriction of diet. Many healthy aged individuals, several of them highly distinguished Members of the Royal College, who know their value, make it a rule to take them two or three times a week, by which they remove the causes that produce disease, preserve their health, and keep off the infirmities of age, retaining, in a surprising degree, all the energy, vigour, vivacity, and cheerfulness of their youthful days. They should be kept in every family as a remedy in case of sudden illness, for, by their prompt administration, cholera morbus, cramps, spasms, fevers, apoplexy, and other alarming complaints, which too often prove fatal, may be speedily cured or prevented. Numerous patients, whose cases had been considered hopeless, have been restored to sound health by them. This can be proved by the testimony of thousands, and shown by letters from numerous patients who have benefited by their unrivalled efficacy. To describe all their excellent properties, and the cures they have performed, would fill volumes, and exceed credibility: in fact, there is scarcely any disease to which the human frame is subject that they will not either prevent or cure, and none in which they can possibly do harm.

Prepared only by J. W. STIRLING, Chemist, 86, High Street, Whitechapel, in Boxes at 1s½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each, and may be had of all the principal Medicine Vendors in the Kingdom.

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL, unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, preserving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, rendering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and sustaining it in curl under the different varieties of atmosphere.

Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO.,
Perfumers to the Royal Family, No. 63, Oxford Street, London.

Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and Co. were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to the Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individual who, divulged it to them, or whose head would inevitably have paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties successively employed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn oaths of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three centuries.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed the greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and most uncivilised countries great value is set upon a fine head of hair. The great care is proverbial that is paid to the cultivation of the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Sarem, and art is there well known to succeed in outrivalling even the far-famed beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during the period of three centuries, and has been found undeviatingly successful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, soft, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess (as is done in some instances) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair upon cast iron—it will do no such thing; but, if regularly applied, it will reproduce the hair where nature ordained its existence, if lost from those causes to which baldness is referable; it will promote the growth of the hair generally,

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY,

sustain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a brilliant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a pure LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, unsophisticated with the deleterious articles usually employed to dye Oils red, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the hair, and although an oily substance, the

and is therefore free from the general complaint against every other article in present use for the same purpose, including those filthy substances miscalled Bears' Grease, which are neither more nor less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil submitted to various manipulations to divest them of the lethal animal smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform principle. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dews of the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprive it of which it soon withers and dies; so the hair, unless properly nourished, becomes weak and gradually drops off, for, minute as a single hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human hair will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface covered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, and which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tendency, the hair is destroyed thereby: thus it will be observed that those persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in life, which is merely caused by the acid caustic nature of the perspiration settling on the hair and being absorbed, which entirely destroys it; but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will prevent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury; and if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely removes the scurf, without the assistance of the dandruff combs, an operation so distressing to the heads of children.

Price 3s. 6d., 6s. 6d., and in pint bottles, with glass stoppers, 12s. each.

N.B.—HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL is particularly recommended to the notice of Merchants and Shippers Trading to the East and West Indies, being the only article for the hair that will survive a voyage to the East without turning rancid.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Soulfil, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, 72, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sons, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lasenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c., &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

SARSAPARILLA.

"Great praise is due to Mr. Hillyard for his very clever and much needed preparation of Sarsaparilla. His mode of preparing it preserves the necessary active qualities, which, according to the old mode, were allowed to evaporate, thus rendering it one of the most sure, as well as simple, remedies in purifying the blood."—United Service Gazette.

"In justice to one of the many preparers of Sarsaparilla, we must give the meed of praise to Hillyard's condensed preparation, knowing some friends of ours who have received much benefit from its use."—Fraser's Literary Chronicle.

Prepared only by Hillyard, chemist, 59, Oxford-street, five doors from Berners-street, and sold by him wholesale and retail; and retail by the following Agents—Pront, Strand; Willoughby, 61, Bishopsgate Without. Observe—Half-pints, 2s. 6d.; pints, 4s., quarts, 7s., being less than half the price of any other preparation of the kind, and the strongest ever made.

Admiralty, Somerset-Place, June 24th 1836.

HALF-PAY and RETIRED-PAY to NAVAL OFFICERS and OFFICERS of the ROYAL MARINES.—Notice is hereby given, That on the receipt in the Wages Department, at the Admiralty Office, Somerset-Place, of the Declaration or Certificate of Identity required from each officer by his Majesty's Orders in Council, a Bill for the amount of the half-pay or retired pay due will be made out in this Department, which will be payable by the Treasurer of his Majesty's Navy, on the following days, viz.—

On the 11th and 12th July, to Masters, Surgeons, and Pursers, and their Attorneys.

On the 13th, 14th, and 15th July, to Lieutenants at 5s. and under, and their Attorneys.

On the 16th and 18th of July, to Lieutenants at 7s. and 6s. a day, and Chaplains, and their Attorneys.

On the 20th, 21st, and 22nd of July, to Admirals, Lieutenant-Generals, Major-Generals, Colonels, Lieutenant-Colonels, Majors, Captains, Commanders, and Retired Commanders, and their Attorneys.

Great inconvenience having been experienced by the claims of officers, who have not chosen to receive their half-pay or retired-pay on the days fixed for their rank, being brought forward on the days appointed for the payment of half-pay and retired pay to officers of different ranks, notice is hereby given that no such claims can in future be attended to on the days not appointed for officers of those ranks; but for the accommodation of such officers, and also for the convenience of those who may not have transmitted their Declarations or Certificates sufficiently early to admit of payment on the above-mentioned days, a recal will take place on the 25th and 26th of July; after which the half-pay and retired-pay will be payable on the first and third Wednesdays in every Month, excepting during the general payment.

Officers residing in or near London, and wishing to receive their half-pay or retired-pay in person, are requested to deliver their Declarations or Certificates into the Wages Office, at the Admiralty, Somerset Place, or transmit them to the Secretary of the Admiralty, immediately on the expiration of each quarter; and those employing agents, are also requested to furnish their agents with their Declarations or Certificates, with the same dispatch, for unless such documents are delivered into this Office early, delay in the payment must unavoidably ensue.

As it sometimes happens that officers apply, personally, for their half-pay or retired-pay, without having previously sent in their Declarations or Certificates as required by the usual advertisement, any delay or inconvenience to which they might be subject by this oversight it is in the power of the officers themselves to prevent, by an adherence to the existing regulations.

Under the authority of the statutes relating to the pay of the Navy (besides the above-mentioned modes), officers may receive their half-pay or retired-pay in any of the following ways, viz.—

1st. By drawing a bill for the amount, in which case they are to give notice thereof by letter to the Secretary of the Admiralty, marked in the corner "Half-Pay or Retired-Pay Accountant-General," and thereupon a proper form of a Bill of Exchange will be sent to them. 2d. By a Remittance Bill or permanent Remittance Bill, payable to them at or in the neighbourhood of their residence by the Collector of Customs or Excise. 3d. By extract, at a Dock-Yard, where there is an establishment of Pay Clerks.

In either of which two latter cases they must give alike notice to the Secretary of the Admiralty marked in the same manner, and a Remittance Bill or Extract will thereupon be made out and transmitted to them. In all cases, the officer signifying his desire of payment is to state at the foot of his letter his Christian and Surnames, his rank, and a full description of his residence.

MEM.—Bills of Exchange drawn under or by virtue of the Act 5 Geo. 4, cap. 20, are not liable to the Stamp Duty.

CAVALRY.

2d Life Gds.—On Wednesday was shot, at Knightsbridge barracks, poor old Jack, the only remaining horse in the reg. at the battle of Waterloo. Jack carried his master through the perils of that day safely, and escaped without wound or cut. At every commemoration Jack was dressed in laurels and paraded proudly in front. On the 18th ult. he was again honoured; but, alas! it was destined to be his last glory. Age was fast coming on him, his legs swelled, his eyes got dire; but we are perfectly sure he was quite aware when the 18th June returned, and why he was adorned with laurels. It was a pity to shoot him; it might be to save him from the infirmities of age, or to save others the trouble of attending him.

ROYAL ARTILLERY, Hd.-Qrs.—Qr.-Mr. Sj. Steele met with a serious accident while in charge of a fatigue party [illegible] move some furniture belonging to Capt. Gordon, on the 23d ult., by one of the horses starting; and in endeavouring to seize the reign, he fell, and the horse on him, and broke his collar-bone and arm. He was immediately conveyed on a litter to the hospital, where he remains without the least hope of recovery. Gunner Mc Pea of the F. B., has been tried by General Court-Martial for wounding a N.-C. officer with his sabre, selling his kit, and drunkenness; the Court sat two days, and the sentence has been sent up to town to be confirmed. Gunners Jennings and Morriesee, of Major Walker's company, 9th batt., have been tried by a garrison Court-Martial for selling their kits and other necessaries. The garrison paraded on Wednesday, when Jennings was sentenced to receive 150 lashes, and Morrison was consigned to Bristol and hard labour for 14 days. Jennings was such a decided bad character and disposing of his necessaries, that the Serjeant had to lock up his kit in the arm-chest, but coming off guard, this precaution was forgotten, when he went, in the course of a few minutes, and sold every thing he had, including his great coat. A body of fine recruits arrived here on Monday. On Tuesday last three battalions were inspected by the Commander Major-General Sir J. Macleod; and the gallant officer will inspect the other battalions next week, as the Master-General does not intend to visit Woolwich for that purpose. Lt. Captain Locke takes command of a company in Ireland by the promotion from 2nd Capt. at Woolwich.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.—Corporal Reddick died on the 25th suddenly, and has left 800*l.* in the bank to support his children. The Colonel commanding immediately had them brought into barracks, and placed under the care of a N.-C. Officer's wife. 20 men have been drafted for the service of the Queen of Spain, and embarked yesterday. Col. Thackeray arrived in Limerick from Dublin and the Lower Shannon last week, after inspecting the forts and fortifications in his tour. He visited the New barracks, Artillery barracks, and Castle barracks, which were found in a state equal to his wishes, and left for Templemore garrison, on his return to Dublin. Capt. Heath succeeds Capt. Gordon at Limerick.

Major-Gen. Greves is appointed Barrack-Master at Norwich, vice Sir Freeman Barton, whose decease was recorded in our last. Capt. R. Vivian, late of 66th, succeeds Capt. Gill as Barrack-master at Sheffield.

Lieut.-Col. Cuyler, Military Secretary to the Major-Gen. commanding in Ireland, is in England on leave.

[We have much pleasure in publishing the following GENERAL ORDER. The latter is our last number upon the claims of good soldiers for their Discharge, cannot escape the consideration of the excellent General at the head of the Army.—ED.]

Lord Hill finds it expedient to revise and extend the benefits of the regulation under which the soldier of good character is indulged with permission to purchase his discharge upon the recommendation of his commanding officer. His Lordship is convinced that the popularity of the military service generally, and the success of the recruiting service cannot fail to be greatly increased by granting that indulgence to as liberal an extent as may be consistent with the due maintenance of the efficiency of the army. With this conviction upon his mind, Lord Hill earnestly recommends to commanding-officers of regiments and depots not to refuse their support to any case of application for discharge for the regulated compensation, in which the applicant's conduct shall be unexceptionable. The want of a moderate number of men to complete the rank and file of a regiment ought not of itself to be the means of disappointing a deserving soldier of his discharge, there being no difficulty in obtaining recruits even at the present low rate of bounty. Lord Hill will accordingly watch the future operation of the admirable system of discharge for compensation, and will give his decision in favour of every case in which the commanding officer shall not submit circumstantial proof of the unworthiness of the applicant, it being always understood that exigencies may arise to render the total suspension of the grant of discharges absolutely necessary, such as the embarkation of a regiment for active service. His Lordship will on these occasions ascertain the number of men wanting to complete, by reference to the last return of the regiment to which the applicant belongs. Although the regulation in question was framed to reward the good and efficient soldier only, yet experience has proved that the army derives great advantage from the occasional discharge, for the regulated compensation, of men of ir-

…ual character, and whose habits may have rendered them …menently inefficient, as well as men who have been too …g in a state of desertion to be again fit for the ranks. All …s of the above nature are to be specially submitted by …mmanding officers for Lord Hill's decision; and his Lord… …p expects that he shall frequently have it in his power to …encumber regiments of men of this description without …judice to the discipline of the service. By command of …Right Honourable General Lord Hill, Commanding-in-…ief.

JOHN MACDONALD, Adjutant-General.

Major-General Sir George Elder has, we are happy to …ceive, been appointed to the Staff of Madras. A the… …ugh soldier of service, and riddled with wounds, this dis… …nguished officer is one of a class to whom favour belongs …right, and towards whom jealousy is dumb. Danger… …sly wounded at the storming of Badajoz, and struggling …ith locked-jaw, Sir George was rescued from death only …y the unremitting attention and skill of Dr. Chas. Forbes, …ep. Insp. Gen. of Hospitals.—United Service Journal.

[We extract the above as a tribute justly due to the distin…uished General, and equally so to the talented and kind… …Dr. Forbes.—ED.]

The embarkations of drafts for the army of His Majesty, …om Chatham, have been completed this week, and the …llowing number of officers and men has now sailed for …ndia:—In the Exmouth, 8 officers and 239 men, consist… …ng of detachments for Madras of the 13th Lt. Dragoons, …he 39th, 41st, 45th, 54th, 55th, 57th, 62d, and 63d In… …ntry, under the command of Capt. Parr, 54th regiment. …n the True Briton, as guard with Sir P. Maitland, 1 offi… …er and 13 men, of the 13th Lt. Dragoons, for Madras. In …he Royal Admiral, 8 officers and 149 men, consisting of …drafts for Bombay, of the 4th Lt. Dragoons, the 2nd and …0th Infantry, under the command of Captain Piggott, …6th reg. In the Java, 26 officers and 348 men, composed …f drafts for Bengal of the 11th and 16th Lt. Dragoons, the …3d, 9th, 18th, 16th, 26th, 31st, 44th, and 49th Infantry, …nder the command of Capt. Burchell, of the Buffs. The Java touches at Madras to land several officers, for whom …accommodation could not be furnished in the Exmouth or True Briton. In the Lady Feversham, 4 officers and 75 men, consisting of drafts for Bombay, of the 6th and 17th Infantry, under the command of Lieut. Beebee, of the 6th reg. Total for the three Presidencies of Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, 46 officers and 824 men, from the depots at Maidstone and Chatham.

Names of Infantry officers embarked in the Exmouth, True Briton, Java, Royal Admiral, and Lady Feversham:—3d foot, Lieut. Spake, Ensign Piercy; 3d foot, Capt. Burchell, Lieut. Whitworth; 6th foot, Lieut. Beebee; 9th foot, Ensigns Elmhirst, Morgan, and Pirie; 13th foot, Ens. Mein; 16th foot, Lieut. Gibbs; 17th foot, Lt. Mathews and Ens. Powell; 26th foot, Capt. Piggott, Lt. Pairso, Ensign Robsoo; 39th foot, Lieut. Stokes, Ensigns Humphreys, Wolfe, Marshall, and Croker; 40th foot, Ens. Armstrong and Lee; 41st foot, Lieut. Hill, Ensigns Burgh and Lowrance; 44th foot, Ensigns Cumberland and Shelton; 45th foot, Ensigns Graves, Blenkiesopp, and Cuffe; 49th foot, Ensign Michell; 54th foot, Capt. Parr; 55th foot, Lieut. Butler; 57th foot, Ensigns Lynch and Stanley; 63d foot, Ens. Leothom.

The following depots of Indian regiments are now without Captains, and the companies are in charge of Subalterns belonging to other corps, viz.—the 2d, 3d, 13th, 17th, 26th, 40th, 44th, 45th, 62d, and 63d regs. Neither the Queen's, the 17th, the 40th, nor the 62d depots, have been commanded by Captains for the last year, except the 40th for the space of about six weeks. The 13th, 44th, and 63d depots have been, during the greater part of the last twelve months, without Captains present.

Chatham garrison is so much reduced by the embarkation of the Marines, the Convict Guards from the 80th, and the drafts from the Indian depots, that, though Sir L. Greenwell has struck off every sentry possible, the men are on guard every third day. The only guard which is still unreduced is that in the Dock-yard, which consists of 1 Capt., 3 Subalts., 3 Serjeants, 6 Corporals, 1 Drummer, and 69 Privates. This is, of all the guards, the one which might be best reduced, for there is a very effective and strong police inside, and it seems quite superfluous to have a sentry and a policeman within a few yards of each other, as is at present the case in Chatham Dock-yard. At most a guard of 24 men would be ample, and we believe that this number has been recommended to the Admiralty as the future strength. It is only of late years that this guard has been increased. We well remember some years ago when it was a small one, and commanded by a Subaltern. If the guards were reduced in the Dock (as now they are in the Garrison), one of the four company depots might be withdrawn, and yet leave sufficient men for the duties. Why are men taken from this garrison for Tilbury Fort? Why not send men from Woolwich and make it an Artillery Detachment? At present the 20th depot is stationed there. There is a company of the 80th at Harwich, which should be called in for duty here.

Sir H. Vivian was to be at Chatham yesterday, to examine the relative merits of the Pontoons of Col. Paisley and those of Capt. Blanchard. General opinion at Chatham is in favour of Blanchard's.

The 80th regiment has made a very favourable report of the detonators which were sent for trial. The results, as reported from the regiments, quite bear out the favourable report made from Woolwich. When are we to be rid of our present flash-in-the-pan muskets?

The preliminary survey of the coast of South Australia has been intrusted to Lieut.-Col. Light, one of the aides-de-camp to the Duke of Wellington during the Peninsular War, who has been appointed Surveyor-General of the Colony.

PLYMOUTH, July 1st.—(From our own Correspondent)—Lieut.-Gen. Sir P. Maitland and Staff, Lady Sarah Maitland, children, and servants embarked in the True Briton on Sunday evening, and sailed for Madras. Asia, 84, sailed for Plymouth same day. The Maitland and Katherine Stewart Forbes, transports, sailed for Cork on Monday. The Athol troop-ship came from Chatham on Wednesday; on Thursday she took on board the Depot Companies of the 99th Regt. from Gosport, and proceeded with them to Devonport on Friday (this day). Cornwallis, 74, came up in Spithead from Plymouth on Thursday in charge of Com. Ogle. Capt. Sir J. R. Rowley, Bart., joined her this day. The Volcano steam-vessel was launched from the dock-yard on Thursday. She is built on the same plan as the Hermes, and of the following dimensions:—length, 150 ft. 8 in.; ditto for tonnage, 128 ft. 7. 7-8th in.; breadth, 32 ft. 9 3-8th in.; ditto for tonnage, 32 ft. 5. 3-8th in.; depth in hold, 18 ft. ½ in. half; tonnage, 720; draught of water, 8 ft. She was afterwards taken into dock to be coppered, and will be sent to Woolwich to have her engines, paddles, &c., fitted. H.M. brig Rapid, Lieut. F. Pallen, arrived last night from South America. She quitted Rio Janeiro on the 8th May, and has brought a freight of about 800,000 dollars. We are sorry to state, that Capt. G. W. Willes has been compelled, on account of illness, to resign the command of the Dublin, and return to England in the Rapid; he landed this day somewhat improved by the voyage. The Rapid awaits orders to be paid off.

Neither Inconstant or Pique have yet been commissioned. We apprehend the reason is in consequence of their being on marines at this division to embark. Four Officers and 100 privates are on their passage in the Pluto, hourly expected, and possibly they may be ordered for these frigates. The Pluto will take on board a few Marine Artillery from Portsmouth, and Capts. Hmobrook and Morgen, and a party from Plymouth, for the conveyance to the North Coast of Spain. We omitted to state that Lieut. Langley, R.N., wounded by the Carlists, came home in the Royal Tar, and is now in Haslar Hospital, he has received an ugly wound. Rear-Admiral, Sir Charles Paget, G.C.H., is expected to hoist his flag to-morrow in the Bellerophon, Capt. S. Jackson, until the Hercules is fitted for his reception. The ships of the-line will then cruize under his direction, and we conclude he will afterwards be despatched up the Mediterranean as second in command. Ships in Port, Vanguard, Bellerophon, Cornwallis, Pembroke, Rapid, at Spithead; Britannia, Madagascar, Buffalo, Beacon, Royal George Yacht, Excellent, Emerald, in Harbour.

MILFORD HAVEN, 29th June.—(From our Correspondent.)—The Skylark revenue cutter returned to port on Saturday last, and sailed again yesterday for the prevention of smuggling. The yearly inspection of the detachment of Royal Marines at Pembroke took place this week by Sir J. B. Savage, K.C.H., Deputy Adjutant General. On Monday the Colonel arrived at the barracks, accompanied by Capt. Burton, acting as his Aide-de-camp, whose lin was received by the usual salute from a guard of honour. In the barrack-yard the men, drawn up in open square, on his entering presented arms. They were then formed in columns of companies, when the Inspector-General, followed by Major Bailie, the Commanding Officer of the detachment, passed through the ranks, minutely inspecting the men and their kits. After this duty, and visiting the quarters of the soldiers, infirmery, offices, &c., on board the old Dragon, 74, fitted as a temporary barracks, he, with Sir C. Bullen, Superintendent of the Arsenal, and a large party partook of a splendid dejeuné à la fourchette with Major Bailie. On the following day the detachment was had out on the usual parade ground for review. At twelve o'clock the Colonel made his appearance on the field, attended by Capt Burton, Capt. Savage, &c. &c. A general salute being given the battalion marched past, first in review order, and then in quick time, and afterwards went through a number of evolutions (firing on each formation) with a degree of steadiness and precision which drew forth high encomiums from the Inspector-General. At the close of the review he highly complimented that efficient officer Major Bailie, on the state of the detachment, a fact which he said he should not fail to represent to His Majesty at the next levee. The day being remarkably fine, and such sights being novelties in the neighbourhood, a considerable concourse of spectators assembled both in carriages, on horseback, and on foot. That day the party partook of an elegant luncheon with Sir Charles Bullen. On Tuesday the Colonel dined with the mess of the detachment, and on Wednesday with the Pembrokeshire United Service Club. Last Monday the Dido, 18 gun corvette, lately launched from Pembroke, having taken in her lower masts, was docked at that establishment. The Dock-yard people are proceeding with her rigging preparatory to her being sent to Sheerness, where it is intended she shall be commissioned by Mr. Walker, of Plymouth-yard (Superintending-master) who is to navigate her thither. He is now employed transporting a frigate to Liverpool, fitted as a lazarette. On returning he will call for the Dido, leaving the jury gear at the port for the use of the Conqueror, shortly to be launched from the Dock-yard up the Haven. He will then bring the Mulgrave in this port to supply the place of the Gibraltar lazarette, which vessel is to be broken up at Pembroke. The Conqueror will be ready by that time for him to take away. It is rumoured the marine detachment up the Haven will not be relieved this summer, but remain another year in consequence of there being so few men at the divisions.

WOOLWICH DOCK-YARD, 1st July.—On Sunday last, the Athol troop-ship, Master Commander M'Harley, sailed from here for Portsmouth and Plymouth, where she will embark several depots* of regiments for Ireland, and it is expected will then return again to this port. This ship was built of larch from off the duke of Athol's estate, and presented by that nobleman to Government. Some short time since she was examined at Portsmouth, and was pronounced unfit for service; but the surveyors have only considered five of her timbers defective, which of course have been replaced; while the sister vessel, built of oak, has long since been condemned. Blazer st.-v. has been hauled out into the basin into the river to be docked, so that it is supposed there is some intention of her being commissioned. Lieut. Joseph Pearse has been expected here some days to hoist his pendant on board the Firefly st.-v., to which he has been appointed. There is a notice posted up at the gate that men are wanted for the Salamander, now on the coast of Spain, they will be taken out in the Pluto st.-v. which is waiting herself for hands and petty warrants. The Alban st.-v., Lieut. Tinling, is also in want of hands. The Lightning st.-v., Lieut. Shambler, has at length got her boilers in, after waiting near two months. Their Lordships were pleased to comment on the length of time the vessels take to refit, to Mr. Ewart, the Inspector of Steam Machinery, and he hoped an augmentation of the establishment will take place from his representation thereon. The Rhadamanthus st.-v., under the command of Master Kirby and manned by the crew of the Messenger, came up the river on Thursday at 8 A.M.; the bands will go on board the hulk until the Messenger is refitted. The Flamer st.-v., Lieut. Pothury, also arrived same day. Ships in Port—William and Mary yacht, Firebrand, Alban, Pluto, Flamer, and Rhadamanthus st.-vs. Not in Commission—Blazer st.-v. In Dock—Confiance st.-v. In the Basin—Lightning and Messenger st.-v.

Sir Josias Rowley had returned to Malta from a cruize on the coast of Sicily. His squadron consisted of Caledonia, Canopus, Edinburgh, Thunderer, and Revenge ships of the line, with the Vernon frigate in company. He had visited the cities of Syracuse and Catania. The squadron, it was expected, would shortly return to the Archipelago for the summer.

H.M.'s ship Terror, Captain Back, in tow of H.M. steamer Rhadamanthus, arrived in Aberdeen bay on Monday night, wind bound. The steamer will accompany her through the Pentland Frith, and then return to Woolwich.

The latest accounts from Syria state that the Euphrates expedition under Col. Chesney, had, after the two steam boats, the Tigris and the Euphrates, had begun their voyages, met with an accident. One of the steam-boats had struck on a rock under water, and every exertion was making to repair it as far as was practicable.

ROYAL MARINES.—Privates Geddes and Gridley were brought before a Bench of Magistrates for stealing a letter tray from one Harriet Croul, by effecting an entrance through the window of her house; also for defrauding three publicans out of the different sums of two ten pounds, and one seventeen pounds, by representing they had just come home, and had their ticket for their money to receive at Somerset House. They were fully committed to Newgate to take their trial.

* The Athol will convey the 61st depot to Ireland and the 99th to Plymouth, bringing back the 47th from Cork and the 98th to Devonport.

ptains Hornbrook and Morgan, Lieutenants Churchill, ght, and Langford, of the Plymouth Division of Royal nes, have been ordered to join the battalion in Spain. officers of the Woolwich Division, and 100 men, will ed to Portsmouth in the Pluto steamer, it is supposed a two frigates about to be commissioned at that port, being scarcely a sufficient number of men at that quarters to fill the casualties that may occur in the at Spithead.

ne Serjeant, a Corporal, and six Gunners of the Royal ine Artillery, are ordered to embark on board the o steam-vessel, as part of her complement.

n the paying off the President on Monday se'nnight, a l, gratuity, and pension, were awarded to John Noyes, twain's mate, for long servitude and uniform good con- , when he was suitably addressed before the ship's pany by Captain Scott. The officers had a farewell er at the George in the evening.

Court of Inquiry, composed of Commander Leyton, Lieutenants Sims and Billingsley, was held on the 17th to investigate the conduct of W. W. Harvey, steward e Adder revenue-cutter, stationed in Newport River, e instance of Com. Deane, Inspect.-Commander of the of Wight, for leaving the deck of the Adder, on 24th , whereby a deserter from the Primrose, under the cus- ef the watch, effected his escape, by jumping into one e cutter's boats alongside. There were two men on ame watch with the steward, who, forgetting the pri- r, went below soon after the steward did so. Mr. Day ered for the accused, and forcibly represented that his t had innocently violated his duty by his desire to per- that of steward, his only object in going below. Cer- ates as to the excellent character borne by the steward ieus to his joining the Adder were handed in, and the ain and Mate of this cutter spoke in the highest terms is conduct. In their opinion he was the last man who ld designedly connive at, or facilitate by his absence or rwise, the escape of any prisoner.

Sir J. ## East India Intelligence.

LETTERS have been received by the Zenobia, announcing the abolition of the Agra Presidency; but that the Government is to be administered by a Deputy Governor to be appointed by the Governor-General, and that, in consequence of this intimation, Sir Charles Metcalfe has determined upon proceeding home.

Several respectable natives have formed themselves into a Club, at Allahabad for the purpose of selecting and printing scarce eastern works. This attention to the literature of their country, and the use to which the press is to be devoted, will be a redeeming point in the modern history of the natives of Hindostan.

Rookin Oodowah, a doctor in the service of the Queen of Delhi, has been requested by his royal mistress to proceed to Allahabad, in order to arrange matters in her behalf in case of the King's demise; as a compensation for this trouble he is to receive a gratuity of 25,000 rupees.

There is a probability of hostilities taking place shortly at Kurnool. It is well known that for some years past the Prince had actively engaged in procuring supplies of arms from the Presidency of Madras, and one invoice of 600 muskets, marked as "glass, en route to Hydorabad," was last year seized in the Cuddapah district. But before this discovery was effected, upwards of 1400 muskets had already been conveyed in a similar manner, and had reached Kurnool in safety.

Another fire took place at Canton, not to the extent of the former, but still very formidable to foreigners, as being nearer to their factories. It broke out on the morning of 24th Jan., and before any steps were resorted to, it had assumed a fierce and dangerous head, burning before a strong north wind right down on the foreign factories. Thus a portion of the foreigners and their property were for a period placed in the utmost peril. By great exertions the fire was at length extinguished.

LIEUT.-COL. T. PEYRONNET THOMPSON AND THE 14TH LIGHT DRAGOONS.

To the Editor of the United Service Journal.

MR. EDITOR,—I find that Lieut.-Col. T. P. Thompson has thought proper, on his examination before the Commissioners for inquiring into military punishments, to impugn the discipline, on service, of my old corps, the 14th Light Dragoons. He states that he was sent with a patrole; that the men composing it left him and returned to the camp without him; and that when he reported the circumstance to the officer in command of the regiment (who was Sir F. Harvey), the men were not punished but merely reprimanded. Supposing the facts to be exactly as represented by Lieut.-Col. T. P. Thompson, are there not circumstances under which men are justifiable in leaving their officer, and may this not have been one of them? Lieut.-Col. T. P. Thompson had but just joined the regiment as a Subaltern, at the very close of the last campaign of the Peninsular War, and I believe had never before served in the Cavalry. The regiment was at that time composed chiefly of veteran dragoons, who had served constantly during the whole of the Peninsular War at the out-posts, and were thoroughly acquainted with the duty of patrolling. Lieut. Thompson must certainly have been comparatively inexperienced in such matters, and less fit to guide than to be guided by such men; most probably they went right and he went wrong, at least such was the impression at the time, particularly as I believe it was not the first time that this officer had lost his way. Would it then have been judicious in the commanding officer to have inflicted any punishment on the men, much less corporal punishment, as Col. Thompson seems to have expected, but which, under any circumstances, was totally inapplicable in such a case? I deny that the system of discipline of the 14th Lt. Dragoons on service was ever such as might be inferred from Lieut.-Colonel Thompson's statement, and I am surprised that any officer who served, however short a time, under Sir F. Harvey, should venture to represent it as such. It cannot be expected that Col. Thompson, of whom we know so little and who knew so little of us, should be restrained by esprit de corps, in which he cannot be supposed to participate, from throwing out a slur on the discipline of the 14th Lt. Dragoons in the field. But I assert that no commanding officer ever exercised a more firm and consistent system of discipline than Sir. F. Harvey, or more strenuously and effectually supported those under his command in the execution of their duty, when that duty was properly performed. I have, &c.

COURTS MARTIAL.

ENSIGN H. W. ROWEN, 49th FOOT.

At a General Court Martial assembled at Dinapore on the 30th December, 1835, Ensign H. W. Rowen, H. M. 49th reg., was arraigned on the following charge, viz., "For conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentlemen, in having on the 29th September, 1835, appeared at the mess of H.M. 49th reg. in a state of intoxication, he being on the time on duty as orderly Officer of the day." Upon which charge the Court found the prisoner, Ens. H. W. Rowen, guilty, and sentenced him to be cashiered. Approved, H. Fane, Gen. Com.-in-Chief. Ens. Rowen is to be struck off the list of H. M. 49th reg. from the date of the communication being made known to him, which the Commanding Officer will specially report to the Adjutant-General of His Majesty's Forces in India, and to the Military Secretary to the Commander-in-Chief.

LIEUTENANT W. S. NORTON, 55th FOOT.

At a General Court Martial held at Bellary, 30th December 1835, Lieut. W. S. Norton, H.M. 55th Foot, was found guilty of the charge of making use of grossly abusive, obscene, and threatening language to his wife, and sentenced to be cashiered, but recommended to the mercy of the Commander-in-Chief. The Commander-in-Chief, in remitting the sentence upon Lieut. Norton observes, that he would have felt much more satisfaction had any testimonies of the general good conduct of the officer under sentence been laid before him. Lieut. Norton was pardoned and has returned to his duty.

CAPTAIN J. R. RAINES, 77th FOOT.

The proceedings of this Court-Martial reached us as we were going to press. Capt. Clerke appears to have conducted the prosecution in the most temperate manner; his opening address and rejoinder are very manly and judicious. The result has not yet been announced from the Horse Guards.

COAST GUARD SERVICE.—REPLY TO "NUMA."

No. I.

SIR,—When a man states publicly that he has been induced by a desire to benefit any body of men in anything he may say of them or do towards them, we should atleast give him credit for good intentions; but the history of the world affords ample testimony that beneficial results are not invariably consequent on pure motives, and, ere anything should receive general belief, or any act public suffrage, its legitimate effects and natural results should be calmly and dispassionately considered.

Numa, Sir, has written a series of letters on the Coast Guard Service in general. He professes himself actuated thereto by a desire to benefit the officers and men of the Coast Guard, or, as he terms it, "an ill-defined service;" and that, in making known their grievances, he is solely influenced by a desire to rescue them from their "present degraded position." Now, without attempting to scan his motives, permit me to offer an observation or two on his statements; and as I have the honour to belong to the service, and form one of a part or parcel of the community noticed by Numa, I beg leave to ask him what he has done or stated in my favour, or what hint he has dropped that, if acted up to, would redound to the advantage of my class of officers? I appeal to all who have perused the inconsistent children of Numa's surcharged pericranium—yes, I appeal to those letters themselves, and both appeals will immediately discover that, when speaking of Civilian Chief Officers, he, politely and gentlemanlike, endeavours to prove them a mean and degraded class of persons, if any thing, rather too well off, and should be superannuated. A very felicitous amendment, indeed! Rather a novel mode, indeed, of ameliorating their condition! If Numa's intellectual capabilities be even above mediocrity, I fear the goodness of his heart; and if his heart indeed feel interested in the class he refers to, I fear that his mental endowments are rather scarce, and that the rays from the orbs of reason and common sense, which shine occasionally perchance on his mind, are, like angels' visits, "few, and far between."

If Numa, then, has written in scurrilous and abusive language concerning men personally, and devised means so unlikely to effect the end he would have the public believe he anticipates, how can he presume to say that his desire is to benefit them? But it is apparent he has said so, therefore it is as evident as the noon-day sun that Numa's object is to degrade, or attempt to degrade, Civilian Chief Officers, under the guise of seeming friendship. The highwayman is indeed no evil, but doubly more dangerous is the person who, affecting honesty, secretly marauds: a stab from any man would have inflicted death to Cæsar, but, oh! when Brutus stabbed,

"This was the unkindest cut of all."

As to England I speak not, never having served there, but I have known Civilian Chief Officers going there from this country; and considering the observations of Numa as applicable to those of the United Kingdom, I do assert that a more gross unfounded libel was never published on any class of men than the alluded to statement. But who (I fancy I hear some one say), who are those officers so harshly spoken of. I answer, they are men who have generally served in the Navy as Midshipmen, or as officers of cruisers; men who have seen service—fought the battles of their country; men who, by reason of bad health, or lack of interest, returned to their country, wanting what Numa has obtained, namely—promotion; hence, because in one sense unfortunate, a solitary example is held up of what he would wish the rest to appear, called by the more fortunate Numa, "Hero of the pewter pots!"

A wordy warfare is a safe warfare where a man expects no opposition; but, in coming before a public tribunal, facts must appear, assertions will not do; nor do I imagine Numa's fame and authority is sufficient to merit universal reliance on his ipse dixit, unsubstantiated by matter-of-fact. Now, I ask, did Numa expect no counter statement from the officers alluded to, or rather did not his conscience hurl a sting at his bosom, and direct him to a merited castigation from that generous public who sympathises with the maligned and the ill-treated? Did he deem that, because we had patiently endured in the day of battle and the "fiery fight," and aided in our humble sphere to raise the British cheers that ever welcome the vaunting foe, we would tamely endure his paper guns, and the false character given us by a man, or that we would lie under the nefarious mantle that Numa would shroud us with? Forbid it the dignity of manhood! Forbid it the honour that is permanently lodged in the bosom of a sailor and a Briton! And even if we had kept peace, and answered his base aspersions with silent contempt, did he think a discerning public would suffer the meritorious of the community to be discarded as Numa recommends? Yes, we may be mean, and degraded, and discarded in the estimation of Numa; but, in a generous Government and a rewarding legislature, and the high officers of our own department, and a kind people, we are not so mean or degraded as we may appear to Numa; but were we mean on the battle-day, when

"Each gun,
From its adamantine lips,
Spread a death-like shade round the ships,
Like a hurricane eclipse
Of the sun;"

And if it has been our misfortune to lose our health, or be destitute of patronage, does it follow of consequence that we are to be superannuated or drafted under our equals, and be thus degraded as Numa would recommend?

Coequal are Civilian Chief Officers with Naval Chief Officers; the service knows no distinction—invested with the same commands, equally responsible in all respects, and have the same duty to perform.

But in Numa's opinion we are too well off: well, let us reason together. Let the pay of Lieutenant Chief Officer and the Midshipman, or Civilian Chief Officer, be compared. Now, as all half-pay ceases on a Naval Officer joining the Customs, the self-styled "Centurion" or Lieutenant, it will be found, receives per day 10*s.*: the Midshipman, or Civilian Chief Officer, per day 3*s.* 8½*d.* 'Tis true the latter receives 13*l.* a-year, enough for honesty. Thus we see what Chief Officers receive yearly. Now Numa recommends what? Is it that the Civilians receive additional pay? No; but that the Civilians be superannuated, or, in other words, sent about their business, while the "Centurion" is recommended to be made a District Lieutenant, with nearly 1*l.* per day, or in round numbers 300*l.* a-year. But it appears pretty evident from this uncalled for, injudicious statement, that he seems aware the high officers of the Coast Guard have recommended the Civilian Chief Officers for additional pay; therefore, in the full swell of his irrestrainable choler he exclaims, superannuate all Civilians. "Alas! poor Yorick," a Lieutenant in the Navy cannot score under a Civilian superior. Does Numa forget the First Lord of the Admiralty is a Civilian?—then let Numa fling up his Naval commission, and "Richard be himself again!" Are his Majesty's Ministers, Civilians, still degrading? Oh! Numa, request them to get rank, that they disgrace you not! And, pray, is it unusual for Civilians to be Lords of the Admiralty? Numa, stand up, behold your absurdity, be wise from experience, and let a heated fancy lead you no more into folly and error. Why speak unadvisedly? Listen, now, while I reveal truth. You tremble, Numa, fearing the situation of Civilian Chief Officer may be bettered, you would fain superannuate Civilians. Well, 'tis a great mercy you would not hang them, and thus raise them from degradation to eminence for once! But to facts. Allow me, Sir, to tell Numa that the Coast Guards with Civilian Chief Officers (in Ireland chiefly) performed their duty, when the Coast Blockade, under District Lieutenants, was a complete failure, and was abolished. Does the system of the Coast Guards in Kent now work well? Admirably. But Numa would revise them, by bringing them back to a system that was formerly tried, and found wanting. Let Numa know, Sir, that, for the extent of the Coast Guards in Ireland, no force ever yet accomplished such a revolution in the country, it was placed, so wide in extent, so ample in all its bearings. Under guidance of a master-hand, the present, kind, discreet selected head of it, the service has been a blessing to inhabitants of the Sea Coast: it has civilised and instructed the rude and ignorant. On one hand, it has steadily pressed the wrecker; on the other, put down smuggling. And when famine and distress prevailed, then was the saving power of this service found, dealing food to the hungry and comfort to the distressed, and pointing out the localities of woe to administer relief. Need I say a word in honoured chief on that or other occasion? No; his acts and conduct are demonstrative of the proposition "little is not found." And considering the whole force in all its ramifications, in Ireland I maintain that a more efficient warlike establishment is not under the Crown. Our Inspecting Commanders are men of business; to their honour be it all have recommended Civilian Chief Officers as meritorious and deserving for an increased remuneration. One fact I find, that their stay among us is too limited—five years in this service is little enough time to serve under them. Our Chief Officers, Naval and Civilian, are upright, diligent, persevering, and, though humble, respectable; its men active, steady, and obedient. Thus, in all the beauty and vigour of a warlike body or power, it continues to work like a well-regulated timepiece, though wheel in wheel, all in time, showing in all its branches, especially the cutting system of regularity, precision, and discipline, prevalent that never was equalled—that cannot be excelled.

Reform is good when reformation is called for from necessity, or where there is a likelihood of commensurate good. I am not one of those who would say—

"Better to bear the ills we have,
Than fly to others that we know not of."

I say, when evils appear eradicate them; but, on speculation, do not forfeit a real good. I write this not that I fear Numa's twelve letters will produce him a-year, or supersanouation to myself; but I write to that gentleman there are those that will not brook his dignities—those whose souls possess independence, whose hearts possess humanity, and whose bosoms glow with fortitude, generosity, and honour. If this become an opening medicinal on Numa, and causes an emission of fuliginous spleen that perchance inhabits his mind, then I shall have apply something more tranquillising the next time I write; but in the mean time prescribing for him plenty of cold water, air, and exercise, I remain, &c.

CINCINNATUS.

[In the spirit of fair play we give insertion to this letter, but our Correspondent deceives himself if he supposes the service will take it as an answer to the statements put forth by Numa. Instead of sentences bordering very much on personality, we recommend Cincinnatus, should he again write, to confine his letter to the facts and cases brought forward by the able writer Numa.—ED.]

MADRAS COURTS MARTIAL.

SIR,—I am indebted to your Correspondent with the longthy signature, for the corroborating testimony he has borne to the general accuracy of the statements made in my letter of 20th of June, 1835, relative to Sir Edmund Williams. As observed by you at the time, my obvious object was to vindicate Colonel Conwoy from the imputation of having influenced the Commander-in-Chief in his conduct towards Sir Edmund; and the correctness of my views on this subject is confirmed by your correspondent asserting that the gentlemen who preferred the charges against that Officer was a nephew of Sir G. T. Walker, the Commander-in-Chief, and to this cause might be assigned the harsh treatment he experienced from Sir G. T. Walker, consequently blame cannot be attributed justly to Colonel Conway, as "Camelia" wished to infer.

With regard to my observation that Sir E. William was aided with, and was a friend of Sir G. T. Walker,—the only remark I was 600 miles from Madras at the period under reference; but the source from whence I derived the information is entitled, in my estimation, to at least as much credence as the assertion of an anonymous writer who, styling himself "Calumniarum Vindex," does not hesitate to impute to a General Officer the most unworthy motives, under the plea of relieving Colonel Sir E. Williams from the vile calumny of—what?—Why, Sir, of having been the friend and companion of Lieutenant-General Sir G. T. Walker, Bart., G.C.B., and Commander-in-Chief of the Madras Army! I fearlessly challenge him to adduce a single sentence of mine which can be candidly construed into an attack upon Sir Edmund; and as his remarks do not affect the general intention of my communication of the 20th last, if it will be any satisfaction to "Calumniarum Vindex" I will, sooner than take the trouble of ascertaining the accuracy or inaccuracy of my information upon an immaterial a point, make him a present of the argument, and much benefit may he derive from it. Again expressing my gratitude for this unsolicited confirmation of my views,

London, June 1836. I am, &c., MYSELF.

THE ROYAL MARINE CORPS.

SIR,—In your valuable journal of the 16th inst., I this day observed some remarks respecting the state of Royal Marine Corps; they are just and perfectly correct as to the age and length of servitude of the junior branches of the corps, but, Sir, there is another grievance which this corps labours under, and affords them reasons to be dissatisfied; it would not, perhaps, at first view, appear to the casual reader, not a Marine, that the retiring pension of 191*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, for the Captains of the corps, is only at the rate of 10*s.* 6*d.* per diem, while the daily pay of every other Infantry Captain in His Majesty's service is 11*s.* 7*d.* This, Sir, is what the corps have long and justly complained of, without the slightest chance of redress; and it naturally makes them suppose that those whose particular province it is to watch over, protect, and do justice to them, are the persons who throw cold water on their exertions, and by virtue of their office deny them that justice to which their service to their country so justly entitles them. It is a galling, and I may say, a degrading thing, for an officer to find himself on a duty with one of a similar rank, who, in all probability, was not born when he came into the service or, I may say, obtained the same rank with himself, to find this stripling receiving 1*s.* 1*d.* more daily pay than him.

The Captain of Militia who receives his commission this day, would receive 11*l.* 7*d.*, the same as every other Captain of Infantry, Staff included, while the Marine Officer, whose constitution is broken by servitude in every known part of the world, is only rewarded by a reduced pay of 10*s.* 6*d.* per diem; can this be justice, or can it be expected that gentlemen so treated can have the slightest interest in the service, or be blamed for using every means in their power for retiring from this neglected corps, with the most meagre pittance on which life can be sustained? those in power well know they cannot live without sufficient to exist upon; the most of them being totally unfit to begin the world in any other situation; the Senior Captain having been nearly 39 years in the service, 26 of which in his present rank, and even the Junior Captain has been upwards of 28 years in the service.

The corps much regrets Mr. Bannerman was not in possession of more detailed accounts of the corps, when he brought forward his motion in the House respecting the United Service; however, they feel truly grateful to him for the handsome manner he was pleased to express himself of their servitude, and only wait a favourable opportunity of expressing their gratitude in a more substantial manner than mere words; to you, Sir, I have, in the name of the corps, to offer our warmest acknowledgments for your kind and unremitting attention to our welfare and interest. Permit me to subscribe myself one of your well-wishers,

THE COCKADE.

Sir,—It is now upwards of thirty-six years since I entered the Army, since which period I always understood the Cockade was entirely a badge of Naval and Military distinction, and which for many years I found, as far as my information reached, to be nearly limited to these services; but for some time past I have noticed a great usurpation of this privilege has taken place by those who have no more right to use the cockade than the butcher's boy carrying a tray of meat to his employer's customers; and let any person who may be disposed to walk, either in Hyde Park or the Regent's Park, only observe the servants on carriages or on horseback, and he will find that my assertion is quite correct; that at least eight out of every ten he may meet wear cockades, and the foreigner passing so many splendid equipages must naturally conclude the naval and military profession includes a great number of opulent subjects, when the reverse is much nearer the truth. And as the Chancellor of the Exchequer is often, I make no doubt, at a loss for a tax, let him only put a heavy one on all those using cockades in their establishments, that neither belong to the army or navy, and we would soon see what a change there would be in this respect. Costly epaulets and aiguillettes are also on the increase, but these may not be considered so great an infringement as the cockade, and in order to complete the folly, I imagine that servants will, ere long, be required to wear fleeces, gilets, jack-boots, gauntlet-gloves, and sabres.

YEOMANRY CAVALRY.

Sir,—The "crying evil" to which I made allusion was not "that the officers' horses should be exempt from duty," but that those of private individuals, in no way connected with these corps, should be so; seeing they supply horses to troopers for the express purpose of evading the tax. This, Sir, you will allow, is a crying evil, and one which calls aloud for rectification. That such is the case I pledge my word and honour to the fact.

THE ROYAL NAVAL CHARITABLE SOCIETY.

Sir,—It is with increased pleasure I have noticed your [illegible] insertion of my third communication relative to the Royal Naval Charitable Society, which promptitude, be assured, will meet with its just reward; in fact, he that would be wanting in sympathy on such a "subject," where so many are, I am sorry to say, almost dependent, is not worthy the "slightest patronage;" such, I regret to add, is easily to be found. Feeling as I did and do feel, that every possible publicity of the "facts" set forth should be given to the parties more immediately concerned (the members), I forwarded my first communication to those journals in London, and the Naval ports, who profess an interest in the service; they have declined inserting it,—one of the number, it is true, The United Service Gazette, did insert a part of my first letter, but declined the subsequent one. I sincerely trust that the indifference with which such a vital matter has been treated by your contemporaries will be met by the members of the "United Service" in the manner it so richly merits. Our meeting takes place on Monday, 11th July, at twelve, in the Thatched House Tavern, St. James's Street. I hope the members will bear in mind the very trifling expense at which the London Branch of the Royal Naval Annuitant Society (of which I am a member) is subjected to, in the collection of a greater sum annually than that of the "Royal Naval Charitable Society. Economy there is the order of the day;" no 5 per cent commission for collection; a regular established agent only receives two and a-half for that purpose.

MAJ. MACLEAN, 72nd, AND COLONEL SMITH.

Sir,—Under the head of "Military Intelligence," in the last Naval and Military Gazette, I find some busybody has been sending you a piece of information* respecting Maj. Maclean, 72d reg., "who is stated to have been placed in arrest by Col. Smith, for correspondence between him and a Capt. Stretch of the Provisionals." Now, Sir, as it is plain to me that the person who has thus gratuitously brought the above circumstance before the public has done so evidently with a malicious intention towards Major Maclean, who is at the Cape of Good Hope, I have, therefore, on his behalf, taken the liberty of marking my sense of the unfairness and bad tendency of ex parte statements, and of telling the author of the paragraph that anything but the good of his Majesty's Service has prompted him to be so communicative, and under this persuasion shall feel obliged by your inserting the above remarks in your next paper.

London, 29*th June*. Fair Play.

Hamburgh Women.—From the burgomaster's daughter to the burgher's maid-servant, almost universally wear short sleeves to their gowns and very short petticoats. The former is a fortunate fashion for the fair Hamburgher, for there are no women in the world who possess whiter or more beautiful arms, or who exhibit from the head to the waist so many points of attraction to woo a bachelor from celibacy. Beyond this praise, however, their short petticoats forbid us to go, since these tell but too plainly that their pretty owners do not stand upon trifles. Women by their beauty, it is said, have captivated the gods; but it would only be Neptune that the fair Hamburghers could charm, and then—it must have been in the character of mermaids!

Music and the Germans.—Music in all its branches is thoroughly studied, practised, and worshipped by every one in Germany, from the peasant to the prince; affording, as it does, the most hallowed delight to the one, and the most favourite pastime to the other. The boor, for example, on finishing his daily labours, retires to the bosom of his family, to enjoy, after his beer and black bread, a glee or a madrigal; the citizen, in the evening, hastens to the Wirtzhaus, not to discuss politics and fret about taxation, but to meet a set of good-humoured gossips, who can join in the choral music of 'Am Rhein, am Rhein,' or, over a bottle of Rhenish, pour out a loud burst of harmony in praise of Crambambeli; the student, amid the murky atmosphere produced by his meerschaum, and the phantastic visions resulting from the intoxicating weed, capriols and modulates on his harpsichord, or practises his solfeggi, in all their direct or inverted intervals: the traveller, on leaping out of the eilwagen for the one o'clock table d'hote, would find his beef and saurcrout insipid, were they not seasoned with a minuet by Haydn, or a trio by Gluck; the doughty baron quits the joyous and noisy pursuit of the boar, to take a part in a quartet, or to become the director of an orchestre; the statesman, alive to the balance of power, feels it also a pleasure, as well as a privilege, to balance the instruments in a symphony, or the voices in a kyrie eleison; while the reigning duke, in all the pride of an unsullied escutcheon, and of an illustrious stammbaum dances attendance after a prima donna, and acts as capellmeister to a rehearsal in the opera-house.

An Increase of the Army without Expense.—A corre[spon]dent of our monthly contemporary, the United Service Journal, offers the following plan. In the first instance, I would propose that, to every regiment of Foot Guards, and Infantry of the Line, there be enlisted 150 boys, between the ages of fifteen and eighteen, [who] have only as much bounty as will provide a moderate stock of necessaries, and to be subsisted at the rate of tenpence per day; that they should positively serve for [two] years at no higher rate; and then their admission to the ranks, and increase of pay, to be dependent on their general good conduct. To make way for these boys, we should borrow a leaf from our French neighbours, and allow an equal number of men (150) to have extended furloughs, at the discretion of the General or Commanding Officer, who, during their absence, would have no claim on pay; they might be for two, three, or five years or limited only to the call by proclamation at the commencement of hostilities. Supposing this plan to be acted on, it might be still further extended. The men who went on furloughs would require a small sum to carry them to their destination, but this would be made up at once by the diminished pay of the boys. This plan might be carried out to still further advantage in our foreign possessions, where the absentees would always be sure of immediate employ as labourers, &c., and where each man on furlough would become instantly available in the event of hostilities. I would not except from this arrangement the territory of the East India Company, nor would it be essential to point out the advantage of having a large body of ready-made soldiers at hand, to bring forward on any emergency, in that country, where our possessions are now held by rather an equivocal tenure. I am well aware that an objection may at once appear.—Whether the men would accept furloughs on such terms? I think, however, that it would not be difficult to find the limited number assigned, who, either from family connexions, the prospects of employment either in agricultural pursuits, or those of trade, would be glad to take advantage of extended furloughs—with this proviso attached, that no man should have leave from his regiment, unless under these circumstances. Another difficulty may appear—the registration of the absentees in Great Britain and Ireland. This may also be obviated, in England, by resorting to the old system of allowing each regiment that bears the name of a county to recruit almost exclusively for that county. It gives a strong link of connexion between the corps and (as we may call them) their constituents—the benefit of which was very strongly felt at the period when the Militia volunteered for the Line, being, in the greatest number of instances, in favour of their own county regiments. Such arrangements might also be formed both in Scotland and Ireland; and as every regiment has either its head-quarters in the British islands, or its representative in the shape of a depot, there would be neither difficulty nor delay in the men joining. The advantage would be that of a constantly young Army growing up, well trained to the habits of soldiers, and a reserve of others who have already learned their business. It requires considerable time to make good soldiers; but, on the other hand, habits are never forgotten. Having such a body of men to call on, would, at least in the first instance, check the enormous increase of bounties at the commencement of war, and would give time for embodying and disciplining the Militia, which, from long disuse, would be no small work of some time. The whole idea is based on the principles by which the Continental nations are able to keep up such large armies, without increasing their expense, it being no unusual thing to have from 20,000 to 30,000 on furloughs of this nature: and it appears to me that, under modifications, this plan might be adopted in England.

Proverbial Politeness of the Military.—An officer in India, who had been just raised from the ranks for gallantry, being invited to the Governor's table, was invited by the Governor's lady, as a marked compliment to take wine. "No, ma'am, I thank you," replied the unsophisticated hero—"I never takes wine; but I'll tiger at beer!"

Cockchafer Oil.—A discovery has been made at Quedlinburg, likely to be very fatal to the cockchafer race, viz., that they produce oil in the proportion of three to eight of their own measure. Nineteen millions are already submitted to the process of extraction, and a bot death for the sake of greasing wheels.

A man named Conrad Locher, died lately at Speicher in the Canton of Appenzel, leaving 124 lineal descendants. He was married 47 years to one wife, by whom he had 14 children; 12 of these married, and produced 90 grandchildren, who in their turn, gave him 15 great-grandchildren.

SATURDAY, JULY 2, 1836.

WITH the view of refuting the gross misrepre-tations of Mr. Hume, relative to the pay of the icers of the Army and Navy, we submitted some marks on the subject in our last number, in ch we expressed the sincere hope that both the d of Minto and Lord Howick would find leisure examine into the returns which have been laid ore Parliament, showing the retired allowances officers belonging to the Civil Departments er the Government, in order that these might contrasted with the half-pay of the gallant cers of both services, who have devoted the t of their lives in every clime in defence of ir country. In the observations which we then de, we gave two or three examples of the ma-est advantages enjoyed by the Civil servants of Crown over those of the Naval and Military rvice; and we will now state a few others, in confident belief that incontrovertible facts like se must carry weight even to the prejudiced nd of the Honourable Member for Middlesex, o appears to take every opportunity of lessening value of the gallant men by whose valour and votion this nation has risen to her present high nk amongst the powers of the world.

We will begin with the case of another Treasury erk, a Mr. Temple West, who we find, by the turns in question, has a retiring allowance of ree hundred and fifty pounds per annum, after but ghteen years' service, and when but thirty-nine ears of age, a period not equal to the length of actual services in the field or at sea of some hundreds of Colonels and Post Captains who, at this hour, receive just one hundred per annum LESS than this fortunate Clerk of the Treasury, whose arduous duties for the eighteen years that he belonged to this Department, will, we are sure, not bear to be contrasted with those of our gallant warriors herein alluded to.

Next, we will take the Excise, where we find a Mr. John Edwards, a Solicitor to that Department for twenty-five years, and in which situation, no doubt but he was amply remunerated for his professional advice, retiring at fifty years of age only with the immense allowance of one thousand two hundred and ninety-six pounds a-year; further, that a Mr. Francis Leigh, a Collector of Excise for the same period, of twenty-five years, has the still larger superannuating grant of one thousand three hundred and eighty-four pounds per annum! And yet Mr. Hume has had the effrontery to tell the country, in his place in Parliament, that the Officers of the Army and Navy are the best paid servants of the Government!—Can he, we would ask him, ever have looked through these returns? in which he will discover an abundance of other facts giving the direct contradiction to this unworthy and untrue statement.

In the Colonial Department, again, he will find that a Mr. F. Colquhoun, a Clerk only, has been permitted to retire, after but fourteen years' service, and when but thirty-two years of age, on an allowance of three hundred pounds per annum (although his full salary was but three hundred and seventy-five), being more than the half-pay of three Lieutenants of the Navy, after as many years actual services each at sea as this gentleman was years old; and yet the Navy are declared to be some of the best paid servants of the Crown.

We call on Mr. Hume to refer to these unerring facts before he again offers his opinions on the subject of the Army and Navy. He may learn further, that even a common Messenger, in the Colonial Office, has a retiring allowance of two hundred pounds per annum, after but fifteen years' public duties, that is to say, not so many years' employment in the public service as any one of the sixty and more of the senior Mates now belonging to our different ships of war, the whole of whom have passed their examination for Lieutenants from eight to twelve years, and still are but Midshipmen on but fifty pounds per annum, whilst this person has four times this amount as a pension! Yet the officers of the Navy, Mr. Hume tells us, are, with those of the sister service, the very best paid servants under the Government. The more closely and more deeply the Honourable Member for Middlesex investigates into this question the more positive will he find the proofs of his flagrant mis-statement; indeed, we need go no further to find a confirmation of them than in his own Resolutions to the House of Commons a few days since only, for compensation to the Officers of the House, in which he has most liberally proposed for (see our Parliamentary Analysis) the Head Doorkeeper, a Mr. Prett, a salary just equal to that of the full pay of a Rear-Admiral or Major-General, namely, nine hundred and eleven pounds per annum, and to the Under Doorkeeper, a Mr. Francis Williams, eight hundred and seventy-four pounds per annum, being much more than the full pay of a Captain of a first-rate with thirty-four years' rank as a Captain, and with sixty years' services; or of a Colonel in the Army with an equal length of servitude! and for Mr. Dorington, the Chief Clerk of the Public Bill and Fee Office, Mr. Hume has proposed one thousand nine hundred pounds a-year. Will the Honourable Member, after having had those resolutions agreed to, longer contend that the Officers of the Army and Navy are the best paid public servants in the country? or will he, with candour and honesty, come forward and acknowledge his error, and apologise for the injustice he has done to those gallant and deserving men? Let him do this, and thenceforward make all the reparation in his power for the injury he has inflicted upon them, and we will be amongst the first to bestow upon him all the commendation which such a course will entitle him to receive.

THE observations of General Von Grollmann, of the Prussian Service (which we gave in our number of the 11th ultimo), upon the statement made by the Duke of Wellington regarding the discipline of that part of the Prussian Army which was under his Grace's orders, from the year 1815 to the period of the evacuation of France by the Allies, as given in the Evidence of the Noble Duke before the Committee on the 20th of February last, have called forth the animadversions of different parts of the public press.

Relying, as we implicitly do, on the superior judgment of our own illustrious General on every question connected with Military affairs, we are not likely to be unduly impressed in favour of the opinions of a foreign officer, who must be supposed to be more or less partially influenced on the subject on which he has written; still, however, there are some remarks of General Von Grollmann which are entitled to notice, and to which we will briefly allude. The Prussian General commences his observations by saying, "that the statements of the Duke of Wellington are injurious to the honour of the Prussian Army," and that "there are several mistakes of so much importance, that an examination and refutation of them appear essentially necessary." He then proceeds to show that the Noble Duke has miscalculated the Prussian force that was in the field in 1815, and gives the movements of each corps at, and subsequent to, the battle of Ligny, and observes, "It must be left to the judgment of any experienced officer, whether an army that executed this could be justly reproached with want of discipline." General Von Grollmann next explains the causes which produced the apparent want of discipline, which has been represented by the Duke of Wellington, and asks

"Whether, under similar circumstances, an English Army could have been kept in a fighting condition? or if, instead of seeking to fight, it would not rather have retreated towards the sea, in order to be near its supplies, and to satisfy the numerous wants, without which it conceives itself unable to exist, and on which its whole system of discipline is founded?"

The Prussian General, speaking of the English soldier, says,—

"The private English soldier is a rude, vigorous, militarily-disposed man, who shares the strong national feeling common to the whole people, and thereby unites in himself all the qualities of an excellent soldier."

And he then gives his opinion on our system of Military Punishments, which he loudly condemns, and to which he attributes those deficiencies in the soldiers of our Army that he points out, amongst those he states, that

"To these causes it is owing that the English soldier is only the soldier of battles, unqualified for fighting in detail, unqualified for advanced posts and detachments, sbort unfit for all that precedes and fallows battles, d brings war toa speedier termination; hence England n carry on no war withaut foreign troops undertake the ive and mare difficult part of the war, and hence every re English Army could easily be manœuvred back to ir ships, by avoiding battles with it, daily harassing it, barrassing it with petty engagements, and directing the ncipal operations against the supplies."

The concluding paragraphs of these strictures of eneral Von Grollmann, are thoss which we deem st entitled to regard, wherein he shows that, hy ening the career of advancement to all, end aking merit and good character the certain steps distinction and reward, it will be possible to een in a large degree, if not to render wholly necessary, the system of Corporal Punishment isting in our service.

"In the Prussian Army (he says) it is frequently ier necessary to moderate a too excited feeling of nur than to complain af the want of it. The rule t every officer, hy distinguishing himself before the my in war and in peace, by being distinguished hy nts, knowledge, and good conduct, may reach the hest places in the Army, must stimulate the feeling of our, and must hear the most brilliant parts on the aking nut of a war."

Having thus given extracts from the Prussian neral's statement, we will now give that part of Evidence of the Duke of Wellington which led forth the article in question, and by coming the one with the other our readers will be abled to form their own judgments on the points issue. The Noble Duke was esked by the mmittee,—

"Comparing the discipline of our Army with that of Prussians, does your Grace conceive that our discipline, for all purpases in the field, is the more effectual, heirs?"

The Duke replied,

"Not to be compared. We could live in a country ch the Prussians were obliged to quit, and have done When I marched up to Paris with the Prussian ny upon my right, they were obliged to quit the ntry in which they were living. Both armies were g by requisition; and we went and lived in that same ntry, because my army was in a state of discipline, order, and regularity, and obedience, and the Prussian not. This is a positive fact upon record, which every y knows. Then there is another circumstance which must mention upon that subject. The two armies en they joined had,—the Prussian army, 150,000 men, Allied army, under my command, only 90,000 men; en they both reached Paris, they (the Prussians) ing lost about the same number as ourselves in the rations upon the frontier, and having left about the e number behind (each having left a corps in ervation upon the frontiers of France and the Nether- ds). When they came to Paris, each army had the e number, viz. 60,000 men, we having a deficiency n our original number of only 30,000 men, whilst the ssian army had experienced a deficiency of 90,000."

The Committee then put the question,—

"Does your Grace attribute the different proportions the deficiences in that instance to the good discipline the one army and the inferior discipline of the other?"

The Duke replied,—

"Yes,—to the efficient discipline for service of our y, and the deficient discipline for service of the Prus- n army."

Every Englishmnn, capable of appreciating the gh military qualities of the Noble Duke, will, are sure, put confidence in his Grace's opinion to the actual state of discipline of the two armies the period alluded to; still, as we have before served, we hold it very possible to improve the rals of our Army, by introducing into it a certainty of promotion and rewards for exemplary nduct, and by holding out to our soldiers incenes of various kinds, in order to lead them to a rse of good behaviour, such as the conferring honorary distinctions with increased rate of nsion, together with the prospect of being appointed to different offices, such as those of Porters, orkeepers, Warders, &c., in our public establishments, after specified periods of faithful and meritorious services; these, and the like of these rewards, would, we feel convinced, tend in a large degree to improve the character of our gallant soldiers, an object which the whole nation must alike desire to see accomplished, and which no man in the empire, we are assured, more fervently wishes than the illustrious individual who so long and so satisfactorily held the chief command of our Land Forces, and to whom, it was truly observed by the then Speaker of the House of Commons, when addressing his Grace after his matchless victories, "that amidst the constellation of heroes, then around us, all led, with united acclamations, conceded the pre-eminence."

Since the foregoing was in type we have seen in our monthly contemporery some notes, by Colonel Napier, on the Comments of the Prussian General. We shall give his concluding passage:—

"If General Von Grollmann is as ignorant of war as he has here shown himself of the English army, his country will profit little by his military services. But is he even well acquainted with his own army? He justifies the conduct of the Prussian army at Paris in 1815, and all the world knows what that conduct was. It was at the time defended on the plea of retaliation, and all the excesses said to have been committed in Prussia by the French were then repaid, and, it was generally believed, with interest. To take those saturnalia, then, as a test of the Prussian discipline in general is obviously unjust; yet the fact remains, that the Duke of Wellington, the friend and ally of Prince Blucher, by means of a stricter discipline, enabled ninety thousand 'degraded brutes,' so at least the General styles the British portion of the Allied Army, to live with ease, and to obtain the respect and even the good will of their enemies in a country which fifty thousand Prussians had abandoned as a devastated district, amidst the bitter curses of the plundered people. General Von Grollman defends this, not on the special ground of retaliation, but on the general issue. It follows, then, that plunder and oppression, and the most barbarous insults to a helpless population, are the characteristics of a Prussian army, or that army must disavow General Von Grollmann as its advocate. It follows that the coarse discipline which degrades the Englishman to a brute is better in practice than the delicate training of Prussia, or that two English brutes are less mischievous than one refined Prussian."

In the debate on the state of the Officers of the Army and Navy, we observed that certain parties in the House of Commons appeared disposed to convert what was intended as a boon to the old Officers of the junior ranks into a promotion of the senior grades of the service; and the frequent reiteration of the necessity of a Brevet promotion caused us to fear that those unacquainted with the Service would be led to believe that the granting of a promotion of this description would advantage the class of persons whose cause was so ably advocated by Mr. Bannerman; let us, therefore, consider what benefit will accrue to the old Captains and Subalterns of the Army should such a Brevet promotion take place as is usually granted every five or six years. Let us suppose that all Colonels holding commissions dated prior to 1830 will be shortly made Major-Generals, and that the usual proportion of Lieutenant-Colonels and Majors receive a step of brevet rank; will this, by the removal of Field Officers from regiments, give such promotion to the junior ranks as they have a right to expect? We think it will not. Far from such being the case, we have reason to believe that many regiments will derive but little, if any, advantage, even from a more extended promotion of this description than we have anticipated.

As we cannot at present spare time to ascertain in what degree each branch of our Military service would be probably affected were the results of Mr. Bannerman's motion to dwindle into a Brevet, we shall only consider the case of the Officers of a corps which is confessed to be most unfavourably circumstanced in regard to promotion—we allude to the Royal Marines. On reference to their lists we find that a promotion such as we have described would give them two steps. How inadequate is this to the necessities of the corps—how unlikely to give satisfaction to the long list of one hundred and seventy old and meritorious Captains and Subalterns of the last war. Although we are not disposed to deny that our General and Field Officers have strong claims on the country, still we cannot but protest against their enjoying an exclusive right to consideration. The old Officers of the junior ranks in all departments have many of them served gallantly and faithfully, and none more so than those of the Royal Marines; we therefore trust that His Majesty will take care that the unparalleled length of time which they have been kept in the ranks of Captain and Subaltern shall not prevent their participating in whatever sums Parliament may grant for the benefit of old Naval and Military Officers.

It was with great satisfaction we observed in the Report of the Debate in the House of Lords on the Post Office and Packet question, on the 20th ultimo, that the Duke of Richmond, appealing to the First Lord of the Admiralty, said, "that he trusted as a new arrangement was about to take place as regards the Government Packets, that Officers of the Navy would no longer be suffered to be hotel keepers;—his Grace might have added, and this too whilst wearing His Majesty's Naval uniform. Assured as we are, that this degrading, disgraceful system must, and will, now be speedily altered, we will not further enlarge upon the subject, than to express the gratification which we shall feel on seeing an end put to a practice which we have unceasingly condemned, as bringing dishonour on a profession which never knew a stain.

Of late the outcry has been loud that our Army is composed of the dregs of the people, and that our system is one calculated to deter the better classes from enlistment. We are not disposed to admit the truth of this double assertion in its full extent, though in part true. Indeed, to effect any material improvement in our soldiery, we must cease to make our Army a mere colonial one, and the public purse must afford the small means requisite to effect earlier reliefs. For we hold it as certain, that so long as we keep our regiments twenty years in India, no man, unless drunk or debased by some crime for which he shuns being detected, will enlist into a regiment doomed, as those in India are, to banishment for life. We know, from an extensive acquaintance with the Army, that it is not the fear of corporal punishment which deters men of respectable connexions and steady habits from enlisting, but the fear of banishment from their native land during their military life. Look at the recruits who offer for our Cavalry regiments and Foot Guards—compare with them those who offer for our Colonial Service regiments. Will any man say the recruits are of the same class? They are not. In appearance, education, intelligence, and moral feeling, the men of the Cavalry and Guards are superior to those of the Line. In the Artillery, also, none of which are ever left half as long abroad, and of which no portion is doomed to an exile in India, we find a class of en far superior to the men of the Line. All lempts at raising the morale of our Army must l till we adopt an earlier relief for Foreign rvice. Then, and then only, can we make eor- ral punishment, as capital is, a mere dead letter the Mutiny Act. We must hold out some hope our soldiery, when embarking for India in par- ular, that the period of banishment is not to for life; let him clearly understand that the ximum of his service in that far foreign land is he fifteen years—we wish it could be ten; and t, at the expiration of that period, he might be tain of returning to his native shores. We ve endeavoured to lay this subject before the litary authorities in every phase, and to ex- se the hardships under which the system of ief now in force places at least twenty thousand itish soldiers. We fearlessly ask, is the state our regiments in India such as the Commander- Chief approves? Is the conduct of the seniors en of the Army of His Majesty in India at all at meets the approbation of the head of the my? The public have only to refer to our umns for the number of Courts-Martial d on officers in India, not to speak of the pri- es, for offences seldom committed in our Army ving elsewhere. All this arises from the reck- s state in which men feel who are condemned to ch protracted foreign service.

We lament to state that great difficulty exists procuring good recruits for the King's service India, and we have reason to suspect that at e Horse Guards, too, some difficulty is found in ducing officers of talent, rank, or wealth, to ter a regiment banished to India for twenty ears!

The rule for relief of regiments seems to be of he following kind, whenever a favourite regiment ecomes senior at home, and must go abroad,—it , to "select a corps for return to the United ingdom that has been out of it ten years, but in e Mediterranean, America, the Cape, or Mau- tius." Would not it be a fairer mode to relieve regiment longest abroad by the regiment longest home, except when that regiment longest at me is to relieve a regiment in either Indies, om which it has itself last returned. In that se, let the next regiment which has come from e Mediterranean, America, Cape, or Mauritius, the one to relieve the regiment from the East West Indies. We know that the Army deserves s fair play, and we trust that ere long it may ve it.

We shall never cease to exert ourselves to ob- n this justice for our regiments. Favouritism last going out of fashion, and we believe that no an is more disposed to satisfy the just claims of e Army than Lord Hill. The Army awaits from hands a reformation of the system of reliefs, d a curtailment of the length of service in India fifteen years, as promised years ago but not yet lfilled, as the regiments of 1819 are still there, d likely to remain for several years more, unless giments be sent out direct.

We take the following from The Times of Wed- sday: our Contemporary states it to have been ceived from "a Correspondent," and a reference our pages of the last two months will show at the article is compiled therefrom.

"The state of our Army has of late excited more than eral attention, and the public has received with interest e communications of our correspondents on matters onnected with it. However well-informed our readers ay be of the condition of the soldiery serving in the United Kingdom, they may not be aware that nearly 20,000 of their fellow countrymen are doomed by the system now in force to a service in India of twenty years, and in some late instances of twenty-five years. The King's army now serving in India consists of the following regiments:—Cav., 4th, 11th, 13th, and 16th Lt. Dragoons. Inf., 2d, 3d, 6th, 9th, 13th, 16th, 17th, 20th, 26th, 31st, 39th, 40th, 41st, 44th, 45th, 49th, 54th, 55th, 57th, 62d, and 63d. Of the Cavalry, the 11th and 13th have been in India since 1819, and the 4th and 16th since 1822. Of the Infantry, the 16th, 20th, 45th, and 54th have been abroad since 1814; the 6th and 55th since 1821; the 13th, 41st, 44th, and 49th, since 1822; the 3d since 1823; the 40th since 1824; the 2d, 31st, and 57th, since 1825; the 39th since 1827; the 26th since 1828; the 63d since 1829; the 62d and 17th since 1830; and the 9th since 1832. The present rate at which the regiments are relieved from India, is one yearly, which, if persisted in, will leave our regiments there fully twenty-five years. 'Tis true that one or two regiments have been relieved within twenty years, but as the corps now stand, unless the rate be changed, their service in India must exceed twenty years. But it is not only of the length of service abroad that our Army complains, but of the unequal length of it, which that large portion in India suffers. All our regiments in India are doomed to nearly twice as long a foreign service as our regiments elsewhere serving abroad, many home and in better climates. In India the service averages above twenty years; in all our other foreign stations about ten years. But this is not the only difference between serving in India and in the colonies: the regiments stationed abroad, except in India, leave in the United Kingdom four out of their ten companies, as a depot; to and from which an interchange of officers and privates takes place, which renders the foreign service, which is nominally ten years, one of six or seven only for each individual. Compare with this double advantage of shorter service abroad, and the interchange to and from home which the regiments serving out of India enjoy, the twofold hardship of twice the length of service, and no interchange, under which the regiments of His Majesty are now suffering in India: for the corps on the Indian establishment have depots for recruiting, consisting of one company each, and that is a skeleton, consisting of a Captain, four Serjeants, four Corporals, a drummer, and occasionally a few men, who are merely collected from the recruiting parties, to be embarked yearly to fill casualties in their several regiments. To remedy this obviously unjust system of relief, and not entail an undue expense on the public, the fairest plan we have heard proposed is to make the maximum of Indian service 15 years, and not to relieve any regiment elsewhere of 10 years' service abroad, except in the W. Indies, so long as any regiment in India has been abroad 15 years, and that this relief be made by the reg. which has been the longest in the United Kingdom, and not last from the W. or E. Indies."

IN closing our observations last week upon the Parliamentary Return of all Reports and Communications relating to the Ships built by the present Surveyor of the Navy, Sir William Symonds, we adverted to the extraordinary discrepancy which appeared in the official reports made of the Vernon at different periods; and we now return to the subject, because our contemporary, The Hampshire Telegraph, has, in a spirit of unfairness which cannot be too severely exposed and deprecated, made some extracts from that part of the report which is unfavourable to the Vernon, and totally suppressed the other portion. Now, whatever opinions Editors may please to indulge in, or whatever side of a question they may advocate, we have always considered it a duty we owed to our readers, whilst professing to publish the details of an official report, to furnish it impartially; it is then competent for them to form a judgment upon the subject, supposing the return itself to be inaccessible. Strong as our opinions are known to be upon this question, we appeal to the public, whether we have not invariably pursued this course, and given ready insertion to a vast mass of statements on either side, until the Navy and the country were satisfied that the question was decided. A contrary course we should have considered to be not only disingenuous but an absolute fraud upon our readers, leading them to believe that we had furnished all the information contained in an official document, when we had kept back the principal part. This is not the first time, however, that The Hampshire Telegraph has acted this unworthy part with reference to the Surveyor; there is the case of Mr. Hawkes, the master shipwright of Pembroke Dock-yard, who was actually charged by our contemporary with falsifying his official report of the estimate of building Vanguard; and we leave it to the service to judge, whether this conduct is to their taste, or creditable to the parties concerned. As regards the returns in question, however, we shall first observe, that they were printed on the motion of Mr. Charles Wood, the Secretary to the Admiralty, a warm admirer and powerful defender of the Surveyor's principle, and though we cannot give room for the detail of each return, nor pretend to do so, for the purpose of making partial extracts, we can assure our readers that they are generally favourable to Sir William Symonds's ships, and present their qualities in a view of which his friends and admirers may well be proud. As regards the Vernon particularly, we find that Sir George Collier and his officers' report, in 1832, is favourable. In the following year she was under the command of Sir G. Westphall, and after cruizing in the Channel proceeded to North America, with the flag of Vice-Admiral Sir George Cockburn. Although it has been confidently stated, that the gallant Admiral made a report unfavourable to the ship, our readers will remember that we have repeatedly denied it, because such a proceeding would have been an unusual one, at variance with the general custom of the service, and only called for by some extraordinary occurrence, or a special order of the Admiralty. It turns out accordingly, that this talented officer never made any report respecting the Vernon, and has expressed himself in terms of admiration at the ship's behaviour when in the gale off Ushant, in which position, if she had not possessed the extraordinary capability of carrying her foresail when it could not be ventured upon another ship, it is more than probable that we should have heard no more of Vernon or her performances, and the service would have had besides to regret the loss of one of its brightest ornaments, in the person of the gallant Admiral. We next come to the reports of Captain M'Kerlie, in 1834-5, which are extremely favourable; but it is needless to dwell upon the superiority which this ship displayed in March, 1835, in company with Caledonia, Portland, Endymion, &c. &c. &c., and again in December last, with Revenge, Barham, and Columbine. We may observe, however, that her stowage and trim appear to have been materially altered by Captain M'Kerlie, and, like the President, decidedly for the better; for, whilst in 1832-3, we find her drawing 21 feet forward, and 21 feet 9 inches aft, with a 9 foot 3½ inch port; in 1834-5 her trim was 20 feet 11 inches forward, 22 feet 2 inches aft, with a 9 foot 6 in. port, having 18 tons less water, with a trifle more ballast. It has been remarked to us by several persons who were in the Vernon at the former period, that the ship frequently went 12 or 13 knots, whereas the utmost inserted on the return is 11½. This can be easily decided by reference to the ship's log. Altogether she seems, under her present management, to have improved nearly one knot an hour in all points of sailing. We recommend the managers of Clubs and Reading-rooms, frequented by Naval officers, to purchase the Parliamentary Documents published in June, 1835, and May, 1836, in order that they may not be led away by false reasonings founded upon some partial opinions extracted from these reports.

EVERY succeeding day brings before us some additional grounds for urging the immediate adoption of that which we so strongly maintained the necessity for, in our number of the 11th ult., namely, the transfer of the Coast Guard, or Preventive Service, to the ADMIRALTY. The extraordinary, and we may say, the cruel case of a Mr. John Dillon, as recently shown in his petition to the House of Commons, affords another irrefragable testimony of the impropriety, and, we may truly add, the injustice, of placing any public establishment under a control that is unacquainted with all the details connected with such service; for how can any Board of Civilians, such as that which the Customs and Treasury are composed of, be capable of deciding on points wholly foreign both to the education and avocation of its members? There is not a sailor or seafaring person in either of those departments, and yet each has, in succession, during the last eighteen or twenty years, had the superintendence and sole direction of nearly four hundred Naval Officers, whose duties in it are in a great part, if not wholly, connected with the sea.

The case we have now mentioned, that of Mr. Dillon, is one in point. Here, a gallant young Officer did his best, in a small boat, to board an American schooner, laden with tobacco, some miles off the coast of Ireland; and because circumstances prevented his accomplishing this object, and though he succeeded in compelling her to run into a port near by, where she was captured, yet he was most cruelly and most shamefully, as the result has proved, branded with cowardice by the Lords of the Treasury, when he claimed a share of the prize, which damning stigma he laid under for several years, until the present Government most liberally and most justly referred the question to a NAVAL man—Admiral Sir Edward Codrington, to decide upon; who, after a due examination into every fact, unhesitatingly declared that ers was not a shadow of suspicion attached to Mr. Dillon's conduct in this affair. Still, notwithstanding his acquittal, it seems he has not been deemed entitled to any further share of the capture than 50l., which was offered him by way of compensation, although the prize sold for fifty-three thousand pounds; and the subordinate Custom-house officer, who seized this vessel in consequence of Mr. Dillon's having forced her into the Irish port, shared above eleven thousand pounds for his proportion! This is a case which we consider far outweighs any that we have ever heard of, where Flank Stations have been allowed to share in the capture, for Mr. Dillon and his boat's crew appear to have been, in point of fact, the real cause of this vessel's having been taken, and yet they only offer him fifty pounds out of fifty-three thousand! Added to this injustice, they throw a blasting cloud over his character for a series of years, which, when thoroughly investigated by a competent authority, is found to have been without the most remote foundation!

Can any compensation, we ask, make amends to this unfortunate young Officer for the heart-breaking treatment he has received?—Can any sum of money heal the wound which has been so cruelly kept open for nearly eight years? and will any one have the hardihood to maintain after this, that the Coast Guard Establishment, composed as it is, of 400 Naval Officers, ought to remain for another month, or even for another day, under the authority and controul of Civilians?—persons wholly incompetent to decide on the true merits of any cases brought before them. If the worthy officer who holds the chief appointment in this anomalous service, were but permitted to exercise his own free judgment in every case, the thing would be very different, but it is well known that he cannot do this, and that his suggestions and even recommendations are frequently thrown aside and disregarded. It is upon this point, as NUMA has truly observed, that everything connected with the well-being of the Coast Guard Service evidently hinges. The Board of Customs is indisputably unfit to conduct it satisfactorily or successfully; and Captain Bowles has little, if any, actual power over the force nominally under his direction: hence the confusion throughout this service. The Custom-house officers, who are associated with it in various forms, as we have already shown, and who are, in effect, made by the board the referees in the different representations of the Inspector and chief officers to the Comptroller-General, too generally regard the Naval Officer with a jaundiced eye,—the Naval Officers, in return, entertain no very exalted opinion of their Custom-house allies. Thus there arises a division of interests and of views, and a jealousy is awakened, which time itself will never lessen or destroy.

Again, then, we repeat, that if it be desired to make the Coast Guard Service an efficient one, and thus to obtain the full value of the half million sterling, and upwards, per annum, which it costs the nation, let it be forthwith removed from the controul of the Board of Customs, and placed wholly and solely under the authority of the ADMIRALTY.

Outlawry.—A notice was on Monday posted in the hall of the Middlesex Sessions-house to the intent and meaning, that if the following persons did not appear to surrender to their respective plaintiffs or to the sheriffs by a certain time, they would be outlawed:—The Hon. William Paget, commonly called Lord William Paget, Harriett Griffith Lloyd, Emilia Sophia Hall, Felix Pryor, Charles Shard, John Nugent Fraser, Francis Swinton, Edward Richard Buller (two charges), Henry Veitch, Augustus Barrington Price Powell Hamilton (two charges).

The Hon. Mrs. Newton was in the Zoological Gardens on Sunday last, with her sister, Mrs. Blackwood, and a large party of fashionables.—Globe.

On Tuesday evening, after the breaking up of the House of Lords, as the Duke of Cumberland, the Duke of Wellington, the Earl of Aberdeen, and several other Peers, were passing across Bridge-street, a ruffianly-looking fellow uttered a discordant yell. The party immediately turned their heads towards the spot from whence the sound appeared to issue, and the Duke of Cumberland fixed a steady regard upon the ruffian who had insulted them, and who immediately shrunk back among the crowd, as though ashamed of himself. This was the signal for a tremendous cheer from all sides, which was acknowledged by the noble party, who then continued their course without any further interruption.

A mistake has occurred as to the period at which the reduction of duty on newspapers will take effect. The time originally intended was the 6th instant; but as it is impossible that the bill can pass by that period, or for some weeks after, no day can yet be positively fixed upon for its commencement.

Letters from Coblentz say, that since the beginning of June, the necessary preparations have been making for a camp of 21,000 men near the high road to Andernach. The head-quarters will probably be at the Royal country seat at Engers, on the right bank of the Rhine, where a bridge will be thrown over the river.

Brussels papers mention, that the soldiers quartered in that city are still much afflicted with ophthalmia.

Mr. Richards has been returned as Member for the county of Merioneth, in the room of Sir R. W. Vaughan, who has accepted the Chiltern Hundreds.

Upwards of 100 Peers met on Saturday at Apsley House, for the purpose of determining upon the specific course to be pursued in reference to the Bill for the Reform of the Corporations of Ireland.

It is confidently reported at Vienna, that the marriage of the King of Naples with the Archduchess Theresa is decided upon. The eldest daughter of the King of Wirtemburg has refused her hand to King Otho, her Royal Highness being averse to any marriage that would take her away from Germany.

Bristol Spa.—On Saturday the first grand gala of the season took place. The company was numerous and fashionable, and the grounds in admirable order. A visit to this charming spot is one of the most delightful recreations.

Prince George of Cumberland is early and hard tried in the school of misfortune, and the trial seems to produce the effect which it would be well it produced on all those sent to that severe school—a religious turn of mind. The young Prince is bereft of the blessing of vision. Add to this, the heavy illness of his mother, to whom he is attached with the greatest filial tenderness, and one may judge of the truly sombre condition of his feelings.

The Duke of Cleveland has contributed 50l. to the O'Connell subscription fund.

The Echo of Valenciennes states that Jean le Prevost, a custom-house officer of that town, has lately gone to England, upon the invitation of the Marquess of Anglesey, whose life he saved in Spain twenty-five years ago, and whom his Lordship had not been able to discover till lately.

British Auxiliary Legion.—General Orders.—San Sebastian, June 18.—"It being understood that conversations have been held at the outposts in some few instances with deserters from the British Auxiliary Force, or from the auxiliary army of Don Pedro, or who were dismissed under circumstances of deep disgrace from either of these forces; the Lieut.-General thinks it best to remind the troops that, as we are now acting in complete conjunction with the British Marine Forces, all British subjects found in arms, or aiding or abetting in any way the insurgents, are, in fact, rebels against the British Sovereign, and are liable to, and will most probably suffer, if taken, the punishment of death by the British laws. It is, therefore, directed for the future that if any person speaking English, and therefore likely to be of the infamous and degraded class of individuals referred to, shall present themselves at any of the outposts, that they be immediately fired at, and all communication or parley with the opposite picket of the enemy be cut off, and hostilities re-commence with such picket until this practice on their part cease."

"Head Quarters, San Sebastian, June 18.

"It being necessary, for the purpose of avoiding mistakes when the troops are engaged, and to ensure regularity and system in carrying on the service before the enemy, the Lieut.-General directs that all officers in the service of the allies of her Majesty, co-operating with the troops under his command, shall be considered as holding two steps of rank above that which they actually hold in the service of the Power to which they belong, and shall be obeyed and treated with the proper honours accordingly."

"June 10.

"In an official report to the Lieut.-General from Col. Colquhoun, commanding the Artillery, respecting the operations of the 28th May, there is the following passage, which the Lieut.-Gen. has pleasure in publishing in orders; and still more so as his own observation on different occasions is in full confirmation of this report, which comes from so high and competent an authority:—

"'The Rl. Marine Artillery, under Lieut. Castneau and Lieut. Parke, manned six guns of the Legion, and occupied the heights of San Bartolomi and Iturrildr. By the steady precision of their fire they contributed most materially and effectually to the dislodgement of the enemy, and I am under the greatest obligations to these officers, and to the men under their command, for the steadiness and spirit with which all the orders given to them were executed.'"

"The decorations of the first class of the royal and military order of St. Ferdinand, and of Isabel II., are conferred upon the undermentioned officers and soldiers for their conduct on this occasion: viz.—Cross of St. Ferdinand—Lieut. Castneau, and Lieut. Parke, Royal Marine Artillery. 1st Class—Lieut.-Col. Shaw, Capt. Wade and Quartermaster Brookes, Artillery of the Legion. Cross of Isabel II.—Volunteer Henry Serj.-Maj. M'Graham, Serj. A. Wilson, Capt. H. Williams, Ens. W. Boyne, and Ens. J. Jeffries.

"The Lieut.-Gen. takes this opportunity of expressing his acknowledgments to Col. Colquhoun for his important services in command of the field artillery with this corps of the army, whose complete knowledge of the ordnance department, in his preparatory arrangements, is as conspicuous as his energy, zeal, and courage, in rendering his guns available at the most advantageous points, and at the proper time during the moment of action,—qualities which the Lieutenant-General observed with great satisfaction in all the conflicts which have lately taken place with the enemy, and particularly on 5th, 28th, and 31st May and 6th June."

The health of Brig.-Gen. Evans being restored, he is to proceed in the Royal Tar steamer, to resume his military duties. The Royal Tar is to convey about 150 recruits to join the Legion.

Bayonne letters of 25th ult. state that Gen. Evans had received orders from Madrid to make himself master, at any price, of the lines between Irun and Hernani. He replied that his force was insufficient to enable him safely to undertake such an attack, and he proposed to wait until the arrival of two regiments which had been promised to be sent to his aid.

Captain Brenton's Naval History of Great Britain in Twenty-four Weekly Shilling Numbers, Dedicated by Permission to His Majesty.—The first No. of the new weekly issue of this truly national work is now published, price 1s., and will be found to possess great claims on the attention of the public, and on that of the naval profession in particular. The general history commences at the close of the American war in 1783, and will be brought down to the present time. In the course of the work will also be given a new introduction, comprising a sketch of our naval history from the very earliest period, thus rendering it the most complete naval history that has ever appeared. The first part is embellished with a copy of the remarkably fine likeness of his present Majesty, drawn by Sir T. Lawrence. The work will also contain portraits of Lords Howe, Duncan, Nelson, Collingwood, Exmouth, and most of the other distinguished officers in the service, to secure good impressions of which, orders should be sent early to the booksellers.

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY, 27th June.—The Duke of RICHMOND having declined to found any proceedings on the letter of Lord J. HAY, of which he had moved for the production, the Marquess of LONDONDERRY gave notice that on Friday he would put some questions to Ministers on the subject of the war in Spain.—Lord MELBOURNE moved that the House do agree to the Irish Municipal Corporations Bill, as returned in its altered state by the Commons. The Noble Lord after expressing a hope that the Peers would not, on this occasion, be carried away by passion or prejudices, briefly detailed the nature of the measure which he was urging the House to sanction. Lord LYNDHURST followed, and pressed it on their Lordships that it was their duty, as guardians of the national interests, to reject the alterations in the Bill, without regard to what might be the personal consequences to themselves. The Marquess of Clanricarde and Lord Falkland supported the amendments; the Earl of Ripon and the Earl of Winchilsea opposed them. Earl GREY suggested, but would not formally move, a middle plan, by way of compromise. Lord ELLENBOROUGH recommended the adjournment of the present Bill, to give an opportunity to Ministers to bring in some new measure, founded on the suggestions of Lord GREY, in the hope that both parties might be able to concur in it. Lord Holland supported the amendments. The Duke of WELLINGTON contended that the Bill created rights that had never existed before, and were opposed to all the policy of good government. The new corporations would have no power but to tax, and to that power there was no limit. The Marquess of Westmeath, the Duke of Richmond, and Lord Wharncliffe, severally addressed the House—the first and last against the Bill, and the second in favour of it. Lord MELBOURNE shortly replied, and a division took place—For the Bill, present, 75; proxies, 48—123. Against it, present, 142; proxies, 78—220. Majority against the Bill, 97. On the motion of Lord ELLENBOROUGH a committee was then appointed to draw up reasons to be presented to the Commons.

TUESDAY, 28th June.—The Duke of RICHMOND presented a special report from the select committee on Railways, by which it is recommended that no Bill for the formation of a Railway in a densely inhabited district should be passed unless it contained clauses to make provision against accidents by fire from the flues of the engines. Earl Fitzwilliam fully concurred in the propriety of the resolution. The report was laid on the table, after which a clause, embodying the resolution, having been inserted in the London Grand Junction Railway Bill, the Bill was read a third time and passed. —The Entails Relief (Scotland) Bill and the Waste Lands Cultivation (Ireland) Bill were severally read a third time and passed.

THURSDAY, 30th June. — Lord ELLENBOROUGH brought up the report of the select committee appointed to draw up reasons for dissenting from the Commons' amendments to the Irish Municipal Bill. Lord MELBOURNE condemned the course taken in regard to the Bill, which he did not think that the reasons were sufficient to justify. A committee was then appointed to communicate the reasons to the other House.—The Lord CHANCELLOR presented a Bill for the abolition of imprisonment for debt, which was read a first time.

FRIDAY, 1st July.—The Duke of NEWCASTLE presented a petition from Protestant Dissenters in Dublin, for an inquiry into the number and management of religious houses in Ireland, and against any further grant to Maynooth College.—Earl WICKLOW presented a petition from the Vicar and Protestants of Rathmona against any grant of money for the purpose of increasing the funds of the Board of Education in Ireland, before a minute inquiry had been instituted into the manner of its working.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 27th June.—After the presentation of a great many miscellaneous petitions, Lord J. RUSSELL moved that, after the 1st July, Orders of the Day should take precedence of motions. After some discussion the motion was agreed to.—The House went into Committee on the Registration of Voters Bill.—The Tithe Commutation Bill was read a third time and passed.—The Sugar Duties Bill went through committee.

TUESDAY, 28th June.—Mr. M. J. O'CONNELL presented a petition from W. Bryan, Esq., complaining of oppression on the part of the Executive Government of Van Diemen's Land. Sir G. GREY defended the conduct of the Lieutenant-Governor, whom he considered quite justified. Mr. M. J. O'CONNELL then presented a petition from H. Melville, a printer and publisher in Van Diemen's Land, who had been fined and imprisoned for a libel. Sir G. GREY stated that on inquiry both the fine and imprisonment had been remitted.—The report of the committee on the Brighton Railway, which recommends that "Stephenson's line" shall be adopted, was discussed at great length, and, on a division, was confirmed by a majority of 40: the numbers being 101 and 61.—Lord J. RUSSELL obtained leave to bring in a Bill to facilitate the abolition or removal of personal tithe.—The Registration of Births Bill was read a third time. On the question that the Bill do pass, Mr. GOULBURN moved a series of amendments, which on a division were rejected by a majority of 24.—The Marriages Bill was read a third time. On the question that the Bill do pass, Mr. GOULBURN moved a clause to the effect, that when notice was given to the registrar of any registered building, of an intention to contract a marriage, it should be accompanied by a solemn declaration that the parties had conscientious scruples to be married in a church or chapel according to the rites of the Church of England. A lengthened discussion ensued, after which the House divided, and Mr. Goulburn's amendment was lost by a majority of 69. Mr. WAREURTON then moved that the proviso to clause 18 be left out. For the motion, 108; against it, 67. The Earl of LINCOLN proposed that the Bill be read a third time this day six months. For the motion, 54; against it, 104.—On the motion of Lord ERRINGTON, the dispatches of Lord Aylmer from Canada to Mr. Stanley, of the date of March, 1834, and to the Earl of Aberdeen, dated March, 1835, were ordered to be laid on the table.

WEDNESDAY, 29th June.—The London and Brighton Railway Bill (Stephenson's line), the Metropolitan Suspension-bridge Bill, the Liverpool Court of Requests Bill, and the London and Blackwall Railway Bill, were read a third time and passed.—Among the petitions presented was one from Dr. Mulholland, similar to that presented on a previous occasion to the House of Lords.—Mr. HUME proposed the resolutions* as reported from the select committee on the House of Commons' officers, of which the following are the principal:—That the annual sum of 911*l.* be allowed to Mr. John Pratt, head door-keeper, and 874*l.* to Mr. F. Williams, under door-keeper; that after they shall retire, the annual salary to each of the door-keepers shall be 400*l.*; that 375*l.* a-year be allowed to Mr. Bellamy, late lower door-keeper, instead of 300*l.*, as messenger; 587*l.* to each of the three messengers, W. Gifford, C. Stein, and W. Cook; 112*l.* to W. Beeson, and 120*l.* to J. Lead, as extra messengers; and 1,000*l.* to Mr. Dorington, as chief clerk of the Petition, Bill, and Fee-office. The foregoing and other resolutions were agreed to.—The Spirituous Liquors' Sale Bill was thrown out by a majority of 37.

THURSDAY, 30th June.—Mr. T. Attwood presented a petition from Mr. W. D. Perrot, late a Lieut., Royal Navy, complaining of his dismissal. After some discussion, the Hon. Member gave notice that he would on Thursday next call the attention of the House to the case.—Sir E. CODRINGTON said that in some papers which had recently been laid on the table, Sir J. Barrow was stated to have received a pension of 1,000*l.* a-year, in consideration of the services he had performed for a certain number of years as a Secretary of the Admiralty. Whatever the public services of that gentleman had been, he was quite sure they did not exceed those of the oldest Captains in the Navy; and as he was told by gentlemen in office that those Captains were subject to be scratched off the list if, in the opinion of certain individuals at the Admiralty, they had been guilty of conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, he wished to know whether Sir J. Barrow was subject to the same ordeal. Mr. C. Wood said, the House was aware that the Admiralty exercised the power of removing half-pay officers who had been guilty of unofficerlike or ungentlemanly conduct; but Sir J. Barrow was not on that list.—Mr. EWART adverted to a notice posted outside the door, that strangers would be admitted into the gallery only upon orders from Members. Instead of thus limiting, he was for extending the power of admission, and he promised to bring the subject forward at another time.—A conference was held with the Lords on the subject of the Irish Municipal Corporation Reform Bill. After the Lords' reasons for not agreeing to the Commons' amendments had been received and read, Lord J. RUSSELL moved that the Bill be read a third time that day three months. A debate arose upon this question, but the motion was agreed to.—Sir J. HANMER moved "That it is contrary to the independence, a breach of the privileges, and derogatory to the character of the House of Commons, for any of its Members to become the paid advocate in Parliament for the conduct there of either public or private affairs of any portion of His Majesty's subjects." Lord J. RUSSELL said that he, with respect to the general proposition, thought that the practice of having paid agents for the colonies in that House was a good one. He, therefore, moved the previous question. For the previous question, 178; against it, 67.

* [We have elsewhere noticed these resolutions.—ED.]

FRIDAY, 1st July.—Mr. FINN asked whether instructions had been given by the Irish Government to suppress or conceal any of the outrages which were committed there, or whether the returns were in any way falsified?—Col. PERCEVAL asked whether it was true that the sub-inspectors and inspectors of police in Ireland were ordered to send in their reports of outrages marked "private and confidential," and that then the returns were made up to suit the views of the government. Lord MORPETH said there was not the slightest tinge of truth in the statement.—Mr. S. CRAWFORD moved the total extinction of tithes in Ireland, which, after a long discussion, was negatived.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—Last Saturday evening, at six o'clock, an assassin, armed with a walking-stick gun, who had lain in wait near the gateway leading from the Tuileries to the Pont Royal, fired at the King at the instant he was passing in his carriage in company with the Queen and Madame Adelaide on his return to Neuilly. No one was struck. The King himself tranquillized the assembled people. The assassin was immediately arrested and attempted to stab himself, but was disarmed in time. The National Guards on duty, in the highest state of indignation, were about inflicting summary punishment, but after a moment's pause, gave up the villain to the proper authorities. The King reached Neuilly at half past six. The ball was found in the carriage. Addresses from all parts of the country (among them from the English in Paris) are pouring in, and corresponding orations are hourly delivered by his Majesty.

A new rebellion broke out last week at the military school of St. Cyr, which arose from some animosity conceived by the pupils against one of the adjutants. We are told that the young men went so far as to take up arms. The affair became so serious, that thirteen of the ringleaders have been sent to the military prison of Paris, and were expected to be brought before a court-martial; but, we are informed, that it is more probable that they will be ordered to join several regiments.

DENMARK.—Retrenchment is the order of the day in Denmark. The suspension of military exercises will this year produce a saving of nearly 20,000 dollars; and the arrangements made for the King's excursion to Jutland will effect another saving of 30,000 dollars. If to these be added the saving of 50,000 dollars in the building of the castle of Christianburg, there will be a total saving on the budget of 100,000 dollars, or 400,000. The steam communication between Copenhagen and the east of the Baltic is in full activity; four vessels sail and arrive weekly.

MEXICO.—The death of General Barregan has caused great confusion in the capital, where all was anarchy and uproar. The Swedish Consul's house had been robbed and himself murdered. The Liberal party were engaged in exciting revolutionary movements, and daily expressed open hostility to the existing order of things.

Theatres.

KING'S THEATRE.—I Briganti was produced on Thursday night, for the benefit of Tamburini, and with the most decided success. The music of Mercadante is not of high character, but there is much in I Briganti to elevate his reputation. The subject is from Schiller's Robbers, which tragedy has been treated by the Italian playwright even worse than Shakspeare's Othello was by the dilettante poet, the Marquis de Berlo, who furnished Rosini with his Libretto. Grisi, Rubini, Lablache, and Tamburini, sustained the principal characters. Grisi executed her part with all the purity of style and perfect intonation which are peculiarly her own. A beautiful melody sung by Rubini, a hymn to the Virgin; and a duet between Lablache and Rubini, in the finale to the second act, were, with other pieces, rapturously encored. The house was not crowded.

LYCEUM.—A new melo-drama, in two acts, from the pen of Mr. Grattan, entitled The Rebel Chief, was produced on Monday last, and has been played every evening since. The story is as follows:—Norah, a peasant girl, is in love with O'Brien, a soldier in the King's service, and under the disguise of a sybil induces her lover to desert, and become the leader of a band of rebels. In an engagement between the King's troops and the insurgents, the latter prove victorious, and O'Brien succeeds, at some peril, in saving the life of Captain Blakely, his former commander. O'Brien is soon after taken prisoner by a party of soldiers, and is ultimately saved from death through the intercession of Captain Blakely. The first act is of little interest, and was received throughout with strong marks of disapprobation. The second act is better, several of the situations are powerful and effective, and completely restored the audience to good humour.

Mrs. Keeley is entitled to praise for the able manner in which she played the part of Norah. Serle and Hemmings sustained the principal characters very effectively. The best thing in the piece is the Irish jig in the first act, it was well danced by M'Ian, Oxberry, Miss Gilbert, and Miss Novelle, and was loudly encored. The house we are glad to say was well filled.

Literary Notice.

Life and Adventures of Jonathan Jefferson Whitlaw; or, Scenes on the Mississipi. By Frances Trollope, Author of "Paris and the Parisians," "Domestic Manners of the Americans," &c. With fifteen Engravings. 3 vols. R. Bentley.

This is, without any exception, the most characteristic, the most original, and the most powerful work that has yet proceeded from the pen of Mrs. Trollope. It is the concentrated essence of the observations she made on the American character, during her residence in the United States, and although a perusal of it will make brother Jonathan wince a little, its truth, and spirit, and freshness, cannot fail to delight European readers. The satire of the novel is chiefly directed against the odious traffic in slaves, and against the infamous and sanguinary tyranny perpetrated on the unhappy negroes, which many Americans so absurdly attempt to reconcile with the boasted liberty of their country. The hero, Jonathan Jefferson, is the son of a "squatter," on the shores of the Mississipi, of whose early life in that desolate region an account is given, which, at the very commencement of the book, transports the English reader into a new world, so strange are the incidents and characters, and so singular the scenary surrounding the reckless adventurer, his wife, and sister. In his early youth (for the young Jonathan is born in "the bush") our hero displays the gross and brutal, but cunning and thrifty, disposition of his worthy father, and being always on the alert to promote his own interest, contrives to become patronised by a rich slave owner of a character as despotic and flagitious as his own; and, after committing a series of enormities, in which cupidity, cruelty, and libertinism, strive for pre-eminence, succeeds to the possession of his master's property, and revels in it for a while to his own content, and to the misery of all around him. His career, however, is terminated by a dreadful act of retribution. Such is the main subject of the story; but it is perpetually relieved by scenes of the richest gusto, wherein the employment of the Yankee dialect is irresistibly ludicrous. We give the following extract from the commencement of the tale. It describes the first moments of Whitlaw's landing to take possession of his new location on the shores of the Mississipi.

"'Wall, now, this is what I call a right-down elegant location. D'ye comprehend the privilege of that handsome creek, gals? Maybe you don't, and maybe I do. Mind now what I say: if that creek don't prove as good as a dozen axes, say my name's not Jonathan.'—'My!'—exclaimed the matronly Portia, drawing her thin shawl more tightly round her; for the April sun, though it had almost scorched them on the river, could not prevent the deep, dank shade of the spot from sending a cold shiver through her limbs. 'Well, now, Jonathon, but that will be considerable convenient anyhow.'—'I expect so,' replied the man, folding his arms, and turning himself slowly round to every point of the compass to ascertain the capabilities of the spot for the 'improvements' he meditated. 'I expect so,' he repeated with an absent air, as if his faculties were wholly absorbed by the examination he was making.—To an unpractised eye, a single glance might have seemed sufficient to discover everything that the desolate spot had to show. Before them spread the mighty mass of muddy waters, bounded, as it seemed, on all sides by the matted foliage of the level forest, above whose unvaried line sprang the high arch of heaven. Beneath their feet was a boggish, peat-like soil, that looked as if occasionally it might itself become a part of the swollen river's bed. Around them rose innumerable tall, slender trees, between whose stems the eye could not penetrate two hundred yards in any direction, so thickly was the ground covered with an undergrowth of bear-brake and reeds.—To an unpractised eye, one glance would have been enough, and too much, to show all that could there be seen; unless the next might have discovered a friendly bark upon that muddy stream, which might have borne the gazer from it for ever.—But with Jonathan Whitlaw the case was very different. Not a stem, not a stick, not a reed, not a hollow half filled with stagnant water, nor a crevice that might facilitate its escape, but was examined with as much earnest attention, and reasoned upon with as much provident wisdom, as might suffice to decide the locality of a palace.—The women meanwhile again seated themselves on the chest which had done them such good service in the boat, and for a time sat silently watching the master of their destiny as he meditated in the secret council-chamber of his own breast the plans on which it hung. A low whispering then commenced between them, the result of which was a half-timid, half-cossing attempt on the part of Clio, the bolder spirited of the two, to draw his attention from the future to the present.—'I say, Bub,' she began, 'I say,—do you know that Porchy and I are right down dead almost for summet to eat? I can get at the bag with the corn-cakes in no time. Shall I, Jonathan?'—Jonathan turned his quid of tobacco deliberately from one cheek to the other, and then replied, 'I'll tell you what it is, sis,—we are here—no matter why,—Perhaps 'tis because I happen to like this here part of the country best—but at any rate here we be, and I can tell you that here we must bide—but as to spending our days in nothing but eating, it's what I'm not provided for. Now look you, both of you, and I'll tell you the case at once. The nearest town to this here bit is Natchez, and I calculate that is not over nigh for a walk through the bush, seeing it can't be much less than twenty miles right a-head. I won't say that we can't buy a bushel of corn-meal no nigher, but I won't say that we can; but this I will say, that near or far, we shan't never get it at all without having the Spanish wheels ready, I expect; and concerning that commodity I'll tell you no less,—I have got no more of it than a mouse might carry easy at full trot. But, however, there stands the meal-tub chock full, and dry as a ripe tassel,—I took care of that. And here's five gallons of whiskey, and there's my axe, and here's my arms,' hearing them as he spoke to the shoulder. 'So be good gals, and I'll fix a palace for you; but don't be for everlasting talking of eating, just in the beginning,—I shall be wrathy enough if you do, I tell you that: so mind and say no more about it, but each of you take a drop with me, and you'll be after helping me build in no time.'—With a celerity which showed the effect of habit, Jonathan Whitlaw produced a horn from his pocket, and skilfully applying it to the little cask, drew forth what he considered as a fitting portion for each, and presented it in succession to the two females. This generous and gallant office performed, he swallowed a treble dose himself, and instantly set to work.—His prophecy was speedily fulfilled—the poisonous inspiration did its work, and under its feverish influence the young women dragged and pulled, and pushed and carried, according to his orders, with a degree of strength and perseverance greatly beyond what their age and appearance promised.—The increase of vigour which he had himself acquired from the draught showed itself not only in the activity with which he laboured, but by a more than ordinary degree of loquacity—a part of which may serve to explain his future plans.—'This here tree must come down smack—and them there three small ones into the bargain; then this one, and that one, and they two t'others, shall have their heads and branches cut off slick; and there's the four corners of the house as clean as a whistle, and we must roll up the logs round them. I say, gals, don't I know the river? I expect this will prove the most profitable privilege of a wooding-station of any 'twixt New Orlines and Cincinnati. What with that there elegant creek, and this here handsome elevation, (the spot selected for his house was at this time at least six or seven inches above the level of the river;) and what with them there capital hickories, and this dreadful beautiful sweep in of the river, that will bring the steamers up to me whether they will or no;—I say, gals, that if things do but go on at New Orlines as bravely as they do now, I'll make dollars enough, by wooding their boats for 'em, to open a store for all the notions in creation at Natchez, before ten years are out. Why, since we've landed I've seen half a dozen first-rate timbers shoot the creek; but I'll soon see if I can't find a way to stop 'em short, as soon as I've got a pair of hands to spare.'"

MY HEART'S IN THE HIGHLANDS *.

"Mein Herz ist im Hochland, mein Herz is nicht hier,
Mein Herz ist im Hochland, mein Hochland, bei dir,
Auf der Jagd, nach dem Hirsch, auf der Jagd, nach dem Reh,
Mein Herz ist im Hochland, wohin ich auch geh.
Fahr wohl, du mein Hochland, fahr wohl, du mein Nord,
Du Heimath des Muthes, der Tapferkeit Ort,
Wohin ich auch wandle, wohin, allerwärts,
In den Bergen des Hochlands bleibt ewig mein Herz.

Fahrt wohl, ihr Gebirge, Nordglänzender Schnee, Fahrt wohl, grüne Thäler am blänlichen See,
Fahrt wohl, dunkle Wälder, wildhängende Huth,
Ihr stürmenden Bäche, lautbrausende Fluth.
Mein Herz ist im Hochland, mein Herz ist nicht hier,
Mein Herz ist im Hochland, mein Hochland bei dir;
Auf der Jagd, nach dem Hirsch, auf der Jagd, nach dem Reh;

* This excellent German translation, of one of our sweetest songs, is by Kaufmann, the translator of some of Shakspeare's plays and Burns's poems.

Sound Advice.—A spendthrift nobleman had a fortune left him, and was advised by a friend to purchase an estate notorious for its neglected state and sterility. "Why," said his Lordship, "there is not a single passable road through the whole estate."—"That is the very reason I wish you to buy it," said the other, "it will take you the longer to run through it!"

THE SEA.

How tranquil seems the Ocean in its Summer sleep!
Upon its bosom pleasure glides along, while yet there weep
The new-made Widow, childless Matron, and the Maid bereft
Of living Hope—no vestige of the Barque or Crew its fury left.
Still is the "line above and the Blue below" of the wide Sea,
A grateful theme, its world of Waters from the bulwark of the free;
Regardless of the Storm, fair Commerce seeks the distant zone
Upon the "Open Sea," which forms the margin of Britannia's Throne.
—— Ocean! thy Summer breezes Fashion courts,
And Beauty joins the tempting coolness of Aquatic sports;
Even Rank, disburthened of its State, partakes the gay promenade,
Or reins the gallant Steed, regardless of disparity in grade.
Elite of Elegance, while thus ye Health and Pleasure seek,
The tints of Beauty oft'times fade, its fleeting hues bespeak
A need of timely care—ROWLAND'S KALYDOR is the genial friend
Which these in blooming plenitude maintains—its powers defend
The Cheek of Beauty from the Solar ray, and from the stain Of Salt and Acid Vapours, hovering o'er the outstretch'd Main.
Exotic fragrance soft Kalydor sheds, in pure refreshing dews,
And ROWLAND'S Art each Charm sustains, or pristine brilliance renews.

PROSPECTUS OF THE

PARTHENON CLUB (late the Spencer and JUNIOR ATHENÆUM).

Objections having been made by many of the Members to a double name, originally selected for this Institution, the same will in future be denominated "The Parthenon Club."

The regulations of this Institution will be selected from those which have already been proved the most eligible in the best clubs now existing, and will most particularly discourage all tendency to play, and all party feeling.

The object of "The Parthenon Club" is to form a union of Naval, Military, Literary, Scientific, and Travelled Men, to be managed by a Committee, annually chosen by ballot from their own body. And it is intended that one of the especial and distinguishing characteristics of this Club shall be found in a most extensive collection of domestic and foreign literature.

A Library will be formed, and its increase secured on a scale adequate to the proposed objects of the Club.—The Naval and Military section to receive all due consideration.

The Club will also be supplied with an extensive assortment of Journals and Periodicals, Transatlantic as well as European, in addition to domestic publications of a similar description. Under the foreign head it is believed that peculiar facilities will be possessed.

Whilst, in almost every other Club in London, the alienating spirit of politics is found to divide men who feel every regard for the private worth of each other, it is sincerely hoped that "The Parthenon" will afford a neutral ground, where all opinions may be blended in the cultivation of literature, and the socialities of life.

With a view still more to further these ends, the Club will extend its advantages to the acquaintances of its members, who will be entitled to invite a friend to dine, under such restrictions as may hereafter be adopted.

It is intended that the site of the Club shall be in the immediate neighbourhood of St. James's.

Gentlemen desirous of becoming Members are to send their address and reference in writing to the Secretary.

By order of the Committee,

Committee room, 26, Pall-mall, July 1, 1836. J. B. JONES, Secretary.

At a Meeting of the Committee held this day,

Lord Dudley Coutts Stuart, M.P. in the Chair,—

Resolved,—

That this Club being now formed, the members be requested to pay their entrance and yearly subscription monies to the Bankers, Messrs. Coutts and Co., on account of the trustees of "The Parthenon Club."

Resolved,—That two hundred additional Members be admitted on the terms now stated in the Prospectus, viz.—Fifteen Guineas entrance fee; Five Guineas, yearly subscription; and One Guinea annually for the Library.

The arrangements will shortly be completed, and the Club-house announced. Dudley Coutts Stuart, Chairman.

MILITARY and Naval Gentlemen, Writers, Cadets, Midshipmen, and Families, are respectfully invited to Messrs. W. H. FURTHER CONFIRMATION OF THE UNFAILING VIRTUES OF

OLDRIDGE'S BALM OF COLUMBIA

January 28th 1836.

Gentlemen,—I regret that I have not earlier acknowledged to you the great benefit which I have derived from the use of your Balm of Columbia, which, in my own case, I have happily found to possess all the virtues you ascribe to it; I at first, and by mere accident, purchased a Bottle from one of your Agents merely as a trial; and until lately was unaware of its justly famed and great celebrity, or of your being resident, and having a principle establishment in England, otherwise I should have felt pleasure and a sense of duty to you and the public in making this acknowledgment before. About four years ago, I found my hair rapidly falling off, not occasioned by any bodily illness, and to such an extent was my head really bald that I was compelled to wear a wig; about three afterwards I began to use your Balm, and after the lapse of nine months, and the application of only three 3s. 6d. bottles, I was enabled to leave off the wig, finding my hair quite restored to its pristine strength, which it has retained ever since.

I am, Gentlemen, yours very obliged,

To Messrs. O. & A. OLDRIDGE, Balm of Columbia Establishment, 1, Wellington Street, Strand, London. BENJAMIN BRIDGER, 31, Little Newport Street, Leicester Square.

OLDRIDGE'S BALM causes Whiskers and Eyebrows to grow, prevents the hair from turning grey, and on the first application produces a beautiful curl from the hair from scurf, and stops it from falling off. Abundance of certificates from gentlemen of the first respectability are shown by the Proprietors, C. & A. OLDRIDGE, 1, Wellington Street, Strand, London, where the Balm is sold.—Price 3s. 6d., 6s., and 11s. per bottle.

TO TRAVELLERS, Merchants, Captains, Shippers, and Families.—WRAY'S CHALYBEATE GERMAN SEIDLITZ POWDERS, prepared by M. O. WRAY, Chemist, &c., 118, Holborn Hill, and sold in boxes (containing powders for 12 glasses) at 2s. each. The various effects produced by the operation of Seidlitz Powders, depend entirely on the different modes of preparation. The Chalybeate German Seidlitz Powders now recommended by the proprietor are brought to that state of perfection by which the most uniform results will be experienced, and, in conjunction with their pre-eminence over all other aperient medicines, the proprietor flatters himself the low price at which they are now prepared (being less than one half usually charged by druggists for the common Seidlitz Powders) will secure to them a decided preference. Where also may be had Ginger Beer Powders, 6d. per dozen; three dozen, 1s. 3d. Soda Water ditto, 8d. per dozen, three dozen, 1s. Common Seidlitz, 1s. per dozen; three dozen, 2s. 6d. Lemonade ditto, 6d. per dozen; three dozen, 1s. 3d. N.B. Be careful to have the "Chalybeate German Seidlitz Powders," prepared by M. O. Wray, 118, Holborn-hill, as all others are genuine.

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY.

AS the following letter received from Major-General Sir Henry Wheatley, Keeper of the Privy Purse testifies:—

Sir, I am honoured with the King's command to express His Majesty's sense of your polite attention in sending the two bottles of essence of Ginger. His Majesty has been pleased to direct me to forward you 10l. pounds in payment for it—trusting you will find that amount. I am, Sir, your's obediently, St. James's Palace, June 25th, 1835. M. WHEATLEY.

To Mr. Dycenus Woodhouse.

WOODHOUSE'S ÆTHERIAL ESSENCE of GINGER is particularly recommended to all cold, phlegmatic, weak, and nervous constitutions; it is certain in affording instant relief in Cholera Morbus, Spasms, Cramps, Flatulence, Languor, Hysterics, Heartburn, Loss of Appetite, Sensation of Fulness, Pain and Oppression after Meals; also those Pains of the Stomach and Bowels which arise from Gouty Flatulencies; digestion, however much impaired, is restored to its pristine state, by the use of this Essence for a short time, if taken in Tea, Coffee, Ale, Beer, Porter, Cider, or Wine; it corrects their Flatulent tendency.

The undermentioned, and 209 other Medical men have given certificates of their unqualified approbation of the value of this Essence, as also of its superiority over all other similar preparations. Drs. James Johnson, Physician to his Majesty, A. T. Holroyd, S. Ashwell, R. Rowley, A. Middleton, C. Loudon, D. Davies, Surgeon to their Majesties, J. Pereira, G. Pilcher, F. Salmon, F. Tyrrell, J. H. Curtis, Aurist to his Majesty, C. Millers.

This Essence is prepared only by DICIMUS WOODHOUSE, Operative Chemist Extraordinary to his Majesty, 18, King William-street, New London-bridge; and sold by him, wholesale and retail, in bottles 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., 10s. 6d., and 21s. each; and may be had of all Medicine Venders.

TO PREVENT FRAUD.

THORN'S POTTED YARMOUTH BLOATERS, for Toast, Biscuits, Sandwiches, and Wine in Pots, 1s. and 2s. each. The high repute and immense sale of this delicate preparation has induced several would-be tradesmen (who not having an idea of their own) to attempt an imposition by labelling a pot exactly like his, thereby to deceive the public and injure him, (having actually applied to his printer for that purpose,) well knowing they cannot prepare the Fish, the receipt being an old family one, and the secret in the curing of the Red rug, by which its rancid qualities are destroyed, and it becomes so delicious a relish. It is easily detected by observing his signature, Alex. Thorn, on the side, and on the top, Proprietor of the celebrated TALLY HO! SAUCE, for Fish, Game, Steaks, Wild Fowl, and all Made Dishes, imparting a zest not otherwise procurable at the most economical cost, in use: in Bottles, 2s. and 4s. each, warranted; in all climates. Wholesale at the Manufactory, Thorn's Oil, Italian, and Foreign Warehouse, 229, High Holborn; also of all wholesale oilmen and druggists; and retail by all respectable oilmen, grocers, and druggists in the United Kingdom.

MESSRS. DELCROIX & CO., Perfumers to their Majesties and the Royal Family, beg leave to form the Nobility and Gentry that they have now completed eir SPRING STOCK of NEW and FASHIONABLE PERFU-ERY, and have also just imported, from Paris and the South of ance, a choice selection of the most approved articles of the y. They respectfully recommend the following esteemed pre-rations to the attention of their Patrons and the Public:—

Delcroix's Creme de Sultanas, for softening and beautifying e complexion.

Delcroix's Genuine Russian Bear's Grease and Huiles Antique. Messrs. D. and G. have recently obtained injunctions from the urt of Chancery preventing certain parties from selling a spu-ous imitation of their Esprit de Lavande aux Milleflcurs and egetable Extract, both of which will in future bear their signa-re on the labels, and their address, 158, New Bond-street, on e back of the bottles.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—Mr. HOWARD, Surgeon Dentist, 33, Fleet-street, continues to supply FICIENCIES of the TEETH, on his improved principle, at the ms moderate terms, whether arising from neglect, diseases of e gums, or age (from a single Tooth to a complete set), without touching the roots, or giving any pain, and in every case re-ring perfect articulation and mastication. An inspection of r. Howard's method will immediately convince those at all quainted with the subject of its superiority.

Tender and decayed Teeth cured and effectually preserved from rther decay.—At home from ten till five.

NORTON'S truly valuable CAMOMILE PILLS, for INDIGESTION, &c.—These Pills are a pure tract of Camomile Flowers, prepared by a peculiar process, by ich all the medicinal properties of rather more than one ounce the flowers, are concentrated into four moderate sized Pills, ey are mild in operation, and have proved wonderfully success-l in removing every symptom of indigestion, sick headach, s of appetite, giddiness, heartburn, costiveness, eruptions of e skin, and all complaints arising from a disordered state of the estive organs; they require no alteration of diet, and their ration will be found so beneficial in giving tone to the stomach, ulating the bowels, and in promoting a healthy habit, as ly to convince all who take them of their great utility.

Persons who have suffered from indigestion for several years, ve by their use in a few weeks perfectly recovered, which is a nvincing proof, that in the smallest compass, is contained the reat quantity of the tonic principle of so peculiar a nature, as pervade the whole system, through which it diffuses health d strength.

Sold wholesale by Barclay and Sons; T. Butler; E. Edwards; Newberry and Sons; W. Sutton and Co., and A. Willoughby d Co. (late H. Godfrey Windsor), 61, Bishopsgate-street Within, London; and retail by nearly all respectable Medicine endors.

Be particular to ask for "NORTON'S PILLS," for in conse-uence of their great success some unprincipled persons have epared a spurious imitation.

STIRLING REES' ESSENCE.—Its vast and increasing sale, from the recommendation of the highest ical characters, as well as those who have experienced its icious and beneficial effects, proves its great success and su-ority over every other preparation, in being the most safe and ctual remedy ever discovered for the Cure of Gonorrhœa, eets, Seminal Weakness, Strictures, Fluor Albus, or Whites, ains in the Loins, Kidneys, Lumbago, Gravel, Irritation of the adder, Urethra, and every Disease incident to the Sexual and inary Organs, frequently performing a perfect cure in the short ace of three or four days. It contains, in a concentrated state, the efficacious parts of the Cubeb, chemically combined with rsaparilla, Buchu, and other choice alteratives, which renders it valuable to those afflicted with secondary Syphilitic Symptoms, ins of the Bones, Ulcers, Pimples, Blotches, Scorbutic Erup-s, Glandular Swellings, and all diseases arising from a tainted d impure state of the blood. A regular perseverance in use has invariably been found to improve the appetite, assist digestive powers, and give muscular strength, energy, and eerful health to the whole system. The most delicate female y take it with perfect safety. It is an excellent restorative ere the constitution has been weakened or injured by mercurial from any other cause.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

The Proprietor being apprised of several unprincipled Medicine endors, who, when applied to for this remedy, substitute, under e name of Cubebs, Sarsaparilla, &c., a worthless and injurious ticle of their own make, feels it is an imperative duty to say, at it is absolutely necessary, before purchasing, to see the name J. W. Stirling," Whitechapel, is engraved on the Government amp affixed outside the wrapper on the bottle, without which cannot be genuine.

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL, unequalled for promoting the growth of the Hair, preserving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, rendering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and sustaining it in curl under the different varieties of atmosphere.

Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO., Perfumers to the Royal Family, No. 63, Oxford Street, London.

Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and Co. were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to the Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individual who divulged it to them, or whose head would inevitably have paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties successively employed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn oaths of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three centuries.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed the greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and most uncivilised countries great value is set upon a fine head of hair. The great care is proverbial that is paid to the cultivation of the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, and art is there well known to succeed in outrivalling even the far-famed beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during the period of three centuries, and has been found undeviatingly successful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, soft, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess (as is done in some instances) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair upon cast iron—it will do no such thing; but, if regularly applied, it will re-produce the hair where nature ordained its existence, if lost from those causes to which baldness is referable; it will promote the growth of the hair generally,

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY,

sustain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a brilliant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a pure LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, unsophisticated with the deleterious articles usually employed to dye Oils red, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the hair, and although an oily substance, the

ORIENTAL OIL DOES NOT RENDER THE HAIR GREASY, and is therefore free from the general complaint against every other article in present use for the same purpose, including those filthy substances miscalled Bears' Grease, which are neither more nor less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil submitted to various manipulations to divest them of the fetid animal smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform principle. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dews of the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprive it of which it soon withers and dies; so the hair, unless properly nourished, becomes weak and gradually drops off, for, minute as a single hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human hair will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface covered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, and which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tendency, the hair is destroyed thereby; thus it will be observed that those persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in life, which is merely caused by the acid caustic nature of the perspiration settling on the hair and being absorbed, which entirely destroys it; but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will prevent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury; and if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely removes the scurf, without the assistance of the standard combs, an operation so distressing to the heads of children.

Price 3s. 6d., 6s. 6d., and in pint bottles, with glass stoppers, 12s. each.

MONSIEUR MALLAN and SONS, Surgeon Dentists, respectfully acquaint their Friends and the Public, that for the better convenience of their City connexion they have OPENED an additional ESTABLISHMENT, at No. 10, LITTLE HILL, City (opposite the Belle Sauvage Inn), where one of the above firm may be consulted daily, and at their Old Established residence, 32, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, where they continue to restore Decayed Teeth with their celebrated MINERAL SUCCEDANEUM, so universally recommended by the Faculty in London and Paris. THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Soulli, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad Imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, 72, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sams, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand; Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c., &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

SARSAPARILLA. "Great praise is due to Mr. Hillyard for his very clever and much needed preparation of Sarsaparilla. His mode of preparing it preserves the necessary active qualities, which, according to the old mode, were allowed to evaporate, thus rendering it one of the most sure, as well as simple, remedies in purifying the blood."—United Service Gazette.

"In justice to one of the many preparers of Sarsaparilla, we must give the meed of praise to Hillyard's condensed preparation, knowing some friends of ours who have received much benefit from its use."—Fraser's Literary Chronicle.

"I have made trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba. "My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I know of; the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly, "April 15, 1835." (Signed) "WILLIAM HENTSER.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL Subduing all relaxing tendencies, it firmly keeps the hair in curl and other decorative formation, during many hours, unimpaired by crowded assemblies, the dance, or even equestrian exercise.

In exposure to marine atmosphere, and in sea-bathing, the hair is subject to change—a glossy appearance and silky feeling of the hair being frequently superseded by palpable coarseness and harsh texture these subversive results are all averted, and removed, by this incomparable Oil—the friend of both sexes for while it facilitates the progress of female beauty, it subjugates by producing Whiskers, Mustachios, etc., the graces of manhood.

THE CAUSE OF DEATH.—The Orientalist, Naturalist, Victor Jacquemont, repeatedly avers in his Letters, that the English die from neglecting the use of Lavements. It is therefore with renewed confidence that Messrs. SAVORY and CO., 360, Strand, adjoining Exeter Hall, respectfully inform the Public that they are the sole Manufacturers of DR. SCOTT'S NEW PATENT CLYSO-PUMP, or LAVEMENT MACHINE, of which an eminent Physician, who has filled an important station in the Honourable Company's Service for thirty years past, has thus expressed his opinion:—"I am confident that the introduction of Dr. Scott's CLYSO-PUMP into India would tend greatly to the preservation of Life; and it is a desirable thing that every family should be provided with it. It is admirably suited for hot climates, as it does not possess any plastic tube, the best kind of which are very perishable and annoying in a country; but decay most quickly in tropical regions. In short I think that Scott's Patent Lavement Machine should form an item in every outfit to India." Messrs. Savory begs to state that this CLYSO-PUMP is the latest and greatest improvement in Lavement Machine at present before the public, and is [illegible] to the serious attention of persons who are in the habit [illegible] or requiring aperient medicines, and who suffer from [illegible] or other disorders connected with a confined or [illegible] the bowels. The distinguishing characteristics of this [illegible] Patent are that it gives no trouble of fixing and [illegible] used, whilst the liquid passes from the pump in [illegible] current, and thereby utterly prevents the admission of [illegible]

PROSPECTUS OF THE DEPOSIT

LOAN BANK COMPANY.—Capital, £500,000,

With power to increase the same, if necessary.

In 100,000 Shares of 5*l.* each. Deposit, 1*l.* per Share. The remaining 4*l.* to be paid in two instalments, namely, 2*l.* per share at each call, of which two months' notice shall be given.

Office, pro. tem., No. 39, Essex Street, Strand.

Secretary, Mr. W. Montague.

The object of this Company is to afford the means of immediate pecuniary assistance to every one (of whatever station in life) who will deposit satisfactory security, in goods or otherwise, for the repayment of the Sums advanced, with equitable remuneration for the same, during such period as the loan may be required.

The extensive business transacted by those already engaged in lending money on deposits, and their immense profits, are themselves sufficient reasons for the establishment of a Deposit and Loan Bank; but pecuniary facilities, such as this Company will be enabled to afford to every class of Society, by means of their large Capital and resources, are not at present attainable through the ordinary channels of deposit and loan.

It is intended that the laws, enacted for the regulation of those persons who are already occupied in similar pursuits, shall be scrupulously observed by this Company.

The abrogation or partial repeal of the Usury Laws, recognises the principle that "those who lend money are entitled to an equitable remuneration;" and the Company will avail itself of the advantages to be derived by a fair, just, and honourable advantage of this principle.

The business of the Deposit and Loan Bank will be divided into several departments—all of them to be conducted on such a liberal scale, as will be consistent with the accommodation of the public generally, and the protection of the interests of the Shareholders.

Among the advantages to the Shareholders, it is intended that every one holding five or more Shares may make deposits of money at any time with the Company (agreeably to a scale hereafter to be determined), for which he shall be entitled to, and shall receive as Interest thereon, 5*l.* per cent. per annum. And such Shareholders (holding two or more shares) who require pecuniary accommodation, shall always be entitled thereto, and shall not be called upon for a higher rate of interest than 7*l.* per cent. per annum, upon any loan they may obtain by the deposit of their goods, &c., as security.

Arrangements are making to extend to the Provinces the benefits offered by this Company, Branches of which will be established in most of the principal Towns throughout the Empire.

Applications for Shares to be addressed (post paid) to the Secretary.

A second Prospectus will be ready for delivery in a few days.

W. Montagna, Secretary.

Admiralty, Somerset-Place, June 24th 1836.

HALF-PAY and RETIRED-PAY to NAVAL OFFICERS and OFFICERS of the ROYAL MARINES.—Notice is hereby given, That on the receipt in the Wages Department, at the Admiralty Office, Somerset-Place, of the Declaration or Certificate of identity required from each officer by his Majesty's Orders in Council, a Bill for the amount of the half-pay or retired pay due will be made out in this Department, which will be payable by the Treasurer of his Majesty's Navy, on the following days, viz.—

On the 11th and 12th July, to Masters, Surgeons, and Pursers, and their Attorneys.

On the 13th, 14th, and 15th July, to Lieutenants at 9s. and under, and their Attorneys.

On the 16th and 18th of July, to Lieutenants at 7s. and 8s. a day, and Chaplains, and their Attorneys.

On the 20th, 21st, and 22nd of July, to Admirals, Lieutenant-Generals, Major-Generals, Colonels, Lieutenant-Colonels, Majors, Captains, Commanders, and Retired Commanders, and their Attorneys.

Great inconvenience having been experienced by the claims of officers, who have not chosen to receive their half-pay or retired-pay on the days fixed for their rank, being brought forward on the days appointed for the payment of half-pay and retired pay to officers of different ranks, notice is hereby given that no such claims can be future be attended to on the days not appointed for officers of those ranks; but for the accommodation of such officers, and also for the convenience of those who may not have transmitted their Declarations or Certificates sufficiently early to admit of payment on the above-mentioned days, a recal will take place on the 25th and 26th of July; after which the half-pay and retired-pay will be payable on the first and third Wednesdays in every Month, excepting during the general payment.

Officers residing in or near London, and wishing to receive their half-pay or retired-pay in person, are requested to deliver their Declarations or Certificates into the Wages Office, at the Admiralty, Somerset Place, or transmit them to the Secretary of the Admiralty, immediately on the expiration of each quarter; and those employing agents, are also requested to furnish their agents with their Declarations or Certificates, with the same dispatch, for unless such documents are delivered into this Office early, delay in the payment must unavoidably ensue.

As it sometimes happens that officers apply, personally, for their half-pay or retired-pay, without having previously sent in their Declarations or Certificates as required by the usual advertisement, any delay or inconvenience to which they might be subject by this oversight it is to the power of the officers themselves to prevent, by an adherence to the existing regulations.

Under the authority of the statutes relating to the pay of the Navy (besides the above mentioned modes), officers may receive their half-pay or retired-pay in any of the following ways, viz.—

1st. By drawing a bill for the amount, in which case they are to give notice thereof by letter to the Secretary of the Admiralty, marked in the corner "Half-Pay or Retired Pay Accountant-General," and thereupon a proper form of a Bill of Exchange will be sent to them. 2d. By a Remittance Bill or permanent Remittance Bill, payable to them at or in the neighbourhood of their residence by the Collector of Customs or Excise. 3d. By extract, at a Dock-Yard, where there is an establishment of Pay Clerks.

In either of which two latter cases they must give notice to the Secretary of the Admiralty marked in the same manner, and a Remittance Bill or Extract will thereupon be made out and transmitted to them. In all cases, the officer signifying his desire of payment is to state at the foot of his letter his Christian and Surname, his rank, and a full description of his residence.

Mem.—Bills of Exchange drawn under or by virtue of the Act 2 Geo. 4, cap. 20, are not liable to the Stamp Duty.

No persons residing out of his Majesty's dominions are entitled to the privileges of this Act.

1st Drag. Gds.—The Adjutancy is vacant by the promotion of Lieut. Hill, a Waterloo officer, to an Unattached company. There are yet two Subalterns in the Regt. his seniors, and more than 20 years Lieutenants!

INFANTRY.

1st Foot, 2d Batt.—The Maitland tr. arrived at Cove Harbour on 1st inst., and the Service cos. embarked on 4th and 5th, with the exception of 2 off., 30 men, and 2 women, for whom there was not sufficient room on board.

11th—Lieut.-Col. Bieshopp, C.B., has sailed from Falmouth for the purpose of joining the Service cos. at Corfu.

35th—Last week the officers of this reg. gave a splendid farewell dinner in their Mess Room, Formoy Barracks, to their late Commanding Officer, Col. Keightley, on his retirement from the service. Nothing that hospitality and social companionship could contribute to the perfection of the evening's enjoyment was wanting; and the gallant Colonel will no doubt reflect with satisfaction on the high regard entertained for him by the officers whom he so long commanded.

51st—The comp. at Downpatrick moved on 2d for Belfast, to arrive on 4th.

76th—The Service cos. at Grenada are in tolerable health. Total loss since the reg. arrived on the West India station in March, 1834—two officers, 132 men, 5 women, and 20 children.

We decline publishing any of the garbled accounts in circulation of the proceedings of the Court-Martial on Capt. Baines, but wait the finding and sentence, about which we have little doubt. We know the silly attempts that are making, but we caution the service against any statements through whatever channel put forth. The Horse Guards must act with decision.

78th depot—The comp. at Monaghan moved to Armagh on 30th ult.

81st—The Barossa transport, from Cork, with the Service cos., under Lieut.-Col. Maclean, arrived at Gibraltar on 9th June.

86th—"This reg., which has been garrisoned here for the last three years, is now on the eve of leaving us—the man-of-war destined to convey them hence being hourly expected. We cannot allow this gallant corps to leave these shores, without paying a well-earned and well-merited tribute of commendation to it. In their intimate and daily intercourse with the Civilians of this community, the conduct of the officers of this regiment has been characterised by those attributes of gentlema bearing, urbanity, and sociability, which have ho every clime and every country to secure to the chara of the British officer the respect and esteem of all w whom he associates. And, as if emulous to distingu themselves alike with their officers, the soldiers of regimeot have, since their sojourn here, comported th selves as soldiers should do—and saying this, we can them no higher compliment. The courteous in peace always gallant in war—their own colours, flaunting w the names of some of our hardest fought fields, testify to of the fact—our own recollections of them assure us of other; therefore we say—may prosperity attend them ev where."—Guiana Chronicle.

LOCAL MILITIA OFFICERS.—We have authority to c tradict the following statement which has appeared several newspapers, no such circular as that referred having been issued by the Home Department:—"Offi of the Local Militia who have volunteered a continuation service under the authority of a circular from the Secret of State's office, April 1836, are entitled to privile rank, and precedence, according to their respective co missions, in the same degree as though the Local Mili force were now embodied."

There is a report that the Invalid Depot at Fort Pitt i be broken up, and that the invalids on landing from fore stations are to be sent direct to Chelsea, where an inva hospital is to be formed. It is supposed that Sir Jam M'Gregor's visit on the 5th inst. was connected with t measure.

After this B. and F. d manned their bridges, and the pontoons went down river, and formed jointly a bridge of 470 feet across a Whole's Place. The troops crossed, as also guns. B chard's Bridge was the admiration of every one, yet Pasle was more rapidly formed. The decision of the Commit is not known. A Serjeant of the 68th died of the ha accidents went to the Hospital.

WOOLWICH DOCK-YARD, July 8th.—(From our own correspondent.)—On Monday last the Rhadamanthus st.-ship was towed into the basin, and orders have since been received for preparations to be made for her to take her gun on board, by shipping slides and shot racks being fitted to her, from which it is expected she is intended to be sent to the coast of Spain; all possible despatch is being used to get her in readiness for service; her poop has been knocked away, so that she is now flush fore and aft. The Officers appointed to the Firefly have been put to some inconvenience by reason of that st.-v. not having been brought down here to be commissioned by Lieut. J. Pearse but an order has been ultimately received for those gentlemen to be accommodated on board the Salsette hulk. Mr. Drew, master's mate, just appointed to the Firefly, has been deservedly promoted (having passed nearly 15 years) to the rank of Lieut., and ordered to join the Dublin, 50, flagship on the coast of South America. The Flamer st.-v., Lieut. Pothury, brought round several passengers from Plymouth, among whom was Mr. Pearse, a meritorious mate of long standing, late of the Medea, son of the gallant Director of Police. This young Officer comes from the Naval Hospital, Plymouth, invalided, from injuries sustained in the service. Pluto st.-v., Lieut. Sayer, in Temporary, has got men for the Salamander, and will take on board an Officer of Engineers, and some sappers and miners, to be placed under the orders of Lord John Hay. She is expected to sail next week. The Alban st.-v., Lieut. Tinling, will go to the West Indies to relieve another vessel. The following Lords of the Admiralty visited the Yard on Thursday: Rear Admiral Sir C. Adam, Captains Sir Wm. Parker and Elliot, accompanied by the Surveyor of the Navy, Capt. Sir W. Symonds. The Flamer will be paid off most likely next week. Ships in Commission in Port—William and Mary yt., Firebrand, Alban, and Pluto st.-v., and the Blazer, not in Commission. In Basin—Lightning. Not in Commission—Rhadamanthus and the Messenger st.-v. In Dock—Confiance.

PLYMOUTH, July 7th.—Lavinia lazaretto sailed for Liverpool on Wednesday morning, in charge of Mr. Denison, Master of the Impregnable. Plover packet arrived on Wednesday morning. Nautilus gun-brig, 10, is ordered here to repair her defects. Asia, 84, sailed on Monday evening for Portsmouth. Pink freight ship arrived with troops on Sunday, and sailed on Sunday. Athol tr.-ship, A. Kearsley, master, arrived on Monday, having on board depot of 99th reg. from Portsmouth. They were landed the same day at the Dock-Yard by the Camel and Tortoise lighters. On Tuesday, the depot of 98th embarked on board the Athol for Portsmouth, whence she will proceed with the 61st to Cork, bringing to Plymouth the depot of 43d. Athol sailed on Tuesday evening. Partridge tender arrived on Monday with volunteer seamen from Liverpool and Pembroke. She sailed from the former place on Monday week. Russel is ordered here to have her mainmast and capstan shifted. Sterling, private ship, is hourly expected here to embark a draft of the 29th reg., for the Mauritius. The following warrant-officers belonging to this ordinary sailed in the Cornwallis to join the Madagascar, as disposable officers for the ships on the station to which she is about to proceed.—Carpenters—James Sweeney, late of the Cleopatra; Matthew Taylor, Barracouta; Wm. Elms, Terror. Boatswains—Philip Penfield, Hope; Gilbert White, Beagle; John Pardar, Wizard. Robert Orange, late Carpenter of the Proserpine, has been superannuated on a pension of 55*l*.; Jos. Miller, Gunner of the Hope, 30*l*. In Harbour—Royal Adelaide, Imogene, Magpie cutter, and Partridge tender.

Extract of a letter from an Officer of H.M.S. Childers, dated "Gibraltar, June 10, 1836.—We have been this last month stationed in the Mole of Barcelona, the Rodney having been absent for the purpose of watering; the Tyne is gone to Mahon to smoke, being full of rats. The Clio is at Tarragone; the Orestes is cruising along the coast. We return immediately to Barcelona, with Capt. Parker's letters, &c., and expect to remain some little time."

The following Chaplains have been appointed, and some of them to ships: Rev. George Richards, Phelim Somerville, Pasco G. Hill, H. H. Franklin, G. Hegepe, John E. Kempe, E. S. Phelps, and W. G. Tucker.

The colony of South Australia, of which Capt. Hindmarsh, R.N., is Governor, extends from 132 to 141 degrees east longitude, and it is intended to build the town at Port Sinclair, lying the west entrance to Spencer's Gulf, in 26 deg. south latitude. Capt. Hindmarsh and Com. Pearl have been knighted with the royal Hanoverian order.

The officers waiting to join the Firefly steamer are now assembled at Woolwich, waiting the completion of the Dock-yard repairs. Besides her Commander, Lieut. Pearse, Mr. T. G. Mugford, Quarter Master; Mr. Drew, Mate; Mr. Taylor, Assistant Surgeon; and Mr. Keep, Clerk in charge, have been appointed to her.

STEAM CRUISERS.—On Monday H. M.'s royal steam cruiser Vulcan arrived at Poole from a cruise, took in coals, and sailed on the 2d inst. The experiment of steam cruisers for the prevention of smuggling has succeeded beyond expectation. It has been ascertained from undoubted authority, that within the last month more than 600 tubs of foreign spirits have been destroyed by the smugglers, as from the speed of the Vulcan, in any wind or weather, the smuggler is convinced of the impossibility of escape; in order, therefore, to save his vessel and crew, on getting sight of her, he immediately destroys his illicit cargo.

Sir John Franklin, R.N., will sail the latter end of this month for Van Diemen's Land, to assume the government, in the room of Col. Arthur.

The two sons of the Prince of Orange visited the model room at Somerset House on Tuesday, and appeared to take great interest in the variety of objects there exhibited. Two professional gentlemen, connected with the Dutch dock-yards, have also minutely inspected the models of Sir Wm. Symonds's ships, and expressed their admiration at the uniformity of proportion which is preserved from the smallest to the largest rate.

The reports in town from the Vanguard are most flattering. She works remarkably well, carrying a small weather helm, and is very quick at staying or wearing, the former evolution being generally performed in from two and a half to three and a half minutes. As soon as the ships are assembled, they will proceed on a cruise together. The Asia has visited Plymouth, and maintains her usual excellence in her sailing qualities, although her officers do not consider that she is as yet in perfect trim.

The following letter, from an Officer employed on the Euphrates' Expedition, clearly shows that if its success depends on indefatigable exertions, it will be achieved by Colonel Chesney and his enterprising associates:—"Euphrates steam vessel, on the Euphrates, 5th May, 1836.—After many tedious delays and vexatious annoyances, caused by the pitiful conduct of the Syrian Government, we completed the transport of the vessels and stores, to our station near Birjuk, in Feb. 20. My vessel, the Euphrates, 200 tons, 50 horse power, having the Colonel on board, made a trial up the river, on the 17th March, and commenced the descent on 19th March; we seldom steam more than from 25 to 30 miles in one day, which is accomplished in from one and a-half to two hours, as we are obliged to have the boats on a-head for the survey, and the Officers return by land to pilot the vessels. We have been twice aground, once for fourteen days, and again for three; the Tigris joined us at Kara Bam Boutch, on 18th April; she has also been aground for some days. We have been detained here some time, expecting a caravan of stores from Aleppo; on its arrival we push on to Diabour, where the Tigris is now waiting for us. Our scientific departments have made great progress, and from the ample fields of Syria and Mesopotamia, have made abundant specimens both in the Geology, Natural History, and Typography of this country. The river as far as we know, is perfectly navigable up and down for steamers of sufficient power and proper construction. We have had always in the main channel, from one and a-half to three fathoms water, the current varying from 3½ knots to 5, in the rapids, in the low season, and 4½ to 6, in the rapids during the high season; the greatest rise between the two seasons is from 14 to 16 feet, and liable to constant fluctuations, the river always rising or falling. The Euphrates has steamed 5.6 knots over the ground, against a 4.4. current, when drawing 3ft. 6in. on an even keel, engines working 30½ revolutions; therefore as the river is considerably more turbid below us, we may reasonably expect to make a speedy voyage upwards. We carry many stores down with us, to place in depot on the river, which makes our draught of water four feet; the descent is very anxious work, from the innumerable shoals, islands, &c.; but please God, we shall weather all yet; as for the Arabs, we are always as ready for fighting as they are, and we contrive to frighten them out of their wits; but they are certainly the most arrant thieves in God's creation. The other day we experienced our first shipwreck of a large barge, carrying about 40 tons of coals, stores, &c.; she was bilged on a rock, and sunk instantly in a rapid of nine fathoms water; the crew were saved, and the loss of not much consequence to us; we have now several smaller in our squadron. The expedition has suffered much from sickness, and lost many of its number, but a reinforcement of six seamen from the Columbine in the Mediterranean, and four soldiers from England make up its original strength. I am happy to say our Commander has recovered, but with many others, is subject to repeated attacks of ague.

The following ships are ordered home to be paid off:—Beagle 10, Columbia st., Comus 18, Griffon 3, Hyacinth 18, Jupiter 38, Savage 10, Vestal 26.

The Royal Tar steamer passed through Spithead from London for San Sebastian, on the 30th ult., with 150 recruits on board, principally men lately discharged from the St. Helena corps. Brig.-Gen. Evans, Com. M'Dougal, (b), and Lieut. M. Ioman, returning to the 1st Lancers from sick leave on account of wounds, were passengers in her.

The Galatea frigate is fitting in the Basin at Portsmouth for a coal depot, for service in the West Indies.

The Rapid 10, Lieut. Patten, arrived at P[illegible] on 30th ult., after a passage of 54 days, fr[illegible] Janeiro, with specie and diamonds on board to the [illegible] of 500,000 dollars on merchants' account. [illegible] has been on the South American station for [illegible] years, and within six months has visited B[illegible] Monte Video, and the Falkland Islands. On [illegible] th settlement at the Falkland Islands, the residents were all well; and it is generally wished that the British Government would colonize those Islands on a much more extended scale; at present the residents are very few in number, about twenty persons only, including Lieut. Smith and his boat's crew. The Rapid sailed from Rio on 8th, and Pernambuco on 19th May; left at Rio the Dublin, with the flag of Sir G. E. Hamond, Rover, Sheldrake, Hornet, and Spider, and the French frigate Cyrene, with the flag of a Rear-Admiral, and the French brig Bisson. The Blonde was at Valparaiso, Commodore Mason, intending to come round the Horn as soon as the Sparrowhawk should arrive there with specie from Guyaquil and Coquimbo. Cleopatra was on the North Coast; Harrier had gone to Rio Plata, to relieve Actæon, which ship was to bring Mr. Hamilton, the Ambassador, to Rio Janeiro. Talbot was on her way to Valparaiso from Rio Janeiro, touching at the Falkland Islands; the North Star was at Valparaiso; Rover arrived at Rio on 13th April, from the Pacific, and was to return immediately to Valparaiso. The Brandywine, American frigate, had arrived from Arrico, at Valparaiso, bringing intelligence that a severe battle had been fought between Salvierro's party and the Bolivians, in which Salvierro was killed—an event which had terminated hostilities. The Marines of the English, French, and American squadrons had landed at Callao, and proceeded to Lima, in consequence of the urgent request of the whole of the merchants of the different nations, to assist in driving the Indians back, who had been plundering and ravaging the whole country. On their approach, after a little skirmishing, the Indians retired. The American force round the Horn consisted of two frigates. The Rapid brought home 23 invalids from the squadron, under the medical charge of Mr. John Read; among whom are Capt. Willes (a), Dublin; Lieut. Harris, Sparrowhawk; Lieut. Collings, Sulphur; Mr. Spear, Carpenter, Harrier. Lieut. M'Adam also came home in this ship, on leave. The Rapid spoke, on 28th May, the schooner Garrydown, out from England 38 days, in lat. 3. 54. N., long. 27: 13. W., all well.

By letters from Malta to 11th June, we learn that Vice-Admiral Sir J. Rawley returned to that port on 16th May, with the squadron under his command, consisting of the Caledonia, Canopus, Edinburgh, Thunderer, and Revenge, ships of the line, and the Vernon frigate. The squadron sailed again on 25th, to resume its station in the Archipelago, except the Revenge, which was left behind, in consequence of a defect discovered in her foremast, which had been taken out. The Barham frigate sailed on 26th from Malta for Constantinople, with Col. Considine, late of 53d Reg., on board, who had received from the Sultan an appointment to divide his army into regiments, according to the European method; and the Numa transport on 28th, having on board a detachment of the Royal Artillery, for Corfu.—The Prince Regent transport (Lieut. Seymour, Agent,) arrived at Malta on 8th June, having on board the head-quarters of 59th reg. The Medea steam-vessel sailed from Malta on the 5th for Corfu. The following vessels were lying at Malta:—Ceylon (with the flag of Rear-Admiral Sir T. Briggs), Revenge, Prince Regent, transport, and the French st. of war Sphinx.

The salary of the new Master-Attendant (Mr. Hepburn), at the Portsmouth dock-yard, is fixed at the reduced sum of 500*l.* per annum; and in future the income of all the civil situations in this department of the public service, as may become vacant by death, will be reduced. We hear that 500*l.* is likely to be the maximum of such salaries.

The following ships still appear on the Navy List with their respective rates, altogether 96 vessels, mounting 4322 guns. It will be seen that they are appropriated to various purposes, having little relation to war; and it is probable that not a score of them could be made available for service in the greatest emergency, without considerable repairs. They should be removed from the List of the Royal Navy:—Aboukir, 74, Hulk; Akbar, 50, Quarantine service; Alonzo, Chapel; Argo, Hulk; Aurora, 46, Coal Depot; Badger, 10, Mooring Vessel; Barrosa, 42, Slop Depot; Berschermer, 50, E.I. The Belvidera, 42, Capt. Stong, was at Barbadoes on the 25th May, and about to go to Bermuda, to get a new foremast and foreyard. The Harpy, 10, was also there; and the Vestal, 26, and Gannet, 18, were hourly expected.

Deal, July 7.—A Dutch squadron, consisting of four frigates and four gun brigs, passed at the back of the Goodwin Sands to-day, and proceeded to the westward. It is reported they will rendezvous at Spithead.

The Naval Club gave a dinner on Thursday, at the Thatched House Tavern, to the First Lord of the Admiralty. The whole of the officers were in full uniform, and the banquet was one of the most splendid of the season.

Devonport Regatta came off on Wednesday. The prizes were admirably contested throughout the day: in fact every thing went off most agreeably, with one exception. As the "Morning Star," a yacht belonging to R. Cuff Greenhill, Esq., was saluting the competitors, in the haste to re-load, the man who was stopping the vent with his thumb suddenly removed it, and the consequence was, that the air got admission, the powder exploded, and the man who was ramming home the charge had his hand shattered by the wadding. The poor fellow has since been removed to the hospital.

On Thursday a Board of Admiralty inspected Woolwich and Deptford Dock and Victualling Yards, and the progress of the Prince Regent yacht, which will be taken out of dock 14th inst., to proceed in September to Muscat, under command of Capt. Gorgard, who brought home the Imaum (now Liverpool) 74.

By Bermuda papers 31st May, we learn that H.M.'s ship Gannet had captured a Portuguese slaver, and carried her into Nassau. The Nassau Argus gives the following particulars:—"H.M.'s ship Gannet has arrived off this port, bringing in the Creole, with 307 Africans on board, chiefly children; they were captured off St. Domingo, and had been out 25 days; they had not suffered much, although dysentery had broken out amongst them. The Creole is a fine vessel, and is said to sail fast. The whole have been landed. The slave deck in the Creole did not exceed two feet in height; the men were all manacled and crowded in the usual manner, so that if they had experienced bad weather, or long detention on board, many more deaths must have occurred.

YACHTS.—On Monday se'nnight the Earl of Harborough was re-elected a member of the R. Yacht Squadron, on which occasion a salute was fired from his Lordship's yacht in the Roadstead at Cowes.—Last week was launched, from Mr. Ratsey's yard, a beautiful clinker built cutter-yt., for J. Gifford, Esq., of East Cowes. She went off in grand style, amidst the cheers of the numerous crowd of spectators assembled.—Mr. Camper, of Gosport, on Thursday se'nnight, launched a very pretty yacht, the Breeze, 60 tons, for Capt. Lyon; a large company was in attendance.

East India Intelligence.

East India Company's Maritime Service.—On Monday a meeting of the officers of this service, who are excluded from the scale of compensation awarded under the provisions of the India Bill, took place at the South Carolina Coffee-house, Birchin-lane, for the purpose of receiving a report of the Committee, and to consider the best means to be adopted for obtaining compensation for the losses they have sustained by the abolition of the East India Company's commercial monopoly. Captain James Barber took the chair, and said, though he anticipated a different result from the ballot at the India House, upon the question of granting them compensation, their object now would be to get out, if possible, of the difficulty in which they were placed. He then read the eighth report of the Committee, and he felt confident the excluded officers would not abandon their claim to compensation, especially when they knew that there were many Members of the House of Commons who would support them. After some conversation the report was adopted, and resolutions passed to the effect that no efforts should be spared to obtain justice for the excluded officers; that subscriptions be entered into for that purpose; that the Committee be entitled to the confidence of the general body, &c. They were returned to the Chairman, and the meeting adjourned.

The Bengal Hurkaru, March 4th, announces that the Jupiter, containing Lord Auckland and suite, passed Diamond Harbour at 10 o'clock that morning, in tow of three steamers, the Ganges, Enterprise, and Hooghly, but that his Lordship did not intend to land until the evening. The heads of departments, who were invited the day before to meet his Lordship at dinner at Government House, were again invited that evening, when they will have the honour of which they were the day before disappointed.

The Government Orders of the 27th Feb. contain the following notice from the Commander-in-Chief:—"It having occurred several times within a short period that officers of the medical department who have been attached to Civil stations, when restored to the military department, have pleaded their entanglement with mercantile or agricultural pursuits as reasons for demanding long periods of absence, the Commander-in-Chief considers that their entering into any pursuits which prevent their being immediately available for the duties of the service to which they belong as contrary to what is right, and that he will not in future listen to such pleas for leave of absence."

The Delhi Gazette states that Brigadier Brown has been left by the late Begum Sumroo a legacy of 75,000 rupees, and is now on his way to Struhana, being an executor to his will.

A meeting, convened by the Sheriff of Calcutta, was to take place at the Town Hall on March 5th, for the purpose of taking into consideration the present state of the important question of a steam communication between England and India. The requisition for the meeting was signed by nearly 500 of the principal inhabitants of Calcutta.

A serious accident occurred a short time ago to Major Pew, of the Artillery, when at an awkward and narrow part of the road leading to his residence, his horse suddenly started, and he was thrown with great violence from his buggy, by which his left shoulder was fractured, and other injury sustained.

Despatches were made up on Thursday, July 7, at the India House, to be forwarded by H.M.S. Tartarus to the Mediterranean, and from thence to proceed overland to India.

It is in contemplation to get up a native address to Sir Charles Metcalfe, to thank him for the benefits conferred upon the country under his administration.

Head Quarters, Choultry Plains, Jan. 18, 1836.—Lieut. Humphreys, 23d L.I., having been ordered for trial by a General Court-Martial, upon the complaint of Mr. Bilderbeck, an inhabitant of Madras, was released from arrest in consequence of the death of the complainant, who was also the principal witness against him. Lieut. Humphreys having declined to offer any explanation of his conduct before a Court of Inquiry previously assembled, and as the written statement originally sent in by Mr. Bildarbeck is entirely clear and explicit as to the whole proceeding, the Commander-in-Chief considers it expedient thus publicly to notify his marked reprobation of the wanton and unjustifiable nature of the attack made by Lieut. Humphreys in the public street, without provocation, upon an individual utterly unknown to him, and then labouring under a malady which has since brought him prematurely to the grave. This is not the first occasion on which this officer has been placed in peril of his commission; for he had but a few days previously to this offence been released from the police gaol for an aggravated assault on a police officer: His Excellency only hopes that Lieut. Humphreys, instead of being hardened by impunity, may profit by the narrow escape he has made, and resolve to place his future conduct in honourable contrast to his past behaviour, which has been so little creditable either to the service or to himself. Lieut. Humphreys is released from arrest, and will leave the Presidency forthwith to join his regiment.

Correspondence addressed to the Editor.

East India House, 2nd July, 1836.

SIR,—With reference to my letter of the 20th May last, orwarding copy of a Notification, dated Fort William, the 7th October last, as to the probable discontinuance of the ight at Point Palmyras during the South West Monsoon f the present year, I am commanded to inform you that he Court of Directors of the East India Company have ow received from the Government of Bengal a notice, ated the 21st January last, respecting the abandonment f the said light, with instructions for vessels seeking a ilot for the river Hooghly. I am further commanded to ransmit you a copy of the said Notice, for the purpose of sertion in the Naval and Military Gazette, for the infor- ation of mariners. I am, Sir, your most obedient, humble ervant,

JAMES C. MELVILLE.

NOTICE.—Abandonment of the light at Point Palmyras, with Instructions for Vessels seeking a Pilot for the river Hooghly.

The encroachment of the sea on the Island of Mypurrah, commonly called Point Palmyras, rendering it necessary to abandon the light at that place, notice is hereby given, that the light will be forthwith abandoned accordingly; and that from the 15th of March till the 15th September, the period during which the pilot vessels cruise off Point Palmyras, until further notice, the senior pilot at the station will burn a blue light, and immediately after fire a rocket, every half hour during the night, commencing at 7 P.M. and ending at 5 A.M.

2.—The vessel, on board of which such senior pilot may be, will be instructed to take up a position, the point bearing W. by N., distant 18 miles, and in 18 or 20 fathoms water, and to keep in that position during the night as near as possible.

4.—The pilot vessels during the above period cruize in the day off Point Palmyras, anchoring during the night in a line East and West, in latitude 20 deg. 42 sec. to 20 deg. 48 sec. N., with the point bearing West to W. by S.; but the senior officer's vessel, showing the blue light and firing the rocket, will be stationed as above. If, however, about the beginning of September the wind comes from the Eastward, or the weather assumes a threatening appearance, the pilot vessels necessarily haul off to the Eastward, and may be found in a line between the Point and the floating light vessel, at the entrance of the Eastern Channel; and vessels approaching the station about that period, with the wind hanging to the Eastward, or the weather having a threatening appearance, are accordingly recommended on no account to approach the Point, but rather to endeavour to make for the floating light at the entrance of the Eastern Channel; and it is further notified, that, after the 15th September, no pilot vessel will be found to the westward of the Western Sea Reef.

5.—From the 15th September to the 15th March the pilot vessels cruize during the day between Sangor Sand and Western Sea Reef, anchoring in the night East and West of each other, in latitude 21 deg. to 21 deg. 10 sec. N.

6.—Vessels approaching the station on seeing the pilot vessels are requested, in the day, to make for that vessel, on board of which they will see a large red flag flying at the main, whenever they can do so without great inconvenience or delay. In the night the vessel having the next turn pilot on board is ordered, between the 15th of March and the 15th September, while the vessels cruize off Point Palmyras, to burn a maroon every half-hour during the night, or one quarter of an hour after the burning of the blue light and the firing of the rocket; and between the 15th September and 15th March, at the floating light station at the entrance of the Eastern Channel, every hour, and in thick weather every half hour, and vessels are requested in like manner to seek their pilot in the night from that vessel, it being understood, however, that any pilot vessel which may be first seen is bound immediately to use every exertion to put a pilot on board, night or day, without referring to any turns or rotations, and that this latter is only allowed when no delay is occasioned thereby.

By order of the Marine Board.

THE REMUNERATION TO THE CIVIL SERVANTS OF THE CROWN FAR GREATER THAN THAT GIVEN TO THE OFFICERS OF THE ARMY AND NAVY.

SIR,—If facts were wanting to confirm your just statements relative to Mr. Hume's unfounded assertion in the debate on Mr. Bannerman's late motion, I could at once adduce at least a hundred to you; but the public must by this time be well satisfied of the glaring incorrectness of the hon. member's representations upon that motion, through your able refutation of his words, by giving chapter and verse in your denial of their truth. I will, however, state one case which comes immediately before me, as being a positive proof that the officers of the Army and Navy are not the best paid public servants of the Crown. At the period of my being a Lieutenant of a ship of the line, in the year 1804, a gentleman of my acquaintance was at that time a Lieutenant of a regiment of Militia, then stationed at Plymouth. Some time afterwards he entered a public office in London as a Clerk. In this situation he has continued up to this date, quietly enjoying all the comforts of home during the whole of the 32 years, on an income gradually increasing from about 100*l.* per annum to 700*l.* whilst I have been buffetted about in every quarter of the globe. The present salary of the person alluded to is above seven hundred a-year, and more than this, he is, I believe, at liberty to retire to-morrow on 500*l.* per annum if he chooses; whereas, after thirty-nine years' active service in my profession, the half-pay I receive is but one hundred and ninety-two pounds per annum, though above twenty years a Post Captain; and yet Mr. Hume will no doubt again declare to the country "that the Navy and the Army are the best paid services in the world."

If any one should doubt the correctness of that which I have stated, you are at liberty to give my name, and to say that, on being applied to, I will give that of the gentleman to whom I have alluded, together with any further particulars that may be required.

July 5th, 1836. JUSTUS.

SIR,—The leading article in your respectable Journal of last week on the subject of the great difference in the pensions between the Civil Servants of the Government and the Officers of the Navy and Army, justly entitles you to the thanks of those of both services whose cause you have so ably advocated, and casts a great reflection on those ministers who, within the last twenty years, had ample opportunities of ameliorating the condition of those Officers who merited such a consideration. A better and more correct feeling however towards the profession appears to have pervaded the late discussion on Mr. Bannerman's motion in the Senate, and it is therefore to be hoped, that something advantageous to the old Officer will at last be effected, alike honourable to the country, as gratifying to those on whom the same may be conferred.

During the late long protracted war, there were Officers whose regimental rank never reached beyond that of Major, and others that exceeded not that of Captain; some of these, from length of service, are now Colonels, others are Lieut.-Colonels, and others Majors by Brevet.

Brevet rank on full pay is certainly advantageous, but to those on half-pay, without any prospect of ever being employed, presents no advantage. On the contrary, the half-pay Captain for instance, at five shillings per day on the old rate, which has never been abrogated, when included in a brevet promotion as a Major, pays fees on his commission 10*l.* 2*s.* 5*d.*; as a Lieut.-Colonel, 10*l.* 6*s.* 5*d.*; as Colonel, 12*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, without his income being in the least improved.

The boon that is now suggested to Officers so situated is, that brevet promotion may be not only honorary but also beneficial, by some addition to the pay, to commence either at the time such promotion takes place, or at a certain period subsequent to such an event.

WIVES OF OFFICERS IN INDIA.

SIR,—Since the first publication of your comprehensive Paper, many grievances never before complained of, but nevertheless intolerable, have come to light; some meeting the eye of authority have obtained redress, some are in progress towards it, and in others the remedy is worse than the disease.

There are no class of persons in either service who are greater sufferers than the Officers of the line serving in India; but their drawbacks have been so fully and justly detailed in the United Service Magazine for April, that I cannot presume to add anything on a subject already so ably dealt with, except on one point, from which I and others situated as I am, suffer extreme inconvenience, and this is one which is supposed to be a remedial evil. Some time ago much was said, and with truth, of the distress suffered by the wives of Officers serving in India, who were obliged, by family circumstances, to remain at home, in many instances entirely depending for their subsistence and the education of their children on such remittances as their relatives could afford to save out of their pay, and at the expense of those accessories to comfort so imperiously requisite in a tropical climate; on protection was afforded to those dear bought savings, and on houses of agency, and the uncertain conveyance of India ships, depended many an anxious heart for the means of living; in addition to these uncertainties was the certainty of the loss of about thirty per cent. on money remitted to England. This glaring evil, together with the ruin and affliction caused by the failures of 1832 and 3 (in which the principals of these overgrown establishments did not undergo more individual suffering than those whose little hundreds were as an atom in the avalanche), at length awoke the consideration of the Court, and it was determined that each Officer should be permitted to remit home a certain sum yearly, according to his rank, without drawback (and to insure its safety) through the India House; for this small prospect of relief due gratitude was felt, but how has it turned out? each remittance is twelve months on its way; six months I waited patiently for the first; and at the end of six more of extreme anxiety it came. It is now within a short time of twelve months since the second was sent from India, and in vain I look for it. Where is it?

I trust, Sir, you will find room in your Paper for the insertion of this complaint, which surely demands relief, and, if meeting the eye of authority, it may be hoped that relief will be afforded to a class of persons who ought not to have pecuniary difficulties added to the pain of inevitable separation from their dearest relatives.

No. III. TRISTRAM'S OPINION AND REMARKS UPON "LLOYD'S REGISTER OF BRITISH AND FOREIGN SHIPPING," WITH A BIT OF THE MARVELLOUS!!!

Sir,—Public curiosity being at its height, as to the utility or benefit the existing "Lloyd's Register of Shipping" ever can be to the nation in general, or to those whose interest, property, or lives, are immediately concerned, viz., the ship-builder, ship-owner, merchant-freighter, passenger, or navigator, and the various tradesmen connected with shipping, I will submit a few more extracts from the printed Regulations of the Register, to convince all those interested, that every care and precaution is taken, to ensure that none but sound, well-constructed shipping are registered and classed after survey, if built previously to the existence of the Register, and having been inspected while building.

"First Class Ships—New ships are required to have been surveyed while building, by the Surveyors to this Society in three stages of their progress, &c."

These stages are particularised, as well as the species and quality of the timber to be used in construction, the method of framing and bolting the timbers, the dimensions for the scantling of the timbers, deck beams, hold beams, keel, and kelsons, shifts of timber, and the description, quality, and thickness of plank for the outside, inside, and deck; the method and size also of fastenings are fully described, and first class ships are required to be copper-fastened below the wales.

The number of years that ships (surveyed while building) using foreign or inferior timber, and not fulfilling some of the requisites for a "TWELVE YEARS' SHIP," are to remain on the 1st Class, are particularly noted, so that a ship can only remain thereon, for four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten, eleven, or twelve years, according to the materials, plans, workmanship, and fastenings used in their construction.

Every precaution is also used by this Society that Second Class Ships shall be seaworthy, good, and efficient, for the safe conveyance, to all ports of the world, of cargoes not in their nature subject to sea damage, and Third Class Ships, for similar cargoes, on short voyages (not out of Europe); in fact, whether ships are building, repairing, or being surveyed for restoration to the first class, every care and caution is used to prevent imposition on the public, so that every faith and dependence may be placed in the durability and qualities of those ships and vessels which are classed and registered for a particular time and purpose.

I, however, beg to submit, it would more favourably affect the general confidence in the strength of those merchant vessels, classed to run for eight, nine, ten, eleven, or twelve years, if all the outside copper or iron fastenings were to go through the ceiling. But little dependence can be placed in tree-nails after EIGHT years straining and liability to decay.

So much has been written in a Monthly Magazine for May, insinuating apprehension that unsound vessels, after an apparent thorough repair, may be restored on the first class of ships in "Lloyd's Register," and consequently entitled to carry dry cargoes for a further prescribed period, that I will insert the additional rule to the "requisites for restoration," by which every candid, unbiassed, and disinterested person, may judge whether there be a probability even for such apprehension or suspicion.

"Additional Rule—But if, at any age, the whole of the outside plank of a vessel should be taken off as low as the second foothook-heads, and the remainder of the planking, either outside or inside, together with all the decks, be removed, so as to expose the timbers of the frame entirely to view, and in that state the ship be submitted to a special survey and examination by the Surveyors to this Society, and if, after such examination, all timbers, beams, knees, kelsons, transoms, breasthooks, remaining plank, inside or outside, or other parts found to be defected, be replaced with materials of the same species, or of equal quality with those of which the ship was originally constructed, and all the tree-nails driven out and renewed, such ships may be restored to the first description of the FIRST CLASS, for so long a period as may be deemed expedient by the Committee, not exceeding, in any case, the term of six years, as provided by the seventh general rule for ships, in the construction of which second-hand timber has been used."

If advantages must accrue to the public from having sailing shipping surveyed, classed, and registered, how much more so it must evidently be, how satisfactory besides, to have steam shipping and their machinery surveyed at least twice a year, as enacted by the regulations of "Lloyd's Register"—nay, humanity demands it, when hundreds of human beings are daily exposed to drowning or explosion, from the defects of the vessels themselves and their engines.

Were it possible to hold an instantaneous survey on every steam-vessel now navigating along the coasts of the United Kingdom, I am apprehensive that the Surveyors and Engineers would find and report them defective in hull, [illegible] and machinery. After the publicity of the [illegible] defects discovered, would any rational being embark [illegible] steam-boat whose decks may fall in or bottom open, and either crush or drown him (like the yacht so designed by that fiend and monster, NERO, to dispose of his mother, AGRIPPINA, under accidental appearances), or whose boilers or engines may burst, and either scald him to a mummy, or blow him to atoms!!!

As it is notorious that numerous steam-vessels are being navigated in a defective and dangerous state, I may suggest that the owner of every steam-boat, which has been surveyed, classed, and registered in "Lloyd's Register of Shipping," should cause the certificate by a Master Engineer of the trustworthiness and efficiency of the machinery, to be painted upon a board, and placed in a conspicuous part of the vessel, by which passengers, on embarkation, would be guaranteed from the dangers of the sea, a burning furnace, scalding steam, and boiling water—thus:

"Lloyd's Register of British and Foreign Shipping."

"London, 1st July, 1836.—I, Will. Watts, do certify, that the whole of the boilers of the steam-vessel, Salamander, belonging to them, Ham and Japhet and Co., whereof Sam. Weatherall is Master, 500 tons, have been carefully inspected and examined by me, Will. Watts, at St. Katherine's Wharf, and that I find the same to be at this time in good order and safe working condition.

"Witness my hand,

"WILL. WATTS, Master Engineer."

Picture to yourself, Mr. Editor, a CALEDONIAN steamer, bedecked with gilt, and all the colours of the rainbow, filled with Highland lads and bonnie lassies, dancing and singing in tune to "music's voice," off Flamborough Head, in twenty fathoms' water, swiftly gliding o'er the ocean, under a defective high-pressure engine, at the rate of eleven or twelve knots an hour.

"In the midst of Life we are in Death."

What an awful scene, the blowing up of a steam-ship!!! Not a moment's time for sinners to say amen! for lovers to sigh adieu! The only warning, a long h-i-ss, resembling the going off of a sky-rocket at Vauxhall; then a short, but thunderlike bang, similar to the simultaneous broadside of a first-rate, than, in the twinkling of the eye, up all goes, amidst fire and smoke, and water and steam, to skysail height. Momentarily poised in the air—then—down all falls, accompanied with a shower of burning coals, and boiling water, and human blood, staining the spotless bosom of the "azure main." The whole of the rotten fabric of the "gay lackered barge," her mantling and her machinery in scattered fragments; both men's and women's apparel, of fine cloth and delicate linen, with the ship's sails of strong canvass, alike in shreds and tatters. The manly and lively forms of beaux and belles blown limb from limb!!! What dainty morsels—such limbs, such heads, such tongues, such hearts both roasted and boiled, for the ravenous sea-dog and cat-fish!!!

Oh, how happy I feel, now I am awake, to find this but a dream of thy friend,

TRISTRAM.

LIEUT.-COLONEL THOMPSON AND THE 14TH LIGHT DRAGOONS.

Sir,—The letter addressed to Editor of the United Service Journal, and inserted in your paper of the 3d inst., signed "J. W. Brotherton," commenting on the evidence of Lieut.-Col. Thompson before the Commissioners for inquiring into Military Punishments, I think will surprise many of your readers, from the extraordinary notions the writer appears to entertain of the right of the soldier to obey or disobey in certain cases, according to the opinion he might have of his officer's ability:—"Lieut.-Col. Thompson had but just joined the regiment as a Subaltern, and I believe had never before served in the Cavalry. The regiment was composed chiefly of Veteran Dragoons, thoroughly acquainted with the duty of patrolling. Lieut.-Col. Thompson must have been comparatively inexperienced in such matters, and less fit to guide than to be guided by such men!—ergo, the soldiers, probably in total ignorance of Lieut. Thompson's instructions, might have been justified in leaving (disobeying) him."

Lieut. Thompson's inexperience would certainly have been a sufficient reason why a discriminating Commanding Officer should not have appointed him to a duty for which he was not sufficiently qualified; but having ordered him for the service, I cannot conceive the soldiers could have been justified in disobeying his lawful orders—not in any case short of the extreme and improbable one of his intending to betray them into the power of the enemy. To admit the principle that soldiers are to obey or disobey, according to the opinion they might have of the skill of their officers, would at once be the death-blow to all military discipline.

The writer of the letter proceeds—"It cannot be expected that Lieut.-Col. Thompson, of whom we knew so little, and who knew so little of us, should be restrained by esprit de corps from throwing out a slur on the discipline of the 14th Dragoons." What does this mean—what does it imply? Was Col. Thompson, on examination before the Commissioners on a highly important question, affecting the discipline of the Army, and bound as a man of honour and probity to give his opinion and evidence fully, fairly, and unreservedly, to be restrained from so doing by esprit de corps, to blink the truth, and falsify his evidence? Colonel Brotherton cannot surely seriously mean that Lieut.-Col. Thompson should have so disgraced himself. On more mature reflection he will, I hope, feel that he has taken a hasty and erroneous view of the matter; and I have no doubt, had he been placed in Lieut.-Col. Thompson's predicament, would also have given his evidence fully and candidly, in defiance of all predilections.

LIEUT. FAIRPLAY.

[Our Correspondent's reasoning is throughout correct. We know Col. Brotherton to be a good officer, but his zeal and attachment to his old corps have overstepped his judgment. It is a pity some kind friend did not advise him against publishing so crude a letter. The United Service at this moment require the active support of their friends, but ill-digested statements are prejudicial.—ED.]

DRUNKENNESS IN THE ARMY.

Sir,—Having turned my attention for some time past to that most baneful and degrading of all vices, "drunkenness," and also towards the best means of eradicating the same from the ranks of the British Army, allow me to trespass on a small space in your invaluable columns, trusting it may merit the attention of those who are now engaged in framing enactments for the suppression and punishment of crime, and for instructing, educating, and rewarding the good and deserving soldier.

It is notorious that recruits on first enlistment are not worth, in cash, one "bawbee," and it is equally notorious that nine out of every ten soldiers when discharged are in the same predicament, no matter how long their service, or how good or exemplary their conduct.

As soon as the recruit joins he is obliged to be completed with necessaries as far as his bounty goes, which bounty is not by any means sufficient to pay for his equipment, and he is thereby thrown in debt to the Captain of his Company for two or three months. This puts a great damp on the volatile spirit of the young recruit, for he casts a longing eye after his comrades, who are able to walk out and enjoy themselves, whilst he has no other alternative (no amusement or employment after preparing himself for the next parade or drill) but to throw himself on his cot, there biting his nails and chewing the cud of bitter reflection till their return. The bounty should be equal to a regular supply of good necessaries on joining. However, the recruit is at length out of debt, and receives his daily pay, amounting, after deductions for rations, &c., to 5*d.* or 6*d.*, this is saved up by some for four or five days, by others parties are made up immediately for town, others give their to their comrade for a week, receiving his next week's pay in return; finally, all goes in drinking compounds of the most intoxicating and deleterious drugs, and that too in the lowest and worst of company, who having made out more money by means not less scrupulous than creditable to themselves, they immediately proceed to gambling, thence to quarrelling and fighting, whence emanates reports of that disgraceful conduct which should be repugnant to the feelings of all British soldiers, that of drawing his bayonet intrusted to him as an honour, and intended only to be unsheathed for duty or in defence of his King and country. Such are a few of the concomitant evils which arise from the present system of "Daily pay," without means being provided whereby the Soldier may lay up a portion, of what would in the decline of life be a source of great comfort to him, and what is much more to be considered, three-fourths of the crime of the present day would be prevented, which is attributable to this imperfect system.

Nothing would tend so much to the well-being of the soldier, or help towards eradicating this root of all evil, "drunkenness," from the Army, as the establishment (on some correct principle) of Savings' Banks in our regiments, both at home and abroad, properly encouraged and fostered. I speak from experience of 16 years in the service, and I do it without fear of contradiction, when I say great numbers of our soldiers become habitual drunkards, solely from having no other place of security but his knapsack for what he may be able to save out of his hard-earned pay; and in way of illustration allow me to state an instance of a young man, who, I must also observe, was excessively parsimonious, whereby, in a short time, he realised what to him was a little fortune, about 5*l.*; this he concealed in the lining of his knapsack; it took him long to scrape it together, for he could not lay by more than 2*d.* or 3*d.* a-day; but one evening returning from his customary walk, little dreaming of his dire mishap, he found all swept away, being robbed by those characters who cannot save their own, and who glory in seeing those deprived of theirs who can. This young man finding no security for his scanty savings, made a vow never to save another farthing, and so truly did he keep it, that the first moment he had to spare it was gone, this was followed up with bad company for about three years, which hurried him to a premature grave, from a debilitated constitution, and when in the agonies of death his former ruling passion was then even predominant, grasping his pillow for his money, and cursing those who previously robbed him. Numerous other instances I could furnish to show that if Institutions were properly established, whereby the soldier might lay by what he cannot now, also Reading Rooms in every barrack for moral instruction in leisure hours, great would be the benefit, both to the soldier and the service at large, and one-half the crime prevented that is now daily perpetrated, to the filling of our military prisons and the county gaols with criminals. I do not mean to say all would or could save, nor do I mean to insinuate that when a soldier does not choose to do so, he must necessarily be a drunken or loose habited soldier, not by any means; I know of many, very many, who never think of drink, yet would not save, but take a pride in purchasing other comforts, and keeping their kitts up in what is termed "first style;" but I certainly do think, that that soldier on discharge is not the independent citizen which I presume the other would find himself. The one when he arrives at his native home has the residue of a quarter's pension, amounting at most to about 3*l.* or 4*l.* after his 21 years' service; the other has much more satisfaction, after the same period of time, in saying, I have from 50*l.* to 60*l.* to cheer me in the down-hill of life, and that too from putting by only two-pence-a-day, and by this, with the pension I have earned, and from the liberality of my king and country, I can keep myself and family from the workhouse and the wolves from my door.

Chatham, April 25. W. C.

[We give this unpolished letter of a Non-commissioned Officer (which has been many weeks in type), as the facts and reasonings are true.—Ed.]

THE HALF-PAY OF COLONELS AND POST CAPTAINS.

Sir,—In the Devonport Telegraph of last week I noticed a paragraph in reply to the queries I put to the Editor of that Journal, through your columns in the week preceding, on the subject of the amount of half-pay of Colonels in the Army, who had only the regimental rank of Lieutenant-Colonels or Majors; but though your contemporary has given the names of four or five officers who are thus situated, he has not stated the exact sum received by each as half-pay. This leads me again to ask him if Colonel Shadforth, whom he has named as having only the regimental rank of Major, has, at this moment, but nine shillings and six-pence a day, though holding the Brevet rank of full Colonel? or, has Colonels Lloyd, Pringle, Parry, Sir John Harvey, and the Marquess of Tweedale, all of whom, he says, have but the regimental rank of Lieut.-Colonels, but eleven shillings per day half-pay? In short, have they nothing additional for their Brevet rank*? And further, I would inquire, how many full Colonels there are thus circumstanced out of the 200 upon the list? But even allowing that those few officers have only the half-pay of their regimental rank, still it must be borne in mind that they have only been about ten years† full Colonels, whilst the Captains of the Navy, who have held this comparative rank upwards of twenty years, have still but ten shillings and sixpence per day.

The object which has been sought for by you has been, not to lessen the pay of our Military brethren, but to raise that of the Navy to an equal standard, and before another year passes away it is confidently to be hoped and believed that the pay and allowances of both services will be assimilated in every possible way, and that each will experience the favourable consideration of His Majesty's liberal Government, notwithstanding the generous and liberal declaration of the Hon. Member for Middlesex.

COAST-GUARD SERVICE:—REMARKS ON THE LETTER OF CINCINNATUS.

Sir,—Every Naval Chief Officer in the Coast-Guard Service will, I am well assured, heartily join with you in opinion, that the letter of Cincinnatus is anything but an answer to the irrefutable statements of Numa. Far better would it have been for this modern deserter of the Plough, had he continued his humbler vocation, instead of assuming the part of a commentator, in order to prop up a system created by Borough Corruption, in the worst times of Borough Jobbing. And who, Sir, are the persons that this pure and disinterested writer comes forward to defend? Will he tell us their names? Will he tell us by what means these Civil Inspectors-in-Chief, and Civil Inspectors commanding districts, and Civil Chief Officers, obtained these appointments—or must I do it for him? and which I will do, and name every point and particular likewise, in nine-tenths of the cases, if, with his immaculate purity, Cincinnatus repeats his attacks on the clear and satisfactory observations of Numa.

Does this writer imagine that the public will be cajoled by his humbugging stories of the former "fiery fights" of those Civilians, who have by Borough influence alone been placed over the heads of many highly meritorious officers of our Navy? or does he suppose that none but those "Heroes of the pewter pots!" as Numa has styled some of those Civil gentlemen, are capable of protecting the Irish coasts against the contraband trader in tobacco and gin? and further I would ask, is there no other "master hand" to be found amongst the 1800 Captains and Commanders on the Navy List, qualified to fill the office of Inspector-General of the Coast-Guard Service in Ireland? not one whose talents and fitness is equal to that of the Ex-Lieutenant to whom this office was given after the memorable Lushington affair with Capt. Hanchett? and who, although he resigned his Commission in the Navy, has for the last ten years and upwards been at the head of above 100 Naval Officers in the sister kingdom? Is this just? I ask Cincinnatus, is it borne out by right or usage? is it becoming. I demand, that Naval Officers, several of them holding the rank of Commanders, and all wearing the Naval uniform, and in the execution of maritime duties, should be continued under the command of a Civilian, once a subordinate Officer in the same profession? No, Sir, this Service should, as you have so properly remarked, be wholly Naval, and thus form a reserve, as it were, of several thousand seamen, who would be ready at a day's notice to man ten sail of the line; whereas, it has hitherto been only an establishment for patronage, as I can prove; and if Cincinnatus doubts this assertion, I will suggest some few returns to be moved for by some patriotic member of the legislature, which will show how and whence those matchless Civilians have been produced, and who, according to your new Correspondent's declarations, reflect such unbounded honour on the Coast-Guard Service! Philo-Numa.

ON THE CIVIL APPOINTMENTS IN THE NAVY.

Sir,—The arguments of your correspondent C. are so unlike those of a liberal-minded generous sailor, that I regret he will not accede to my proposition of placing his name to his letters, in order that the Service generally might discover the "high rank" and professional renown of this supporter of ultra-Tory principles, and (as it is to be hoped, in spite of these anti-reform doctrines) of by-gone abuses of patronage. First, I would ask this friend of the old system, what object he has had in view in so kindly stepping forward, as he says he has done, "to prevent such a report gaining credit" as that of an intention on the part of the Government to change the Commissioners of our Dock-yards and Hospitals, hereafter, every five years? Has he been employed by any part of the Administration to correct this mis-statement (though I will yet hope it is not a false rumour)? Or what has roused his zeal on this occasion to volunteer a contradiction to the reports which had been circulated, and believed too, in all the out-ports? It is with a view of ascertaining these facts that I have prayed of him to put his proper signature to his deservedly unpopular arguments, and then I will not fail to put mine to my reply to them, and will cheerfully leave it to the public to decide between us, who has the most of honour and justice on their side. Does your correspondent, Sir, really mean to maintain the correctness of that which he has asserted in his last letter—namely, that there is "no Civil office in the gift of the Admiralty, so well paid or so advantageous, that it would be desirable for an Officer, burdened with a large family, to obtain it on the score of profit"? What, Sir, would it not be advantageous to an old and gallant officer, with six or seven children to enjoy, even for five years. only, the situation of a Commissioner or Superintendent of a Dock-yard or Hospital? or that of Comptroller or Deputy-Comptroller, or Inspector-General of the Coast Guard? or the Superintendent of the Falmouth Packets, which is, I believe, also classed as a Civil appointment? Would it not be advantageous for many an old and worthy officer of acknowledged merits and claims thus to enjoy from six or seven hundred to a thousand a-year and upwards for the above-named period, whereby he might, by this increase of income, be enabled to give to his children better educations than he otherwise could afford to bestow; and is not this, I ask, an advantage which every parent would rejoice at having the opportunity of sharing? But C. cannot be a father, or he would not have argued as he has done; nor can he be a Reformer, or he never would have hazarded the opinions which he has expressed. His arguments go to maintain that the rich and affluent only should receive the advantageous appointments which are in the gift of the Government to bestow, and that the gallant and brave, if poor, should be fated for ever to eat the bread of penury and wretchedness! In short, that talent, industry, zeal, and merit, should have no claim to regard, unless supported by private interest and private fortune! And this is told the British nation in a Journal devoted to the interest and welfare of the United Service, and professing—I am sure most honestly and truly—the most liberal and high-minded opinions! I hope, Sir, that your pages will never again be fated to receive the advocacy of such principles, unless the writer will place his name in defence of them; otherwise you are made a sharer in those views, as having given countenance to their circulation. Does not the writer of these remarks know, that although the men holding the rank of Captains of the Navy are, in most cases whilst unemployed, fated to live in quiet retirement, from the small amount of their half-pay, yet that they are, in most instances, by birth and education, gentlemen, and that consequently they, as well as their children, occasionally mix in the society of their more affluent relations and friends without feeling, on their again returning to their more humble homes, any of that "ruin, misery, and discontent," which your correspondent so considerately predicts must be created by a temporary enjoyment of gayer scenes. With regard to the opinion of the distinguished legislator to which C. refers as to obtaining the situation of Governor of a Colony for a distinguished officer, if, as he states, the officer in question were unfit for this office, then I quite agree with your correspondent that no professional gallantry or merit should have led the Minister to give it him; but if his only disqualification was his having a large family, then I should say that this ought not to have been a bar in the nomination, because, although I readily admit that the having many children is no claim to be considered for any share of patronage, yet, if an officer of universally acknowledged merit and services happens to have a large and expensive family, that this ought rather to interest the disposer of patronage in his favour than otherwise, and most certainly would do so, if such disposer of places and emoluments had a heart to feel for the cares and anxieties of another; and as to an officer's leading his family into expensive habits by obtaining an appointment of this kind, surely this would be wholly unnecessary; and moreover, if his object in seeking such a situation was to benefit his children, he should leave them at home to receive that education which this increase to his income would enable him to give to them. But, as I have already observed, C. cannot be a parent, and more than this, I cannot believe him to be a soldier or sailor; he must be some one of Mr. Hume's cold calculating clique, who reckons every penny by Cocker's Arithmetic, and who would not be guilty of a generous deed for their lives' sake if it cost the value of a groat!

If the Committee of the House of Commons, to which C. has alluded, decided illiberally and unjustly in some points, and that they did so all must allow; yet they most certainly acted right fairly in recommending that all appointments should be changed every five or six years. In making this recommendation, of course it never was supposed that the unfit would ever be selected in those periodical changes, and surely your correspondent does not mean to assert that only those now holding the several lucrative appointments in either service are qualified to fill them. This would indeed be a flagrant insult to the two gallant professions, and well may account for C.'s determination to withhold his name from the public. He says, however, that you, Sir, "have given the proper distribution of berths which should be periodically changed," thus admitting that some appointments ought to be so. Will your correspondent then be so good as to name those situations, in the Navy service at least, which he considers ought to be changed every five years. This will afford a degree of satisfaction to your readers, and in conclusion I will take leave to put a query or two to him, which I hope he will condescend to answer fully and unequivocally.

Does C. consider, that because an officer may by Borough interest, in the high days of borough corruption, have had the good luck to obtain a situation such as that of Governor of a Naval Hospital or Commissioner of a Dock-yard, that he ought to be suffered to retain this appointment through some similar private interest after he becomes a yellow Admiral? And does he call this RIGHT and JUSTICE?

Secondly, does he mean to maintain, that because the influence of a Secretary of State, or a Lord of the Treasury, or some other private interest, may have procured to some three or four Captains and Commanders situations in the nomination of the Admiralty, with from 600*l.* to 1200*l.* per annum some nine or ten years since, that these offices ought not now be made to give place to others of equal merit, fitness, and pretensions?

Would he call it JUSTICE and FAIR PLAY to continue these fortunate men in those situations for their lives, to the exclusion of the many others on the list who are well and fully qualified for either of these appointments, and whose professional services are at least on a par with either of theirs?

In advocating, as I have done, the fairness of giving to all on the list a share in turn of the good things that the First Lord of the Admiralty has to bestow, I meant, of course, that the abilities and qualifications of the persons to be chosen should always be duly regarded, and that merit united to fitness should ever be the first selected. And with regard to the gallant officers now holding the appointments in our Dock-yards and Hospitals, no one who looks at the names of Gordon, Ross, and Hoskey at home, and Usher abroad—men who bear "outward and visible signs" of their having been distinguished in the service of their country—would desire that they should be removed until they obtain their flags; but, after this, I would say that their successors should, on receiving those several appointments, be made to understand that neither was for more than five years. In fact, that every situation should henceforward, as vacancies fell, be thus limited, in order that every deserving and duly-qualified officer on the list should in rotation be permitted to enjoy for a period these and other similar rewards of long, faithful, and distinguished services. In the sincere hope that your correspondent C. will give the weight of his name to the extraordinary arguments which he has adduced, and that your talented contributor Twist will, at an early date, bring his powerful battery to bear upon those ultra opinions, and thus render unnecessary any further comments on this question from the far humbler pen of the individual who now addresses you.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, JULY 9, 1836.

Our excellent monthly contemporary, The ...nited Service Journal, has renewed the interesting ...quiry on Naval Promotion, in an able and ...aborate article. It is a subject which cannot be ...o fully canvassed, being of essentiel importence ... the honour and interest of the Naval Service, ...d to its futura prospects; and although our own ...inion on this point has been already recorded, ...d we have seen no reason to alter it, we think we ...nnot do a better service to the Navy than by ...ening our pages to a frae discussion of the effects, ...sent, contingent, and remote, of the existing sys... of Flag Promotions by Seniority; and the neces... for the adoption of such a change as shall obtain ... the country the talents of the best officers it ...sesses in command of our fleets when occasion ...es to put forth our strength, and thus insure, ...ar as human means can effect it, the success of ...ontemplated expedition.

...f, with a crowded list of Flag Officers, many of ...m having reached that grade before they were ...ty years of age, and with all the experience ac...red by active service in a war of unexampled ...ivity, the then First Lord of the Admiralty ...erted that he could not fix upon a successor ...alified for the Mediterranean command, and ...ler this impression prevailed upon the gallant ...llingwood to remain therein until, worn out ...h fatigue and anxiety, be actually expired at ... post: if this were the case, when a succession ... brilliant actions afforded opportunity for dis...ction, and promotion advanced with a degree ...precedented in Naval history, what may be now ...pected after the lapse of thirty years' peace, ...en we have Captains on the list of nearly thirty-...e years' seniority, and a great majority of our ...ag Officers (indeed all such as were not fortunate ...ough to obtain their Post rank as mere boys), ...re incapacitated by age and infirmity from the ...ssibility of that exertion of mind and body so ...ential in the Commander of a Fleet? It is the height of folly to shut our eyes to this state of things; and should war occur, the necessity for advancing a large number at the head of the list, in order to render the service of others available for command, would again become apperent.

Amongst the advocates of special promotions we do not remember that any one has noticed a certain portion of benefit which even the rejected Seniors would enjoy under such a proceeding. For instance, if, in order to reach the name of some celebrated officer, destined for an important command, it were thought proper to make a Flag Promotion, some of the Captains senior to him, perhaps commanding the line-of-battle ships intended to form the expedition, must be removed, in other words shelved, and thus they would forfeit the opportunity of procuring fame and wealth, and receive in lieu the distinction of Rear-Admirals rank upon half-pay. This is only one of many views of the case which would be elicited were this matter properly discussed, and it is with this intention that we now notice the subject, and invite our talented correspondents to deliver their opinions.

We are no friends to changes, much less to sudden and violent ones, and therefore it is that we recommend a consideration of these important matters, at a season when there is sufficient leisure to investigate any proposals which shall be advanced; so that, whilst on the one hand ample justice may be done to those veterans who have performed their parts so well, and their decline soleced and made honourable and independent in consideration of the gallant deeds they have accomplished,—an infusion of young and vigorous blood be introduced into the Service, and the dissatisfaction, which experience shows us, may be again anticipated under the system hitherto pursued, as regards Flag Officers, obviated by the adoption of a measure, combining special promotion, under certain limitations, with that of seniority. Having thus renewed the subject, we anticipate the free discussion of it, and promise to preserve our usual impartiality in commenting upon the opinions that may be advanced.

Since the late Warrant, granting to that deserving class of Officers, the Paymasters of regiments, an increase of pay for length of service, we have entertained hopes that the Secretary-at-War will take into consideration the claims of another branch of the regimental staff—one which has been overlooked in the various regulations of late years for bettering the condition of Officers, we mean the Adjutents of regiments; and we are confident that no person who is acquainted with the duties these Officers have to perform, will deny their claims to an increase of pay according to service, or at least for some further indulgence to that they at present receive while doing the duty of the situation.

Adjutants must be constantly engaged either in attending to regimental drill or the business of the orderly room, and though they are now, in many cases, young man of good family and connexions, who take a pride in the situation, and obtain it from a desire to bring themselves into notice, it is at the same time a painful consideration to find that, where every other individual of the staff of a regiment receives an adequate remuneration in proportion to his service, they, and they alone, whose duties are equal to, or rather much more extensive than those of the rest, are passed by, and no measure for their advantage has ever been proposed.

In the instructions to Paymasters there is a clause which expressly says that an Adjutant who is e seven years' Lieutenant is not to receive the extra shilling for length of service. Now let us ask can anything be more paltry than the saving which is thus effected. Any other Lieutenant after seven years, is entitled to the extra shilling and will any one pretend to say that the Adjutant who does more duty than the whole of the Subalterns together, is not entitled to it, or that, because he is commissioned as Adjutant, that is to take away from his pay for service as a Subaltern. We flatter ourselves that this only wants a proper representation to have the odious clause erased, and justice done in this respect to those who most surely require it.

An Adjutant's pay is eight shillings and sixpence a dey, two shillings more than a Lieutenant's, and is this, or can it be, an equivalent for the time the labour, the constant employment, and frequently harassing duties of his situation. The pay of the Assistant-Surgeon after ten years becomes ten shillings a-day; that of the Quartermaster after ten years eight shillings, and after fifteen years ten shillings. The Surgeon's pay has been increased; the Paymaster's pay has been increased. Why should not the Adjutant's? Is he less deserving than any of the rest, or are his duties less than theirs? We think not, and we therefore hope that their services will be considered, and some measure recommended for their benefit to His Majesty, who is ever ready to admit the claims of any deserving Officers.

To prove the unfair system of reliefs which has been for several years persisted in, we have only to cast our eye over the following Table, in which it will be observed that in those years when a large number of regiments was sent abroad the reliefs were made from our colonies, in which regiments serve only ten years, to the prejudice of the regiments in India, which serve frequently more than twenty, and in no case under eighteen years. The Table commences with the year 1819, and ends with 1835. It speaks in a stubborn tone, for facts and figures are stubborn things, and cannot be gainsaid. It is very striking that, in plain fact, only one regiment has been willingly sent to India since 1830; for the 62nd was the last regiment which went out direct. The 9th would not have relieved, as it did, the 38th, had it not been an extra regiment at the Mauritius, sent out to quell the disturbances there caused by Mr. Jeremie.

We verily believe, that even the present slow reliefs of Indian regiments would be even slower, unless the regiments proceeded with convicts to New South Wales, and were thus forced on to India. There seems certainly no disposition whatever to relieve the regiments in India till after a service of twenty years at least, for the present rate of relief is not quite one per annum, and we have twenty Infantry regiments in that country. No doubt we shall soon hear that the two Cavalry regiments, which have been in India since 1819, are to be relieved, and this will be an excuse for keeping the Infantry another two or three years there. But the sun of India does not blaze over London, on a little pity would be felt for the 20,000 of our countrymen, who are left scorching in Hindoostan. Let any impartial man survey land; and also the first, second, and third annual Reports on Public Works, Ireland.

"That the Committee have, in discharge of the duty imposed upon them, proceeded to inquire from the best authorities, both into the advantages which, as well in a military as a commercial point of view, might arise from the establishment of a more certain and speedy intercourse between His Majesty's European dominions and the American Colonies, and their attention has more particularly been directed to the western coast of Ireland, as affording the nearest points of communication between the two continents.

"Although they have succeeded in collecting much valuable and authentic information on these subjects from various sources, they feel, that before they could be justified in submitting any specific recommendation for the adoption of Parliament, or of His Majesty's Government, they must extend their inquiry on points with respect to which, notwithstanding the number of witnesses they have examined, they have not hitherto been enabled to come to any satisfactory conclusion.

"Into such an examination they would not hesitate, even at this advanced period of the session, to enter, were they not convinced that on some of the most important points, and more particularly that of the beneficial application of steam to voyages of long duration, some further experience, which cannot fail soon to be obtained, is necessary before they could satisfy their own minds so far as to suggest any considerable alteration in the existing, or the formation of any new and necessarily expensive, establishments.

"They have thought, therefore, that it would not be disadvantageous to suspend their proceedings for the present, and to report the evidence they have received to the House, in the full confidence that those departments of His Majesty's Government which have the best means of collecting information and observing the facts which bear upon so important a subject, will in the meanwhile not fail to give it their careful and unremitting attention.

On this Report being laid on the table of the House of Lords, the Marquis of Lansdowne stated that His Majesty's Government considered the subject to be one of great importance, and that they would direct their best attention to the recommendation of the Committee, and that whatever could be likely to promote the welfare of Ireland should be sure to receive the best regard of His Majesty's advisers. In this assurance we confidently rely, and, as one of our chief objects in advocating this measure, has been the desire to benefit the sister kingdom, so, we sincerely hope, that it will ere long be successfully carried into execution.

We are gratified at being again able to announce the promotion of three old Mates,—Mr. Drew having passed in 1823, Mr. Dunlop (in whom we recognise the officer whose good conduct in the Star Packet, when dismasted, elicited so much praise) 1830, and Mr. Postle in 1831. The appointments in South America, caused by Captain Wilkes's invaliding, are only temporary, until a successor to that officer is sent out. We have not heard who Sir G. Hamond has applied for as his Flag Captain;—Commander Devereux in the haul-down vacancy of Sir George Cockburn.

The aged ex-President of the United States, Mr. Madison, was, according to the latest accounts, in a dying state; and the well-known American warrior, Col. Aaron Burr, was on his death-bed.

On Saturday morning, as Col. Minton, of Chesterterrace, Regent's Park, was examining a horse which was brought to his house for inspection, the animal kicked out with great violence, and struck Col. M. on the jaw, which it shattered and knocked out the whole of his front teeth. He was carried into the house in a state of insensibility.

The Duke of Wellington met with an accident on Saturday afternoon, which might have been attended with the most serious consequences, but from which, as it is, we trust his Grace will only suffer a little inconvenience and pain for a short time. As his Grace was riding on horseback, not far from Apsley House, the horse took fright and shied at a boy who had climbed up and was hanging upon a lamp-post. The spirited animal attempted to run away, but his Grace pulled him up so sharply that he stumbled, and threw the Noble Duke to the ground. In his fall his Grace struck his knee-cap with considerable violence, which caused an immediate swelling to take place. His Grace having been assisted home, Sir H. Halford and Dr. Hume were immediately called in, and by their advice twenty leeches were instantly applied to the bruised part. The Noble Duke, with the exception of a slight stiffness in the knee, is now quite well.

The Belgian papers state, that a good-looking young man, formerly a drum major in the service of the King of the Netherlands, and then exceedingly tall, is now showing himself as a curiosity at Parma, being 8 feet 4 inches (nearly 8 feet 10½ inches English) in height, and weighing 416 lbs. (4 cwt. 1 lb.).

Railroad Fares.—Each passenger is charged at the same amount as a ton of goods.

The thermometer in the shade stood as high as 78 part of Sunday. In Paris, on Friday, the thermometer marked 25½ of Reaumur, or 89¼ Fahrenheit; this was in the sun, and higher than ever before known in the French capital.

Rags from the Levant.—The following has just been issued from the Custom-house:—"By a council letter, dated June 25, 1836, the proper officers are to prevent rags of any description on board of vessels coming from the Levant from being landed at any port in the United Kingdom, until further notice."

The French Princes heard of the attempt on their father's life at Milan, and immediately set off on their return to Paris; they had reached Lyons on the 1st instant, and have since arrived in the French capital.

The English residents of Paris met on Saturday, Sir Sydney Smith in the chair, and adopted an address of congratulation to the King of the French on his recent escape.

Estafette carriages are about to commence plying between Paris and Brussels, they are in the landau form, and drawn by two horses, and will perform the journey in 19 hours.

Some official correspondence has been exchanged between Commodore Henry (temporarily in the Spanish Naval service) and M. Galiano, the Spanish Minister of Marine. The occasion of it was a claim of six months' arrears of pay, and the only fruits of the application an insolent refusal to listen thereto, on the plea of some imaginary deficiency in Spanish obsequiousness in the tone of the Commodore's letter to the Minister.

Mr. Henry Tyrwhitt has contradicted a most absurd paragraph of a fatal duel at Ghent, which has been going the round of the papers, and in which he is made to figure as one of the principals. It is a malicious hoax.

Some troop have been sent by sea from Bilboa into the Asturia Bayonne letters to the 2d give the following accounts:— The expedition for the Asturias commenced its mare on the 26th. Leaving the village of Amuerrio (betwee Orduna and Orosco), they marched without obstacle a far as the entry of the mountains of Santander, where Christino division of 3,000 men disputed their passag This column was completely beaten, and left 500 pr soners in the hands of the Carlists. Villareal had ad dressed a manifesto to Cordova, by which he declare that, as soon as he was officially made acquainted wit the execution of Brigadier Torres, and other officers, h would take from their depot a number of Christino pri soners, whom he would put to death, and that he wa resolved to pursue this system in all cases where th Christinos should act to their prisoners as they had don to the unfortunate Torres.

The Estatuto Real cannot be mai tained. A convocation of the Cortes by Estamento to regulate the affairs of the kingdom. Don Carlos a solutely refuses to quit Spain, and as for the Queen, h sister-in-law, as she has ever been the object of his pa ticular affection, she may be convinced that she will ev be treated better by him than by the Government th may be established in Spain."

Literary Notices.

Mrs. Armytage; or, Female Domination. By the Authoress of "Mothers and Daughters." 3 vols. Henry Colburn.

This has all the spirit and character of a decidedly original and, if we may use the term, a sterling fashionable novel; gay and brilliant, and like everything from the pen of Mrs. Gore, it is not only well but elegantly written. Though our fair author (or authoress) is frequently satirical in her exposure of the follies of society, her sketches are rarely overdrawn; indeed, so closely do some of them approach to living characters of the present day, that we fancy we identify the portraitures. As a proof we will begin with the graphic delineation of a manœuvring Duchess.

"She belonged to a class of women rare in our own times and country, though not unfrequent at the more tmebious epochs, or in less tranquil lands; who, bore to no earthly business, make the business of the whole world their own. Not that she was endowed with the far-sighted spirit of intrigue of a Princesse des Ursins—not that she boasted of the coarse but vigorous energies of a Sarah of Marlborough—or even the persevering cunning of a Madame de Maintenon;—but she had all their activity—all their art in establishing a sway over the conduct of others; and withal a certain fidgetiness of mind, which seemed to derive new stimulus from total want of occupation. She was so Avarilla Maranham, with wider opportunities. . . . In girlhood, unable to resign herself to the uneventful subordination of the nursery and the school-room, she was always plotting the dismissal of an under-governess, or trying to inspire the Viscountess, her mother, with a spirit of patronage for some pet drawing-master or mantua-maker. Introduced into the great world, her manœuvres to avoid such and such a partner, or to achieve an invitation to such or such a ball, were of almost Machiavellian art; and from the moment she discovered that the young Duke of Spalding was suspected to be on the eve of a matrimonial engagement with the daughter of one of his Yorkshire neighbours—marked him for her own! She had cared little for him as England's premier Duke; scarcely more as the inheritor of sixty thousand per annum; but when she saw in the wealthy magnate a prize to be won per force of management, a captive to be transferred from other nets to her own, there was no resisting the temptation; and so skilfully were her projects conceived and executed, that very few months sufficed to render the strategist in hanging sleeves—her Grace the Duchess of Spalding. . . . Perhaps it was the ready facility of the scheme which soon rendered propensity a habit, and habit second nature; for the Duchess now became a manœuvrer by vocation. Rich, noble, admired, she could not rest, for very restlessness; but seemed to invent objects of desire for the mere labour of the attainment. Without interest in politics, she became a party woman; without taste for the arts, a patroness, without one pious or Christianly aspiration, a zealous high churchwoman. The poor Duke whom she had fleeced out of his first love, she now cheated out of his hereditary avocations; trafficked in his behalf with ministry; chaffered with his interest; pattered with his patronage. He could not promise a living, but her Grace contrived to induct some Tory protégé of her own; he could not renew the lease of a farm, but she managed to introduce a clause. Did he presume to order new furniture for his library, he was sure to find it translated to one of the drawing-rooms; or if he was rash enough to purchase a picture, or give a commission for a statue, it was certain to be pounced upon for the Duchess's private suite of apartments; where, of all the house, it was least likely to meet his eye. . . . Not that he was an unaffectionate husband; but the over-strained activity of his wife fatigued him to death. The Duke of Spalding's constitutional indolence was even more than patrician, and he found himself wedded to a whirlwind! He was naturally fond of music; but within two years of his marriage, her Grace had conceited him into abhorrence of all harmony. He took to hunting; but the Duchess contrived to be neck-and-neck with him over every five barred gate in the county. He sought refuge in agriculture; but her Grace patent-ploughed him out of the field, and ran him to earth in a crop of ruta-bagas. To whatever pastime or employment he addressed himself, her intention cast its shadow before; and, scared by the pursuit, Spalding's "occupation" was "gone" in a moment! . . . There was but one resource! He became a club-man, and locked himself up in the dear delights of whist. The blue chambers of White's and Brooke's defy the intrusion of manœuvring wives; and, within those sacred retreats, the hereditary legislator had for many years past shuffled, cut, and dealt away the session; a period for whose prolongation not even Bellamy himself could supplicate the gods more fervently than the hen-hunted Duke of Spalding. . . . Still there was Spalding Castle in the distance, with its six or seven months of marital martyrdom; and had not the Duchess one day.

'When cursed with many a granted prayer,' suddenly hit upon a new object for which to persecute the ministry with little notes (marked "private and confidential") of solicitation, the poor Duke might perhaps have ended his woes by suspending himself, for very weariness, to one of his ancestral oaks. But she had luckily become ambitious of fettering down her husband by a place at court, (Buckhounds, Mastership of the Horse, or new Lord Chamberlainship,—what matters it to the reader?) and, having assailed a chief clerk by the loan of her Opera-box to his wife; a private secretary, by sides of venison and hampers of pine-apples; and the private secretary's public master, by exaggerated representations of borough interest, church preferment, and local influence pertaining to the house of Spalding, her Grace's manœuvres were eventually crowned with success: from July to January, if not from January to July, the Duke was now no longer his own master; while she became more than ever her own mistress. . . . The joys of new cares, too, were added to her former pleasures: she had children; and the children had nurses, governesses, tutors, masters, to be out-generalled and outwitted. It was a triumph, for a nature such as hers, to manœuvre a naughty child to the Opera, or a sickly one to drive on a damp day. She taught the little creatures to plan, to plot, to deceive, to equivocate, to lie; and the young lords consequently grew up into roués, and the young ladies into women of fashion. But while this auspicious education was in progress, the Duchess did not slumber at her post. She had always some petty intrigue to carry on, some promising young clergyman, of high character and a pretty vein for poetry, to manœuvre into a prebend; some offending country neighbour of opposite politics, whose daughters she had vowed should never enter the pale of Almack's; some nineteenth son of a nineteenth Scotch cousin, whom she was trying to get made attaché at Rio Janeiro; or some stripling of a political economist, whom she was bent upon having reviewed into notoriety in the Quarterly. Nay, between the pauses of her grander movements, she would even busy herself with the welfare of such small-deer as pages or nursery-maids, set all her energies at work to expose the peccadilloes of some noble friend's groom of the chambers; or congratulate herself upon getting one of Farmer Smith's Patagonian progeny promoted to be drum-major in the Blues."

Of a very different order is Miss Avarilla, a lady rigidly cold and formal, yet incessantly perplexed with business; always in a sort of solemn bustle.

"Horace Walpole has described the motions of the Duke of Newcastle as resembling 'what one might fancy of a man hung in chains, trying to move from one place to another:'—those of Avarilla Maranham resembled what the fancy might conjecture of an automaton wound up to seem in a hurry. Busying herself with the cure of all the souls and bodies in the parish, foundress of half-a-dozen institutions of the kind called charitable, corresponding with Dr. Jenner respecting the incubation of cuckoos and the natural history of hedge-hogs—with the 'Gentleman's Magazine,' under the name of 'Philalethea,' concerning the Gothic origin of the Latin language—with Pestalozzi, touching the indoctrinization of the naughty little boys and girls on the Maranham estate—with philanthropic Owen, respecting the re-moralization of mankind—and with Professor Achtenmachtengropischkeit of Jena, touching the magnetic origin of the universe—she remained cold, undemonstrative, and inaccessible, as one of the relentless Fates;—dead to society, so yelled—forgetting the great world, and by the great world forgot: omitting, like Pope's 'Artemisia,' amid the contending interests of foreign and scientific labours."

'To pare her nails and wear a cleaner smock,'

An old maiden lady trotting along the high road on her favourite bay, 16 hands high, with her straight grey hair escaping from her napless beaver, Mrs. Gore compares to "Talleyrand in a riding habit;" but there are numerous such sallies throughout the volumes, and we foretel the avidity with which this piquant novel will be sought after. The aristocracy, parvenus, the beau monde, must read it, though

"Each will cry that was levelled at me."

Life of the First Earl of Shaftesbury, from original Documents in the possession of the Family. By Mr. B. Martyn and Dr. Kippis. Now first published. Edited by G. Wingrove Cooke, Esq., Author of "Memoirs of Lord Bolingbroke." 2 vols. R. Bentley.

There is no prominent character in our history of whom a dispassionate life is more necessary than the first Earl of Shaftesbury. A consistent patriot from his youth to his death; a firm, uncompromising, and active opponent of the unconstitutional designs of Charles the Second, it follows (naturally enough in those corrupt times) that a host of libellers were arrayed to blacken his character and cast obloquy upon his designs. In this band of defamers are found the names of Sir Roger L'Estrange, Sir William Temple, Bishop Burnet, Dryden, &c.; and it becomes, therefore, the more necessary, if only on account of the rank and genius of his enemies, to set the career of so great a man fairly before the world. A proud testimony indeed of the virtue and public services of Lord Shaftesbury may be traced in the undeviat friendship and respect which John Locke, the illustri metaphysician, entertained for him; but the memoir Shaftesbury, written by this author, is too slight answer the full purpose of biography, and accordingly present work was prepared under the direction of Earl's descendants, by eminent writers. As a reco not only of the remarkable life of Shaftesbury, but a of the Court intrigues of Charles the Second, volumes before us are invaluable, throwing a full lig upon much, which, till now, was obscure in those traordinary times, and tracing satisfactorily the sec motives of measures wherein the welfare of the kin dom was all but fatally compromised.

The private history of the work itself is not a litt curious. This is developed in the preface, from whi we make the following extracts:

"The following work was originally written by men acknowledged literary merit, who had access to all the p vate papers of the Earl, and were assisted by all the i formation concerning him which could be gathered by h descendants. Although thus derived from the most au thentic sources, and originally intended to be given to t world, it has hitherto remained unpublished; and a shor statement of the history of the work is now necessary to i dentity. Shaftesbury's love of literature was apparent i his descendants for several generations. The assiduous ca which he bestowed upon the education of his grandson wa perhaps, the remote cause of the following vindication o his own memory. This grandson inherited with the titl the genius of his grandfather; and is no less known as th author of the "Characteristics," than the first earl is as th author of the Habeas Corpus Act and the Exclusion Bill The fourth Earl did not derogate from the honours of hi house: like his predecessors, he was distinguished as a keen advocate for popular rights, and as a munificent patron of literature. This patronage, at a time less propitious than the present, when literature stood in need of patrons, produced the following work.

"It was a natural ambition for the descendant of so distinguished a character, to be desirous of clearing the founder of his family from the clouds of abuse which the court writers had rolled around his memory. For this purpose his lordship obtained the assistance of Mr. Benjamin Martyn, a gentleman who had achieved a high literary reputation by the production of a successful tragedy. Mr. Martyn and the Earl were long engaged upon their task, and employed great care in the collection and examination of materials.

"Whether the work was completed by Martyn, or whether it was broken off by his illness or his appointment to an office in the customs, I have no means of knowing. If it was completed, the original intention of publication was abandoned, since at his death, in 1763, it was still in manuscript. The fourth Earl of Shaftesbury died in 1771, leaving the work still unprinted, as appears from the quotations it contains from Sir John Dalrymple's Memoirs, the publication of which was not completed until 1773. The work was then taken under the protection of his son, the late Earl, by whom it was consigned to Dr. Kippis, the well-known editor of the Biographia Britannica.

"This author has left some account of the work, and of the share which he had in its composition, in his notes to the memoir of Shaftesbury in the Biographia Britannica; which the peculiar facilities he enjoyed enabled him to render one of the most valuable in his elaborate work.

"After mentioning the materials from which this Life was compiled, and the labours of the original author, the Doctor continues, 'Notwithstanding the pains that had been taken by Mr. Martyn, the late Earl of Shaftesbury did not think the work sufficiently finished for publication; and therefore, somewhat more than twenty years ago,* he put it into the hands of his friend, Mr. Gregory Sharpe, Master of the Temple. All, however, that Dr. Sharpe performed, was to recommend it to the care of a gentleman, still living, who is distinguished for his accurate acquaintance with the history of England, and for the astonishing precision and extent of his memory with respect to facts, dates, and persons which occur in the whole course of that history. This gentleman examined Mr. Martyn's manuscript with attention, pointed out its errors, made references, and suggested a number of instances in which it might be improved, but did not proceed much further in the undertaking. At length the work was consigned to another person, who spent considerable labour upon it, enlarged it, and contemplated availing himself of every degree of information which might render it a correct history of the times, as well as a narrative of the life of Lord Shaftesbury. The reasons (not unfriendly on either side) which prevented the person now mentioned from completing his design, and occasioned him to return the papers to the noble family, are not of sufficient consequence to be here related. Whether the work is likely soon to appear, it is not in our power to ascertain.†'

HESE volumes display very considerable talent, and are idently the production of a kind, benevolent, and ac- mplished mind. ## THE PAUPER'S DEATH-BED.

By Caroline Bowles.

Tread softly—bow the head—
In reverent silence bow—
No passing bell doth toll,
Yet an immortal soul
Is passing now.

Stranger! however great,
With lowly reverence bow;
There's one in that poor shed—
One by that paltry bed,
Greater than thou.

Beneath that Beggar's roof,
Lo! Death doth keep his state:
Enter—no crowds attend—
Enter—no guards defend
This palace gate.

That pavement damp and cold
No smiling courtiers tread;
One silent woman stands
Lifting with meagre hands
A dying head.

No mingling voices sound—
An infant wail alone;
A sob suppress'd—again
That short deep gasp, and then
The parting groan.

Oh! change—Oh! wond'rous change—
Burst are the prison bars—
This moment there, so low,
So agonized, and now
Beyond the stars!

Oh! change—stupendous change!
There lies the soul-less clod:
The Sun eternal breaks—
The new Immortal wakes—
Wakes with his God.

THE STATE OF THE INDIAN ARMY.

Upon a question so important as to have been submitted to the laborious and patient investigation of the high Commission appointed by His Majesty to examine into the whole system of Military Punishments, and which has resulted in their unanimous and deliberate report, founded upon the evidence of the most experienced Generals of the age; it would be presumptuous in me to express any more than a very qualified opinion. I may, however, be permitted to state that in common I believe with all officers, I have been strongly opposed to the award and infliction of Corporal Punishment where it could by any means be dispensed with; and so far as my ability and limited influence have permitted, seeing that difficulties must attend its legal abolition, I have advocated its being allowed to fall into gradual desuetude commensurate with an improved system and conduct in the army. Whether it was politic to determine upon its abolition in the Native ranks at the period and in the manner chosen,—whether it shall cease to be a penalty sanctioned by the British Laws,—or whether the course will be continued of retaining the power of infliction in cases of emergency, while every encouragement is afforded to relax its exercise,—are points which in a few days will be debated and decided by the highest legislative authority of the empire. It is, therefore, sufficient for me to confine my observations in favour of a new and uniform Military code for British India, to that most important question:—whether it be safe and expedient to relieve the Native portion of the Indian Army from liability to this punishment, while the British portion of the same army is continued subject to it?

In touching upon this delicate question in its present position I cannot but be mindful, Sirs, of those parts of the evidence of His Grace the Duke of Wellington, and of the Right Honourable the late Governor-General and Commander-in-Chief of India, which express their belief that the European troops in India now feel and will continue to feel indifference to the matter. With the most profound deference for the opinions of those pre-eminent authorities, I must confess that my individual experience in India, extending from the years 1823 to 1834, and all that I have collected as the result of the observation of others who have recently returned from the armies of either Presidency, prepare me to apprehend a very different and serious result in so peculiar an empire of military opinion. And although it would not be consistent with the object of this paper to argue in opposition to the reasoning and conclusions of those high military characters, I may state that having closely observed the combined duties and conduct of the European and Native soldiery, in Garrisons, in Field-cantonments, and in Warfare, I consider that there now exists an intimacy between the two classes which quickly communicates and explains to the one, whatever occurs affecting the other; especially as regards the European troops of India, both Artillery and Line: and, notwithstanding, I may doubt the reports lately circulated in Indian and Military circles about town, and to which I before referred as having appeared in some of the Journals of the day *, that demonstrations on this subject had already taken place in India, and had actually stayed the inflicting of Corporal Punishments; yet I must candidly express my belief that if the degrading distinction be maintained, occurrences of more marked danger to our Eastern supremacy must be naturally expected.

Should these be anticipated also by the Home Powers, the question naturally arises, how best to provide against the evil? Whether by entirely releasing the European as well as the Native soldier from the punishment, or by retracing the step which has been taken, and again rendering both alike subject to its infliction?

To either mode of adjustment difficulties of no trifling nature are opposed. For, in the first place, exemption cannot be granted to the English troops serving in India without extending it also to the whole British army at home, and in the Colonies; and if to the Army generally, then with what propriety can the exemption be withheld from the Navy? These extensive concessions for the present very few will admit to be expedient, or consider the services prepared to receive. And if it be therefore resolved to restore to the Military code of the Native army the power which has been withdrawn, the manner in which this is to be accomplished involves a question of almost nicer delicacy and more extreme difficulty.

Only one mode has occurred to me as feasible: and that is, for the Home authorities to avail themselves of the opportunity to extend to the Indian army, so far as applicable, all the amendments which have been contained in the Mutiny Acts and Articles of War for the King's forces, passed yearly since 1823, the date of the latest Act and Articles for the Company's Service,—to bring the whole army of India, so far as can be, under one Code and system, rendering every portion thereof amenable to the same description of Courts, and liable to punishments similar both in nature and degree,—and to repeat this assimilation of Military Government annually, by inserting at the conclusion of the Act passed for the Royal Army, a clause somewhat to the following effect:—

"And be it enacted, that wherever the Provisions of this Act apply to Officers, Non-commissioned Officers, Soldiers, and others of His Majesty's army serving in the possessions and territories of the East India Company, or under the Orders of their Government, in other countries in the East; the same shall, so far as applicable, apply to the Officers, Non-commissioned Officers, Soldiers, and others, European and Native, of the army of the said Company:—and that wherever the Provisions of this Act do not so provide for matters affecting the necessary good order and government of the troops, European and Native, of the said Company, it shall, and may be lawful for the Supreme Legislative Council in India, to enact such laws as shall be best adapted to provide for the same: power being reserved to the said Company, to frame Rules and Articles for the better government of the Officers, Non-commissioned Officers, Soldiers, and others in their service, in conformity with the Provisions of this Act; and to the Supreme Legislative Council of India to add thereto, from time to time, agreeably to such additional enactments as the nature and formation of the armies of the said Company may render advisable."

It is well known, Sirs, that the late partial local enactment has induced many who take deep interest in the character of the India Army, and in the security of that vast portion of our empire dependent upon its welfare, to question whether the power of legislating on Military subjects should be in any degree hereafter allowed to the Supreme Council of India, or even to the Court over which you preside, independent of the Sovereign; and the difficulty of the very question I am treating of, undeniably forms a strong argument in favour of its future exercise only in concurrence with the authority. This subject is, however, beyond the object of my present writing; which is to show, that in the Military power now possessed by the Court of Directors and by their local Government is to be continued unimpaired, the introduction of a clause of the above nature into the Mutiny Act for the King's Forces, would remove the many invidious distinctions between their laws and those for the Indian army,—would give the required uniform code and system for the armies of the three Presidencies,—would render one instead of three Judge-Advocates-General sufficient,—would confer on the troops of India instant benefit from the great and numerous improvements introduced annually into the laws for the Royal Army,—and provide for every possible contingency that could arise from the differences between the two services; and that while the Native soldiers would feel proud of being thus subjected to the same Institutes as their European brethren, they cannot fail to perceive therein ample compensation for the anticipated evils of restoring in their Articles of War the power of inflicting Corporal Punishment.

Should this mode of encountering the very difficult and delicate question be objected to, I would respectfully suggest that taking advantage of the labours of the recent commission and the approaching Parliamentary discussion of the question, and of the valuable aid of the many further amendments which may be expected in the Mutiny Act this year, the Home Indian Government should assemble a Committee of able Officers of the Indian Army, recently arrived from regimental and superior commands in one Presidency, to compare the Provisions of the existing Articles and General Orders in force throughout India, for the government of the European and Native troops, with the forthcoming improved Act and Articles for His Majesty's army. By these means, and by the exercise of their own experience and knowledge, a draft of a new Act and of uniform Articles for the whole of the Indian army might be most advantageously framed; the committee being instructed in the course of their proceedings to invite suggestions from all officers at home, whose service in India may have been of a nature or extent to justify such reference.

* "In our last number we gave our opinion that after the abolition of flogging in the Native regiments in India, it would be impossible to maintain the punishment in the British army; and we remarked upon the weakness of the Duke of Wellington's answer as to the probable effect of abolishing flogging in the Native, and continuing it in the British corps. The Duke was of opinion that the British troops would not know or care about the distinction. Now what is the fact, according to current report? Intelligence has, we are informed, arrived to this effect:—That a regiment (probably a detachment) of the Company's European Artillery were on parade for a Corporal Punishment,—that the Non-commissioned Officers stepped from the ranks and declared the resolution of the men not to suffer the infliction of the punishment,—that it was not thought safe to attempt to enforce the sentence,—and that the authorities, not knowing what to do, have sent home despatches asking instructions as to the course they should take."—Examiner, 3rd April, 1836.

"A soldier of His Majesty's 13th regiment of Dragoons, stationed at Bangalore, being about to be tried for an offence, which it was well known would subject him to Corporal Punishment, the privates of His Majesty's 39th regiment of Foot sent an intimation through their Serjeant-Major, to Major-General Hawker, commanding the Mysore Division, to the effect, that, should the sentence be Corporal Punishment, they would not allow the man to be flogged; alleging as a reason, that Lord William Bentinck had abolished flogging in the Native Army. General Hawker permitted the trial to proceed, and the proceedings have been forwarded to England for consideration."—Atlas, April, 1836. [This has been contradicted.—Ed. N. & M. Gazette.]

A Devonshire physician, happily named Vial, was a desperate lover of whist. One evening, in the middle of a deal, the Doctor fell off his chair in a fit. Consternation seized on the company. Was he alive or dead? What was to be done? All help was given—hartshorn was poured almost down his throat by one kind friend, whilst another feelingly singed the end of his nose with burning feathers—all were in the breathless agony of suspense for his safety. At length he showed signs of life, and retaining the last fond idea which had possessed him at the moment he fell into the fit, to the joy of the whole company, exclaimed, "What is trumps?"

Captain Michael, an Englishman in Count Wallden's regiment of Austrian Dragoons, quartered at Padua, seeing a female swept down the Adige, when that river was swollen to a most torrific height, sprang from his horse, and succeeded in bringing her in safety on shore. For this act of dauntless courage and humanity Capt. Michael received the thanks of his Col. and the Mayor and Court of Padua.

THE object of this Company is to afford the means of immediate pecuniary assistance to every one of whatever station in life) who will deposit satisfactory security, in goods or otherwise, for the repayment of the Sums advanced, with equitable remuneration for the same, during such period as the loan may be required.

The extensive business transacted by those already engaged in lending money on deposits, and their immense profits, are of themselves sufficient reasons for the establishment of a Deposit and Loan Bank; but pecuniary institutions, such as this Company will be enabled to afford to every class of society, by means of their large Capital and resources, are not at present attainable through the ordinary channel of deposit and loan.

It is intended that the laws, enacted for the regulation of those persons who are already occupied in similar pursuits, shall be scrupulously observed by this Company.

The abrogation or partial repeal of the Usury Laws, recognises the principle that "those who lend money are entitled to an equitable remuneration;" and the Company will so all itself of the advantages to be derived by a fair, just, and honourable observance of this principle.

Applications for Shares to be addressed (post paid) to the Secretary.

A second Prospectus will be ready for delivery in a few days.

Its astonishing and almost miraculous effects have also been experienced in the cure of nervous and rheumatic pains of the head and face, paralytic affections, contracted and stiff joints, glandular swellings, pains of the chest and bones, chronic rheumatism, palpitation of the heart, difficult respiration, &c. It requires no restraint from business or pleasure. It does not cause any eruption, and may be applied to the most beautiful skin without fear of injury.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I know of, the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly,

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1828, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Broths, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, 2, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sanders, Howls, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand; Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c., &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

SARSAPARILLA S. "Great praise is due to Mr. Hillyard for his very clever and much needed preparation of Sarsaparilla. His mode of preparing it preserves the necessary active qualities, which, according to the old mode, were allowed to evaporate, thus rendering it one of the most sure, as well as simple, remedies in purifying the blood."—United Service Gazette.

"In justice to one of the many preparers of Sarsaparilla, we must give the meed of praise to Hillyard's condensed preparation, knowing some friends of ours who have received much benefit from its use."—Fraser's Literary Chronicle.

Prepared only by Hillyard, chemist, 50, Oxford-street, four doors from Berners-street, and sold by him wholesale and retail and retail by the following Agents—Prout, Strand; Willoughby, 61, Bishopsgate Without. Observe—Half-pints, 2s. 6d.; pints, 4s., quarts, 11s., being less than half the price of any other preparation of the kind, and the strongest ever made.

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY.

AS the following letter received from Major-General Sir Henry Wheatley, Keeper of the Privy Purse, testifies:—

"Sir,—I am honoured with the King's command to express his Majesty's sense of your polite attention in sending the two bottles of Essence of Ginger. His Majesty has been pleased to direct me to forward you ten pounds in payment for it—inclosed you will find that amount.—I am, Sir, your's obediently,

St. James's Palace, June 24th, 1835. H. WHEATLEY.

To Mr. Deelmus Woodhouse.

WOODHOUSE'S ÆTHERIAL ESSENCE of GINGER is particularly recommended to all cold, phlegmatic, weak, and nervous constitutions; it is certain in affording instant relief in Cholera Morbus, Spasms, Cramps, Flatulence, Languor, Hysterics, Heartburn, Loss of Appetite, Sensation of Fulness, Pain and Oppression after Meals; also those Pains of the Stomach and Bowels which arise from Gouty Flatulencies; Digestion, however much impaired, is restored to its pristine state, by the use of this Essence for a short time, if taken in Tea, Coffee, Ale, Beer, Porter, Cider, or Wine; it corrects their Flatulent tendency.

The undernamed, and 200 other Medical men have given certificates of their unqualified approbation of the value of the Essence, as also of its superiority over all other similar preparations. Drs. James Johnson, Physician to his Majesty, A. T. Holroyd, S. Ashwell, R. Rowley, A. Middleton, C. Loudon, D. Davies, Surgeon to their Majesties, J. Pereira, G. Pilcher, F. Salmon, F. Tyrrell, J. H. Curtis, Aurist to his Majesty, C. Millard.

This Essence is prepared only by DECIMUS WOODHOUSE, Operative Chemist Extraordinary to his Majesty, 18, King William-street, New London-bridge; and sold by him, wholesale and retail, in bottles 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., 10s. 6d., and 21s. each; and may be had of all Medicine Venders.

25, New Bond-street.

TEETH.—Gold is the only material with which decayed teeth can be filled with any permanently beneficial result: the various cements to which so many impossibilities are unblushingly attributed, being amalgams of mercury, with silver, tin, &c., quickly combine with the acids of the mouth, and thus, forming muriates of those metals, turn the teeth black, and ultimately destroy them.*

GREIG THOMSON, Surgeon Dentist, informs the Public that he has succeeded in making a preparation of gold, which, without inflicting the least pain, effectually arrests the progress of decay, and resembles the teeth in point of colour much more than any other invention now in use.

G. T. continues to perform all the operations of Dental Surgery, and to fix natural and artificial teeth upon the most improved principles, combined with the utmost moderation in terms.

* Is it credible that any member of the Medical Profession can recommend these deleterious compositions; if he can any reference, real or pretended, after the facts above alluded to?

Delcroix's celebrated Esprit de Lavande aux Millefleurs, for the pocket handkerchief.

Delcroix's Vegetable Extract, for cleansing and beautifying the hair.

Delcroix's Aromatic Mecca, Almond, Rose, Camphor, and Vegetable Soaps.

Delcroix's much-esteemed Old Brown and White Windsor Soaps.

Delcroix's long approved Circassian Opiate, for preserving the teeth and gums from decay.

Delcroix's Creme de Sultanne, for softening and beautifying the complexion.

Delcroix's Genuine Russian Bears' Grease and Huiles Antique.

Messrs. D. and C. have recently obtained injunctions from the Court of Chancery preventing certain parties from selling a spurious imitation of their Esprit de Lavande aux Millefleurs and Vegetable Extract, both of which will in future bear their signature on the labels, and their address, 158, New Bond-street, on the back of the bottles.

TO PREVENT FRAUD.

THORN'S POTTED YARMOUTH BLOATERS, for Toast, Biscuits, Sandwiches, and Wine, in Pots, 1s. and 2s. each. The high repute and immense sale of this delicate preparation has induced several would-be tradesmen (who not having an idea of their own) to attempt an imposition by labeling a pot exactly like his, thereby to deceive the public and injure him, (having actually applied to his printer for that purpose) well knowing they cannot prepare the Fish, the receipt being an old family one, and the secret in the curing of the Herring, by which its rancid qualities are destroyed, and it becomes so delicious a relish. It is easily detected by observing his signature, ALEX. THORN, on the side, and on the top, Proprietor of the celebrated TALLY HO! SAUCE, for Fish, Game, Steaks, Wild Fowl, and all Made Dishes, imparting a zest not otherwise acquired—the most economical now in use: in Bottles, 2s. and 4s. each, warranted in all climates. Wholesale at the Manufactory, Thorn's Oil, Italian, and Foreign Warehouse, 223, High Holborn; also of all wholesale oilmen and druggists; and retail by all respectable oilmen, grocers, and druggists in the United Kingdom.

WITHOUT INJURING the HAIR or SOILING the SKIN.—The only article that has stood the test of experience is AGID HASSAN'S CIRCASSIAN HAIR DYE, which will in a few hours change light, red, or grey hair to a rich auburn or jet black, or any shade between, with a fine glossy appearance, without injuring the roots. It will also be found invaluable to Cavalry Officers and others in removing "white stockings," and giving to every spot of the horse any colour required. Sold by the Sole Agents, W. Day and Co., at their Old Italian and celebrated Fish Sauce Warehouse, 95, Gracechurch street; and Hannay and Co., 63, Oxford-street; in Bottles, at 5s., 10s., and 15s. each, with directions for use, and a fac-simile of the signature of Agid Hassan; also that of W. Day and Co. All others are counterfeit.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove:—

"Sir,—For many years I suffered by Corns; latterly I felt such excruciating pain, having five on my left foot, that the frequent bathing, paring, and filing of them in no way relieved me. For months I could not wear boots, and for ten or twelve days not even shoes. I tried ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN SOLVENT, of which I find you are the Proprietor: after using it two days, I could wear shoes, in four days, one of the Corns, the most painful, was entirely eradicated by this one I suffered more in particular, as it was between my toes. I have in a week after, and since, been able to wear boots. Having experienced this benefit in eight Corns in my own person, and having recommended this Solvent to many Patients of mine, who all have been cured, I deem it but just to give you this testimony, to use it as you may think proper. I am, Sir, your obedient servant, D. EVANS, Surgeon Dentist."

1, Southampton-street, Strand,
18th March, 1836."

A farther testimony in its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely inefficacious but mischievous: it is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Sold by J. A. Sharwood, 55, Bishopsgate Without, in Bottles, at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.; and, by appointment, by most Medicine Venders.

Immediate and soothing relief afforded to the Skin and Complexion, in cases of Tan, Sun Burns, &c., by

FRUIT SEASON.—Each succeeding year proves, more extensively than its predecessor, the advantage of using the Patent Brandy, diluted with water, as a substitute for Beer or other fermentable liquors; a recommendation strongly urged by the principal members of the faculty; and never more important than at the present season, when the natural indulgence in the use of fruit renders the choice of a safe and wholesome beverage an act of great importance. The established purity, and freedom from acid, of the Patent Brandy, expressly and exclusively certified by Chemists of the first eminence, and further substantiated by its constantly increasing sale, (exceeding in the last year that of the preceding year by between twenty and thirty thousand Gallons,) warrant J. T. Betts and Co. in drawing public attention to its superior qualities, not only as a beverage, but also with reference to its use in fortifying Home-made Wines, in the preparation of Confectionary and Preserves, and for general culinary purposes.

As Distillers, J. T. Betts and Co. cannot send out less than two Gallons of their Patent Brandy; which may be obtained at Eighteen Shillings per Imperial Gallon, of the highest legal strength, at the Distillery, No. 7, Smithfield Bars, leading to St. John Street, which is their only Establishment.

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, preserving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, rendering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and sustaining it in curl under the different varieties of atmosphere.

Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO.,
Perfumers to the Royal Family, No. 63, Oxford Street, London.

Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and Co. were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to the Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individual who divulged it to them, or whose head would inevitably have paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties successively employed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn oaths of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three centuries.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed the greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and most uncivilised countries great value is set upon a fine head of hair. The great care is proverbial that is paid to the cultivation of the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, an art is there well known to succeed in outvralling even the far famed beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during the period of three centuries, and has been found undevatingly successful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, soft, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess (as is done in some instances) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair upon cast iron—it will do no such thing; but, if regularly applied, it will re-produce the hair where nature originally obtained its existence, if lost from those causes to which baldness is referable; it will promote the growth of the hair generally,

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY, sustain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a brilliant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a pure LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, unsophisticated with the deleterious articles usually employed to dye Oils red, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the hair, and although an oily substance, the

ORIENTAL OIL DOES NOT RENDER THE HAIR GREASY, and is therefore free from the general complaint against every other article in present use for the same purpose, including those filthy substances miscalled Bears' Grease, which are neither more nor less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil submitted to various manipulations to divest them of the fetid animal smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform principle. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the decay of the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprived of which it soon withers and dies; so the hair, unless properly nourished, becomes weak and gradually drops off; for, minutely a single hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human hair will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface covered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, and which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tendency, the hair is destroyed thereby: thus it will be observed that those persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in life, which is merely caused by the acid caustic nature of the perspiration settling on the hair and being absorbed, which entirely destroys it; but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will prevent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury, and if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely removes the scurf, without the assistance of the dandruff combs, an operation so distressing to the heads of children.

Price 3s. 6d., 6s. 6d., and in pint bottles, with glass stoppers, 12s. each.

N.B.—HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL is particularly recommended to the notice of Merchants and Shippers Trading to the East and West Indies, being the only article for the hair that will survive a voyage to the East without turning rancid.

SARSAPARILLA.—Mr. WRAY, of Holborn-hill, the Proprietor of the ALTERATIVE-TONIC POWDERS, having observed constant disappointment attending the exhibition of the pharmaceutical and other preparations of Sarsaparilla, induced him to set on foot, with the assistance of the ablest experimental chemists, an analysis of its properties, the result of which proves that true Sarsaparilla, carefully collected and separated from all impurities, is in substance most effectual, and that the various preparations under the denomination of decoctions, extracts, essences, syrups, &c., hitherto used can never be depended upon for producing any real or permanent benefit. But, though Sarsaparilla in substance only is to be preferred, yet the action may be materially assisted when combined with auxiliaries. By a trial of many years' continuance, he has found that the Alterative-Tonic Powders he now offers to the Public have justified his most sanguine expectations, and therefore feels himself bound by motives of humanity to confine them no longer to private practice, but to allow the public the full advantage of so valuable a medicine. Persons of the habit of taking quinine will find his powders by far the more efficacious tonic."—Morning Advertiser.

ROYAL NAVAL SCHOOL.—The Council having decided to build a School-house for the accommodation of 500 Pupils, and having opened a Subscription to carry into effect this most desirable object, consider it respectful to the Public, and just to the Naval Service in general, to make known their intention by Advertisement. The Report of the Examination of the Pupils, in all the various branches of Education, is so perfectly satisfactory, that the Council are induced to hope that all the friends of the Naval Service will aid them in their object of raising a fund for building. The number of Orphans and Children of Officers in necessitous circumstances, boarded and educated gratuitously, or at a very reduced charge, will, of course, depend on the state of the general funds of the Establishment when the proposed building is paid for.

The undermentioned Bankers, and all the Navy Agents in London, have kindly promised to receive Subscriptions:—Messrs. Coutts and Co., Strand; Messrs. Drummond and Co., Charing-cross; Messrs. Hoare and Co., Fleet-street.

Subscriptions are also received at the Office, No. 7, Jermyn-street.

PORTSMOUTH, JULY 14th.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Rapid having landed her freight of diamonds and specie, and the numerous invalids brought from the South American squadron, sailed on Sunday for Chatham, and was paid off yesterday. Rear-Admiral the Hon. Sir Charles Paget, G.C.H., hoisted his flag (red at the mizen) in the Bellerophon, on Monday the 11th under the customary salutes. Lieut. Rebt. W. Otway is nominated Flag Lieut. The crew of the Vanguard were paid two months' advance on Monday, and on Tuesday 5th ship went to sea with a strong east wind. She made about five tacks before she rounded Bembridge Ledge, and appeared to be very well handled. She returned from her cruize on Tuesday; the crew describe her as a good sea-boat, and that she sails remarkably well and fast. The Asia returned to Spithead on Wednesday. The Buffalo has gone to Spithead; the emigrants and their goods are on board. Gov. Hindmarsh and his family will embark to-morrow. Mr. Dean was at work on Monday near the wreck of the Royal George, and succeeded in getting up an anchor, weighing 67 cwt. 3 qrs. 14 lbs., which was landed next day at the Dock-yard. Neither Mr. Dean, nor the Dock-yard officers think it has been one of the Royal George's anchors, but belonging to some man-of-war that dropped it near the wreck. It is in very good preservation; the stock was however quite rotten and were away. The Pluto arrived on Tuesday on her way to the coast of Spain with arms and ammunition. The depot of the 98th arrived in the Athol transport, to join the garrison. Ships in Port—Asia, Vanguard, Bellerophon, Cornwallis, Pembroke, and Buffalo, at Spithead; Britannia, Madagascar, Pluto, Beacon, and Emerald, in Harbour.

MILFORD HAVEN, 13th July.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The only arrival connected with the Service during the past week has been the Hamoaze lighter, Gormully, master, with stores from Plymouth for Pembroke, on her passage to Liverpool. She is gone thence to fetch the jury gear used in navigating the Lavinia, where she is to be stationed as a lazarette. The Dido has been undocked from Pembroke-yard, and is now at the moorings off that establishment, with her three lower masts in, but as they are found small for her, they will be taken out and replaced by those returned from the Lavinia. A quarterly general muster of the workmen took place at Pembroke before Capt. Superintendent Sir Charles Bullen, when some of the old and infirm were recommended for superannuation. The Skylark revenue cruiser, the only one on the station, sailed on Monday for the prevention of smuggling. The Coast-Guard, established throughout Pembrokeshire most effectually prevents that extensive contraband business so long and so successfully carried on. Some changes among the men have lately taken place at Pembroke-dock. Lieut. M'Killop, R.M., recently ordered to join the depot at Pembroke, being next for foreign service, was recalled to quarters (Plymouth) on Monday. He is to be relieved by Lieut. Hopkins of that division. The detachment up at the dock-yard is in a most complete state of efficiency (as observed by Col. Sir John Savage), under the command of Major Bailey. It is astonishing that this meritorious officer, now of such long standing in the service, should be possessed of no other distinguishing badge than the medal for "Egypt." His rank in the Army, his faithful and continued services, and the command with which he is at present entrusted, fairly entitle him to farther marks of his Sovereign's favour—a Sovereign whom he dearly loves and loyally obeys. The Castlemartin Yeomanry Cavalry are to assemble in the neighbourhood of Pembroke for the usual eight-days' training the latter end of this month. While I am writing this, the Hamoaze lighter is running up under her square-sail to the Dock-yard, on return from Liverpool. She brings Mr. Walker and the party of seamen who navigated the Arethusa to that port. We are all on the qui vive here, in expectation of orders from the General Post-office for the removal of the packet establishment up to Hobbs' point. Our agent, Mr. Anson, became a tenant in the house built there for his reception on the 11th inst., and as every day that he remains here now must be either a disadvantage to him or to the Government, and as all things there are ready for the packet station, a week at farthest must bring about the transfer. Report says the agent has been applied to for explanation as to what has hitherto prevented the intended arrangement. Orders have been received at the dock-yard at Pembroke, in common with all the others, that in future the situations of Masters'-Attendant and Superintending-Masters, shall be held for five years, that too at reduced salaries. This is no doubt a preliminary step towards similar arrangements with all those Naval Officers who hold civil appointments in our arsenals;—the order is founded on a Treasury minute. Although this is a fair step for the Naval service generally, yet it is another proof of the erroneousness of Mr. Hume's statement, that our Naval and Military Services are the best paid under the Crown.

WOOLWICH DOCK-YARD, July 15th.—(From our own Correspondent).—On Sunday last the Pluto st.-v., Lieut. Syer, received on board an Officer and 20 men, to be placed at the disposal of Lord J. Hay on the Spanish Coast. Confiance st.-v. was taken out of dock on Monday, and towed into the basin; Blazer st.-v. was taken into dock the same day. Alban st.-v., Lieut. Tiolieg, sailed on Tuesday forenoon, and Pluto st.-v. the same day, having passengers Com. M'Dougal, who goes out to take command of the Salamander, also seamen sent from the Tender off the Tower. Firebrand st.-v., Master Allen, has had her boilers repaired, and is ready for service. Lieut. Joseph Pearse (a), hoisted his pendant on board the Firefly on Wednesday, she having been brought down the river the previous day. Rhadamanthus st.-v. is being brought forward with all possible despatch, and it is rumoured she will have her former Commander, Capt. Evans. Lightning st.-v. Lieut. Shambler, will be ready for service in about a fortnight or three weeks. Flamer st.-v., Lieut. Pothury, was paid off on Wednesday. Capt. Kennedy, of the Sheerness Yard, visited here in a tender on Thursday last. Ships in Commission in Port—William and Mary, Firebrand st.-v. In Dock—Blazer (not in Commission). In the Basin—Lightning, Firefly. In Commission—Rhadamanthus, Flamer, Confiance. Not in Commission,—Messenger st.-v. Master, J. King.

PLYMOUTH, July 14th.—(From our own Correspondent)—The Savage brig, Lieut. Loney, arrived here from Barbadoes, on Saturday. She sailed from thence on 11th June, leaving there the Gannet and Racehorse. The latter was about to proceed to Para, to relieve the Snake. Belvidera had gone to Bermuda, to get a new fore-mast. Melville and Wanderer were at Halifax. The Savage and Nautilus came into harbour on Monday, the former to be paid off, the latter to have her defects made good, and complete stores. The Pluto started from Woolwich on Saturday, to call at Portsmouth, for Marine-Artillery. She arrived here yesterday (Wednesday) from Portsmouth, having on board a party of Marine Artillery for the coast of Spain. Of Pluto's arriving out, Com. Mc. Dougal, with his Officers, 2 Lieuts., Master, Surgeon, and Purser, will be transferred into the Salamander, and Lieut. Duffill will resume the command of the Pluto. Nautilus, Lieut. Crooke, arrived the same day, from Greenock, with new raised men for the squadron: Hope and Magnet packets are ordered to be commissioned; see Appointments. Minden arrived on Tuesday, from Sheerness, which she left on 7th inst. The Pearl, Castor, and French brig-of-war were lying there. All the Marines belonging to these ships, and most of the crews were on shore expecting an attack from the Carlists. The latter were, according to reports then prevalent, increasing in numbers rapidly. Nothing of any moment has occurred up to Minden's sailing, beyond what is already known. Dido was launched from Pembroke Yard last week. She is at her moorings, waiting for Mr. Walker and seamen from Liverpool, to rig and navigate her to Sheerness. This navigating party will call at Portsmouth on the way back, to bring the Galatea hare, to be fitted as a cock depot for Jamaica. Partridge leader, sailed on Thursday last. Lavinia sailed for Liverpool, as a lazaretto, on Wednesday, under the charge of Mr. Walker. Magpie will be paid off in a day or two, and call for the Mediterranean station as a surveying vessel. Malabar and Russell are daily expected to arrive at this port from Lisbon. Plover packet was docked on Thursday. She appears to be very defective. Mulgrave, 74, is jury-rigged for a lazaretto at Milford, vice Gibraltar, to be broken up at Pembroke. Zebra sailed from Sydney, N.S.W., for Hobart Town, 12th Feb. Reindeer arrived at Havannah from Falmouth, 29th May. Lapwing arrived at Lisbon from Falmouth, 22d June. In the Harbour—Royal Adelaide, Imogene, Nautilus, Savage, and Magpie cutter. In the Sound—Minden.

The lower rigging of the Minden is very defective, a survey is expected to be held on it to-day.

As no orders have yet been received at the Marine depot at Pembroke for their relief, it is expected the men, if not the Officers, will remain for another year.

Mr. Jones, Surgeon of Pembroke-yard, went on public leave of absence on the 11th inst.

The Pluto steamer sailed from Woolwich on Sunday, taking out the Salamander's officers and crew for the north coast of Spain, where Lieut. Duffill will take the command, having been acting in the Salamander.

The Flamer st., Lieut. Pothury, has been paid off this week.

The Firebrand is ordered to be ready for sea on the 16th.

The Firefly st. is brought to Woolwich from the Chatham canal, to have her wheels fitted (the workmen of the Messrs. Seward having struck work), and is just commissioned by Lieut. Peeres at Woolwich. The poop and forecastle have been removed from the Rhadamanthus st. at Woolwich, to enable her to be fitted with guns to throw ten-inch shells, when commissioned her destination is supposed to be the north coast of Spain.

The Prince Regent tr., with part of 98th, arrived safe at Malta on 6th June.

The Henry Porcher, Bengal merchant, and Earl Grey are fitting for male convicts at Deptford, also the Pallinurus for female convicts.

The Mary schooner is fitting at Deptford for Malta, and the Ida for Gibraltar.

The age of Naval Lieutenants for Chief Officers of the t-Guard Service, has been most kindly and considarextended by the Admiralty to fifty years.

e jaws on the topsail-yards of H.M. ships are abolished, ng been found to injure the topmasts.
sailing match for a silver cup will take place at Green-on Monday the 18th inst.
is Majesty's ship Malabar, Sir W. Montagu, arrived isbon, 26th ult., from Cadiz, for the purpose of having urt-Martial held on board, which could not have been at Cadiz, as the case is one of capital punishment (s ing striking and wounding a Midshipman), and three sins at least are required to sit on it.
e Tartarus st. is ordered to Alexandria, for the purpose inging home an Indian mail, via the Red Sea, with east possible delay.
avigators in the Channel should be aware that a revolv-ight was exhibited on the Start Point, on the 1st inst., ing a brilliant flash every minute; in addition to which ditenary light is also displayed there for the use of ls going out of or into Torbay. The Portland Light is onger a revolving one, but both the high and low lights ist Point are fixed lights.
he Athol, troop ship, having disembarked the depot e 99th reg. at Plymouth, returned to Spithead on Thurs-se'nnight, with the reserve cos. of the 98th (which have n up their quarters in Portsmouth garrison), afterwards arked the 61st depot, and proceeded to Cork, whence will return with the 48rd depot for Plymouth. It is to the discipline of the 61st regiment that it should be d, that during the whole time they have been in Ports-th garrison, not a single complaint has been made against r officers or men.
ear-Admiral Sir Charles Paget has appointed Mr. rge Thorn to be his Secretary.
rders have been received at the Royal Marine headters to send out an additional recruiting party from each ion, and to add a non-commissioned officer to the gth of those already out. If the reports which have spread of the probability that the force now on the st of Spain will be shortly withdrawn were well-founded, do not think the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty ld show this anxiety to complete this corps, as the rn of Major Owen's battalion would give them plenty of osable Marines.

THE FRANCIS SPAIGHT.—By the arrival at Guernsey of hrigantine Magdalen, Capt. Lempriere, direct from to Cabras, in the island of Fuerteventura, intelligence been received that this ill-fated vessel, of which we ntly gave a most melancholy account, was found about latter end of May, waterlogged, off the Canaries, on the t of Africa, and towed into Puerto Cabras by three fish-boats belonging to the islands; and as the Magdalen there at the time, Capt. Lempriere spared one of his n cables and an anchor to secure the said vessel, as e was neither anchor nor cable to be found on board, rewith to bring her up. It appears that the skeleton of man body was found in the forecastle, which is sup-ed to be that of one of the seamen said to have been wned there when she filled with water.

FOREIGN OFFICE, July 9.—A despatch has been received his Majesty's Consul at Elsinore, stating that the ish Government has stationed the Wilhelmina steam-el, of 96-horse power, in Elsinore-roads, for the pur-of towing through the Sound such vessels bound to tic ports as may be detained at the entrance of the Sound contrary winds. H. M.'s Consul has, at the same time, mitted a translation of the provisional tariff of the exe attending the towage of vessels through the Sound by Wilhelmina steam-vessel:—"For a vessel not exceed-50 lasts burden, 12 rix bank dollars, or 1*l.* 7*s.* per r; not exceeding 75 lasts burden, 13 rix bank dollars, l. 9*s.* 3*d.* per hour; not exceeding 100 or 125 lasts len, 14 rix bank dollars, or 1*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.* per hour; not ex-ding 150, 175, or 200 lasts burden, 15 rix bank dollars, l. 13*s.* 9*d.* per hour; not exceeding 225, 250, 275, or 300 s burden, 16 rix bank dollars, or 1*l.* 16*s.* per hour.
planations—It must be remarked, with regard to the lication of the above tariffs, 1. That ships under 50 lasts for 50 lasts, the same as all those below 63 lasts; but eeding 63 lasts they are charged for 75 lasts, and thus in same ratio for ships of a greater burden, according to difference of rates stated in the tariffs. 2. That the rge for ships exceeding 300 lasts is made progressively, rding to the propositions laid down in the tariff. 3.
t towage will not take place if more than three hours are ired for performing the distance of a Danish mile, exin cases of distress, when a special agreement must be le for the assistance to be rendered. Remark—The last eckoned at 4,060lbs., or two tons. The Danish money been reduced to 2*s.* 3*d.* per rix bank dollar. FRANCIS MACGREGOR, Consul.—Elsinore, June 1, 1836."

H.M.S. Wolf, Capt. E. Stanley, passed Pondicherry on 23rd Jan., on her way to Madras from Trincomalee.
y the Zenobia, from Calcutta, we hear that the Jupiter, Hon. Capt. Grey, got on shore on the James and Mary al, near Diamond Harbour, in going up to Calcutta, but by the assistance of three steamers, which had her in at the time, she was got off. The ship was in charge of the pilot at the time of the accident, and had experienced no damage.

The Vanguard, 84, Capt. Hon. D. P. Bouverie, was paid advance on Monday, and sailed on the following day, to cruize in the Channel, with her constructor (Sir W. Symonds), on board.—Hampshire Telegraph. [The above paragraph has gone the round of the Papers upon the strength of our contemporary. Sir William Symonds has been attending to his official duties, and visited Sheerness, the Nore, and Woolwich, at the time he is said to have been on board the Vanguard. We have letters from the ship, which state that her behaviour has exceeded the most sanguine wishes of her admirers; she was admirably worked, lying within five points of the wind, heeling about four degrees, and going at the rate of from 8 to 10 knots on a bowline. She also sails remarkably well, going free, tacking and wearing in a very short space. She has been fitted and ballasted precisely after the directions of her constructor, and floats with her anchors stowed precisely on her estimated line.—Ed.]

The French government contemplate forming an extensive harbour at St. Malo, capable of containing a large fleet of line-of-battle ships; should they set about this in earnest, it behoves us to look to the security of our Channel Islands, not one of which now possesses a harbour that is not dry at low water, and where shipping could consequently be destroyed by a military force.

A Court-Martial assembled at Portsmouth on Tuesday on the Master of the Rover.

H.M.S Hercules was paid advance at Sheerness on the 8th, and on the following day put to sea with the intention of cruizing for a week or ten days, and then join the squadron at Spithead. Bonetta, Lieut. Bisson, was paid wages the same day, and afterwards cruized at the Great and Little Nore, in company with Vice-Admiral Fleming's yacht. The Vice-Admiral, Capt. Sir W. Symonds, and other Officers, were on board to witness her sailing qualities, and were highly gratified with her. The Bonetta is to take on board some specie for the Cape of Good Hope, and call at Spithead previous to quitting England. Lieut. John Price, late of the Wolf, reinstated last May, takes a passage to join Thalia. Scylla is the only ship fitting at Sheerness, and has now her complement of men. The Hawke, 74, is a demonstration ship at Chatham. The Rapid was paid off yesterday.

ROYAL MARINES, WOOLWICH.—The Officers of this Division have been much gratified by Lord Minto's appointment of Mr. N. Moore to a Commission in the Corps, as he is the son of an esteemed brother Officer, the late gallant Major Moore.

Mr. Wm. Robinson, mate, passed in 1819, appointed to H.M. st.-v. Salamander on the north coast of Spain. He is one of the oldest Mates in H.M. Navy, having served upwards of twenty-three years in constant active service.

The Recherche is again fitted out, and sent in search of the Lilloise, and combines more science with its primary object than even in the former voyage. MM. Gastimard, Lottin, and Robert, are the chief scientific officers. M. Marmier is appointed to collect and discover the Sagas and old Chronicles; M. Mayer is draftsman, and M. Bovalet has the preparation of objects of natural history. The Feroe and Shetland Islands are to be visited on returning.

The Bellerophon and Pembroke have been ordered on a cruize for a few days to stretch their rigging.

Military Lectures.—To his credit be it spoken, Maj.-Gen. Sir James Douglas, commanding at Limerick, in addition to the sufficiently arduous duties which his station calls upon him to fulfil, gives a military lecture once a week at his own house to all officers in the garrison except those on duty. And, like Marshal Ney, he has them to breakfast with him; that over, they repair to a room expressly fitted up for the purpose, where the General has his maps and plans to illustrate the campaigns about which he is going to speak. He then proceeds to explain how difficult manœuvres succeeded, and how others failed, marking each on the plan as he goes on; and having traced the movements of the contending armies in detail, he shows the principles upon which each acted, and points out where they were true and where false.—Fraser's Magazine.

Maj.-Gen. Lord F. Somerset held a Levee at the Horse Guards on Tuesday, which was attended by several distinguished officers.

Trigonometry.—Eighty officers of the royal staff, employed in making a map of France, have just started to different parts of the kingdom, in order to make trigonometrical observations as the basis of their labours.

A LETTER TO THE RIGHT HON. LORD HILL.

Justice, my Lord, justice is all we seek, and it is from you, who have never refused it to the humblest soldier in your ranks, that we ask it.

We do not complain that three-fourths of the service of regiments of the line is performed in the colonies, we know it cannot be avoided; but the colonies of England are as different in climate and salubrity as they are distant from each other: why, then, my Lord, is one regiment condemned to toil under a brazen sun, and to suffer alternately from the jungle fever of the East and the yellow fever of the West Indies, while another exchanges the healthy and bracing climate of America for the genial warmth of the Mediterranean?

It may be said that such occurrences are accidental, and that the regiment whose turn it is to go on service goes wherever it is required. Cast your eye over the subjoined table, and see if it has been so, my Lord; and even if such had been the case, was it just that the 17th regiment, which returned from 20 years' service in India, should, after five years' respite, be sent back again to India, while, in the same year, the 32d regiment, which returned from the Mediterranean, and had enjoyed an equal period (five years) at home, should be sent to America? It is unnecessary to multiply instances, the annexed table will furnish them abundantly.

It is to this we would direct your Lordship's attention. No one knows better than your Lordship how dreadful the consumption of life in those baneful climates. I not, then, confide such arrangements as these to a subordinate, who may be influenced by the rank and power of a Colonel, asking a better station for his regiment than it would be in justice entitled to. Look to it yourself, my Lord; you alone command the army—you command its respect and esteem; in you it places implicit confidence, and from you it is certain of even-handed justice. Your Lordship's obedient servant,

Round Robin.

East India Intelligence.

A ballot was held at the East India House on Wednesday the 13th, for the election of a Director in the room of George Raikes, Esq., who had disqualified. At 4 o'clock the glasses were closed, and delivered to the scrutineers, who reported the election to have fallen on Francis Warden, Esq.

Sir Charles Metcalfe has received a renewed appointment of Provisional Governor-General, to take effect in case of accident to Lord Auckland, or on his Lordship's retirement. The Deputy-Governorship of the West Provinces we therefore conclude to be an office kept warm only for Sir Charles, if he chooses to accept it.

The new Native Medical College was to be opened 10th March. Principal Bramley to deliver an opening address.

* This regiment was in Jamaica to 1802; in India to 18 where it remained until 1826; from 1826 to 1831 it was in Ir land, and embarked in that year for the West Indies, where still remains.

We announced last week the orders of the Court of rectors for the suspension or abolition of the Agra ssidency. Mr. Alex. Ross is appointed Lieotenant-overnor of the Western Provinces.—Hurkoru, 3rd arch.

The Governor-General of Botavia, in consequence of application to him by the Governor-General of India exert his influence in the discovery of the crew and assengers of the ship Charles Eaton, supposed to have rvived the wreck of that vessel in Torres Straits, has warded the depositions of five seamen belonging to ehip, who, after a residence of thirteen months on the and of Timorlaut, were taken thence, and brought to nboyne by an Indian coasting barque. Their state-nt as to the position of the vessel when they left her t variance with that of respectable eye-witnesses as to present condition, it being known that she stands, or ly stood, high and dry on the barrier reef in Torres raits, with her royal yards across. The Governor of tavia, in remarking this discrepancy, states that it es sufficient ground for the hope that the residue of crew and passengers may still be discovered on some the Islands in the Eastern Archipelago, and has deter-ned to continue his exertions in their behalf.—India aette, 2nd March.

The 38th N.I., under the command of Lieut.-Col. tt, reached Delhi on 12th Feb., and the 42d, com-nded by Major Ross, quitted Delhi on 14th Feb., in gress to Bareilly, where it is to be stationed.

We have to announce the melancholy death of Mr. tzler, son of Col. Hetzler, of the Artillery, who has n for some time past connected with the Sessions dge Establishment at Delhi. It appears that the un-tunate deceased accidentally fell from a balcony in his dence, and although medical assistance was promptly rded, he lingered until the 10th Feb., when death ved him from his sufferings.

The appointment of Lieut. Higginson to the political ce of Agent to the Governor-General at Moorsheda-, and the removal of Colonel Caulfield, the officiating ent, have given very great offence.—Englishman, 27th .

Law.

VETERAN CAUSE, Winchester, Wednesday.—Gar-r v. Ward.—This was an action brought by the ntiff, a Major in the army, and a magistrate of the ty, against the defendant, who drove the Exeter egraph, to recover compensation in damages, in con-ence of his having had criminal conversation with (the plaintiff's) wife. The plaintiff, who is now 45 s of age, married Miss Pluckett, of Southampton, in 3, the lady being then eighteen years of age, very tiful and accomplished, and with a fortune of 00*l.* consols, which, upon her marriage, was settled as ws:—100*l.* a-year to herself for pin-money; the rest he husband for life. After his death the whole of dividends on the wife during her life, and then to the dren equally to be divided amongst them. Two ghters were the result of the union. From some cause, which we must leave to conjecture, the plaintiff and his wife had slept apart for several years. They were on visiting terms with most of the respectable families in the neighbourhood of their house, which was at Cholderton-lodge, near Salisbury. About Dec. last some of their female acquaintence discontinued their visits to the plaintiff's wife, in a manner which excited his attention; and it was at length intimated to him that she had been seen walking and riding with the defendant, and that she had been seen in his company at Southampton. On investigation he discovered that an improper intercourse had been for some time carried on. She forthwith returned to her friends, whom she soon after quitted again, and now lived with the defendant at Basingstoke, in a good house, keeping two servants, two horses, and a buggy. Plaintiff's brother, a clergyman, proved the marriage, and their living happily at first, with only occasional gusts of temper; that there was considerable attachment—that is to say, as much as there generally is between married people. The adultery was not denied. Mr. Serjeant Bompas addressed the jury for the defendant, on such topics as were suggested by the above facts; but delicacy forbids us giving the details of his speech. Verdict for the plaintiff—Damages 100*l.*

Donna Maria's Frolics.—An old woman, who has been lately employed at the Palace making new window-curtains, relates many amusing anecdotes of the Queen and her young spouse. Her Majesty, it seems, is as full of frolic and as wild as a kitten. She never takes more than one meal a day; but that one meal lasts all day long—for the lump, not slice, of bread and butter is never out of her hand. In her hours of relaxation she and the Prince often indulge in a game of romps, which generally ends in a mêlée of all the ladies present. Lest I should forget it, let me tell you at once, she is positively not enceinte. Some days ago she hunted old Don Lorenço de Lima from room to room with a pair of scissars in her hand; and her object, namely, to cut off a piece of his coat tail, having been frustrated by the clever retreat he ultimately succeeded in effecting, she indulged her sportive humour by chopping off large pieces from the fashionably capacious sleeves of her Maids of Honour. The Prince is just as frolicsome, and is for that very reason, besides his good looking phiz, a great favourite at the Palace. The dramatis personæ of the little coterie who surround the Royal pair is small, but choice. Don Lorenço de Lima, uncle to the Marquis de Ponte de Lima, the very beau ideal of Bob Logic, with spectacles, umbrella, &c. The only achievement of any note ever accomplished by him is one of which certain London tailors can furnish you with the particulars. Don Thomas de Mello, a man of Herculean frame, and almost gigantic dimensions. It was he who really killed the lancer whom Lord Beresford has the credit of having slain at the battle of Albuera. Though a nobleman of the highest descent and rank, he was then serving as a private dragoon. The fact is, that he never intended to enter the army as a profession, having been brought up as an homme de robe, and only joined the army at the commencement of the Peninsular war, because he felt that his country had a right to claim the aid of his brawny arm for its defence. Thinking himself rather too old to be a subaltern, he entered it once as a private. The Duchess de Ficalho, a very amiable woman by all accounts, and, lastly, the fascinating Donna Maria das Dores, a young lady whose charms are said to have enthralled the heart of a juvenile diplomatist of Hibernian descent, and who claims kindred with the immortal gods, being the nephew of no less a personage than Cupid himself. The rest are all figurantes, not worthy of any particular commemoration.

Life in London.—There is more of what Pierce Egan calls "life in London" to be seen in Tothill-street, Westminster, than in any other district of the metropolis, not even excepting St. Giles's. The conversation carried on in the vernacular, the appearance of the shops, and the view of Westminster Abbey, certify that the place is English; but then the irregularity of the architecture of the houses, every one being built after the design of the proprietor, and some, for greater convenience, having their gable-ends on the footway, the number of public-houses, the number of people speaking the Irish language, wearing Irish stuffs and frieses, buying, selling, and eating Irish potatoes, and, above all, fighting with regular Irish shillelaghs, not forgetting the perpetual ingress, egress, and regress, of Irish members, continually incline the passenger to believe that he is in an Irish county town on a great annual fair-day, or in the middle of the assizes week. Hawkers, pedlars, jugglers, tinkers, tailors, spalpeens, ballad-singers, gingerbread-manufacturers, soldiers, sailors, boys and girls, and policemen intermingle with the utmost good humour, and walk forward, collect into conversaziones, or squat against the doors, without any apprehension of those interruptions that are sure to follow from the civic authorities in any other part of Westminster or the city. Here persons may sing ballads without an extra quaver from thoughts of Mr. Laing, and here they may get drunk and fight ad libitum, safe from any anticipation of a fine of five shillings, or a fortnight's lodging in the House of Correction. Yesterday evening a group of civilians and soldiers were drinking gin in one of the most frequented of the numerous gin-shops in this street. A difference arose in conversation, as frequently occurs when men are over their cups, whether sitting at a table or standing at a counter, between the soldiers and the citizens, and forthwith a champion from each party was selected to fight the question out in the middle of the street. The combatants immediately divested themselves of hats, coats, waistcoats, and shirts, on imporvious hand-in-hand ring was formed, and the milling instantly commenced. The men fought eight rounds, each resting in the intervals on the knee of his second; but, after several falls, the civilian seemed to have the best of it, and two policemen just then coming up; they were separated, without any punishment save what they had inflicted upon each other. Instead of putting up shutters and pulling down blinds, the shopkeepers stood at the doors, without the slightest uneasiness, and the ladies ran up stairs, and had a capital view of the shirtless men from the windows. We do not allude to this incident as a nuisance, but as a fact, for if the rate-payers and rent-payers of Tothill-street are satisfied with this order of things, what right have the inhabitants of other streets to interfere?

Laws of Auvergne.—Twenty Auvergnats presented themselves, a short time back, before a Commissary of Police in Paris, near the Rue de Bac, in order to ask permission to parade one of their countrymen on an ass, for having suffered himself to be beaten by his wife. The police officer refused to interfere, and the next day the procession took place, in the Faubourg St. Germain. Four water-carriers formed the advanced guard; a charcoal-vender played on a pipe, and walked next, and two others led the ass, on which the conquered husband was seated, with his face towards the tail, having an inscription on his breast, and on his back, with these words:—"Service pour Chausson." Then came a crowd of Auvergnats, followed by all the rabble of the neighbourhood. After having traversed several streets, the procession stopped before the house of the culprit, where a symphony was performed, in which Aliboron [the donkey] took a part. The husband was then obliged to pay 12 francs for refreshments. It was, however, carried a little too far; for as all the Auvergnats in the city had not been invited, they most of them demanded a treat the next day, and made him contribute 50 francs more. An Auvergnat does not easily forget any injury inflicted on his purse; and the victim had his turn; for on bringing it before the municipal authorities, each of the farce players was condemned to a fine of two francs, besides such a proportion of the expenses, as would, in the whole, make up the loss to the defendant.

The Colonel and the Cabs.—According to Capt. Boldero, London is to be the scene, some future day, of a summary execution under what may be fairly termed Linch-law—or the law by which a linchpin may be taken out, and a cab so securely upset as to break the neck of a Colonel. The Colonel in question is surnamed Slibtharpo—the gallant member who has taken so much interest in some of the details of the "Metropolis Carriages Bill," and who has thus provoked a conspiracy among the cab fraternity to "upset him if ever they catch him in a cab." Capt. Boldero derived his information of the conspiracy from an actual bona fide cabman. On being asked why this Linch-law had not been already put into execution, the cab-conspirator replied, "that he thought his own neck was as valuable as the gallant Colonel's; and, moreover, the Colonel once gave him seventeen shillings for driving him three hours." This touch of gratitude renders the heroism of the design more apparent. Had he lived in ancient times four cabman would have been immortalised. There is something grand in his devotion to his professional duty of breaking the Colonel's neck—of breaking it in spite of his sense of seventeen shillings. We must also admire the noble independence of his declaration, that he thinks his own neck as valuable as the Colonel's. We see the inward struggles of the man, amidst the stern philosophy of the cabman. Though bent upon the good deed, he hesitates a moment—he defers the withdrawal of the linchpin—he leaves for a brief period the Colonel's neck unbroken, simply on account of a humane and natural reluctance to break his own, and thus inflict an injury on his wife and family. He feels that he must not do what he likes with his own neck whilst he has babes to cling to it. The gallant member may well stand in awe of such a nature, and resolve to end the terrible struggle by determining never henceforward to be caught in a cab. Indeed, his aversion to the Cabinet is increased, by his insuperable prejudice against the first syllable of the word.—Court Journal.

A recent foreign tourist in England observes:—In opening, one day, a paper rolled round a pair of gloves, I discovered a lithographized chart, emblemetic of society. In the north was the province of Aristocracy—in the south that of the Productive Classes. These two provinces were separated by the mountains of Pride. Among the other cantons of Aristocracy, that of the Clergy was distinguishable, watered by the river of Luxury. Below, in the territory of the Productive Classes, the rivulet of Misery fell into the lake of Despair. The most interesting part was the explanation, which gave the history of the Inhabitants. Those of Aristocracy make frequent excursions into the territory of the Producers, and carry off their women and children into slavery. This print sets one thinking. A privileged class, in the nineteenth century, and in a country where thought is so active as in England, should be careful to show itself intelligent and above reproach—an irreproachable power never falls.

THE MORAL DISCIPLINE OF THE NAVY.

Sir,—At a period when education is making such rapid strides in every class of society, and the eyes of the compassionate are turned to the abolition of Corporal Punishment, it appears strange that more attention is not paid to the moral discipline of the Navy. I speak in allusion to a system which has long existed (to the disgrace of our profession), though contrary to the articles of war and the Naval regulations.

Is it possible, I would ask, to establish morality in a ship while the most abandoned females that infest our sea-port towns are permitted to come on board? The Captain's duty requires him "to discountenance and suppress all profane cursing and swearing, all drunkenness, gaming, rioting, and quarrelling; all dissolute and disorderly practices, and, in general, everything which can tend to the disparagement of religion, or to the promotion of vice and immorality." Custom has caused this article to be overlooked. The theory is indeed good, but the practice is wholly neglected. Is it necessary (or will it bear one moment's sober reflection) that the protectors of our island should thus sanction and encourage vice and immorality? There is assuredly no reason but custom that can be urged in defence of a system which corrupts the minds of the "flower of our service;" and it should be remembered that the number of boys which are entered by a late regulation must look somewhere for example. Have the numerous heads of our profession been all blind to this, or, seeing it, have they believed it to be without remedy? If it is necessary that sailors should be wicked, and that they should indulge every evil passion, why do not those who have the power rescind the second article of war, and the 30th article on discipline in the Captains' instructions? Or, on the contrary, if we can serve our King and Country in this world, and look forward in hope to a better, the Admiralty should afford Captains the support they need, by enforcing those articles, and prohibiting bad women from our ships. Moral discipline can alone prevent corporal punishment. While the minds of our seamen remain degraded, fear of punishment alone can govern them; but when morality has taught them to do their duty from other motives, this punishment will be seldom necessary. There is no situation more responsible than a Captain's—no one where example can do more. I hope some may be induced to think seriously on this important subject; and as the general benefit of the service is my motive, if one should profit by it my end will be gained. H. R.

EMBARKATION OF TROOPS.

Sir,—I was on board the Maitland transport at Cove this day, in which the 2d batt. of the Royals embark tomorrow for Quebec. The new principle, endeavouring to put a whole regiment on board a 650 ton ship has so far failed—two officers and 30 men are left behind, and the accommodation for the remainder is the most wretched I have witnessed for the last 25 years of my service in the Army. I do assure you (and let Mr. Alves, the transport agent here, deny it if he can) the officers, married and single, with any inclination to rough it for the voyage, are not one half so well accommodated as convicts going to New South Wales. They have not actually room in their cabins for one trunk; and fancy a gentleman, his wife, and two children in a hole of this sort, lighted by a scuttle about a foot square. The officers' mess, including ladies, is 28, and the cuddy accommodates only 16, well crowded; the rest may dine and breakfast how they can. Such a scene of promised misery I have seldom witnessed. Besides all this, there is not sufficient room in the hold for the baggage, although the officers were obliged to send all their heavy baggage, at their own expense, by a private vessel (the Edward) to Quebec, and what could not be packed below is left kicking about in the very limited accommodation for the soldier. Is not this disgusting? Is this the economy of Mr. Hume and the Admiralty? Shame! shame!

Who is this Mr. Alves here—a Civilian who does not know how the wind blows? Why does he rule the appointment of a Navy officer? Is this the way to remunerate Naval officers for long and tried services to their King and Country? Why is Sir Thomas Arbuthnot imposed upon by such a person? I know he is now acting against his own judgment in suffering this devoted regiment to be sent out of the country worse off than hounds in a kennel. What gentleman will remain in the Service liable to be treated in this disgraceful way? I remember the time when England valued her soldiers, and she may require their services ere long, when the English people will again know their worth, and not treat them like dogs.

COAST GUARD SERVICE.

Sir,—As an old correspondent I would venture a few observations relative to a subject which has of late occupied, through the medium of your columns, somewhat of public attention, I mean "The Coast Guard."

You will probably think, pendente lite, Cincinnatus v. Numa, that a third person entering the lists may be uncalled for by your readers: I shall not detain them long. I freely admit, in general, so far as I have seen of Numa's letters, that he knows the Coast Guard Service well, and exposes the weak points in a masterly, although sometimes not in the most courteous, manner, whilst the first specimen of Cincinnatus, as a champion, evinces a sourness and inaccuracy which bespeaks a heart as "adamantine" as the lips of those "guns" whose "death-shade" has not eclipsed him, very fortunately for that minority of Civilian Chief Officers who were Midshipmen. Leaving the field open to the combatants, I shall rest satisfied by stating my opinion respecting the government of this Service, in which, although not a fixture, I have had some experience. I confine myself to Ireland. I do not see how it is possible to make it a separate Service from the Customs: it must be connected, from its very nature, with that Board. I therefore propose that certain queries be circulated to Inspecting Commanders for their replies, so that the merits of this case may be known, and I feel assured that Naval officers will come to the conclusion that this Service ought to be Civil. If Naval officers hold appointments in it, they ought to continue on the half-pay list, but not to wear Naval uniform, or take Naval rank in the Coast Guard. The present Inspector General, who is a most valuable public servant, a most considerate and courteous gentleman, who has conducted himself with a degree of moderation towards Naval officers, once his superiors, unparalleled, could command the voices of nine-tenths of the Inspecting Commanders in favour of his retaining his present office.

5th July. Prefectus.

MILITARY PLURALITIES.

Sir,—Referring to the Parliamentary proceedings respecting Mr. Bannerman's motion on "Army and Navy Promotions," and to which the attention of your readers has frequently been called of late, Lord Howick is made to say that "there were 360 Generals, and that the Military appointments of all sorts, at home and abroad, were as ten to one, those appointments not exceeding thirty or forty." His Lordship then states, that "in some estimates which he had lately submitted to the House, he had to propose 106,000*l.* (!) as an additional allowance to 134 officers as Colonels of regiments!" Now, Sir, it is to be inferred from the first paragraph that more than 300 of those Generals are unattached, and it is to this point that I would call the attention of the public, and expose a system of "Military Pluralities." There are, according to Lord Howick's acknowledgment, 134 officers (General Officers of course) holding regiments, and it is well known that as such they are not unattached, but receive not only the full-pay of Colonel, but emoluments in off-reckonings, &c., averaging altogether from 1,000*l.* to 1,200*l.* per annum each. Yet Lord Howick, in the plenitude of his liberality, would increase their pay 800*l.* per annum, while General Officers unattached must be content with 400*l.* But, Sir, the hardship to be complained of consists in this fact, that many of those fortunate Generals (Colonels of regiments) hold also very lucrative appointments as Governors or Lieutenant-Governors of Colonies, or high Staff appointments. Lord Hill derives considerable emolument from three sources; he is the General Commanding-in-Chief, Governor of Plymouth, and Colonel of the Horse Guards Blue! The Adjutant-General has a regiment! The Quartermaster-General and Deputy Quartermaster-General have each regiments. The Military Secretary, Lord Fitzroy Somerset, has a regiment. The Commander of the Forces in Ireland has a regiment. The Governor and Lieut.-Governor of Chelsea College have each regiments. In fact, there is scarcely a General Officer in command of a Colony, Government, Presidency, or holding a high Staff appointment, who has not also a regiment, to the prejudice of many a deserving officer who has not the good fortune to possess Ministerial or Horse Guards' interest. If the appointments were more generally and more impartially divided, great expense would be saved to the country in the item "Pay to General Officers Unattached," and brevets would consequently be more frequent. It is suggested that a better estimate may be made of the number and value of appointments held by General Officers, if, in the return moved for by Mr. Bannerman, the following additional facts had been required, viz. "The names of all General Officers not now attached, including those having regiments; the number and the emolument of the appointments held by each respectively, whether regiments or otherwise; and the number of years and nature of their respective services at home and abroad, distinguishing those who have commanded regiments, or been employed on the Staff." Apologising for the length of this letter, and trusting to your candour for its Insertion, I am, &c.

ON THE CIVIL APPOINTMENTS IN THE NAVY.

Sir,—I have no file of your Paper to refer to here, and presume your correspondent who signs A. must be similarly inconvenienced, as he has quoted sentiments of mine which I am not aware of having indulged in, much less uttered; and I have to congratulate myself on declining the personal controversy to which I was invited by such a writer. I believe he stated himself to be a Naval officer of humble pretensions, and he assumes me to be—first, a supporter of ultra-Tory principles; then, employed by some Member of the Government (assuming the present, I suppose) to correct the mis-statement quoted in your Gazette, and next, concludes that I must be some one of Mr. Hume's cold calculating clique; thus giving me credit for the combined qualifications of Tory, Whig, and Radical! Much more of unseemly vituperation, quite unworthy of answering, there is (indeed little else) in A.'s long letter, a kind of querulousness, which betrays anything but an amiable disposition; and in going along he has the presumption to lecture you as to the admission of arguments which are not palatable to him in your Gazette, (no great proof of the soundness of his own, if they will not bear discussion!) as if the Editor of a newspaper, by withholding the name of a correspondent from the public, is supposed to adopt (and render his own) any opinions such person may put forth in controversy. But all this is too ridiculous to comment on, and very far from the subject-matter in dispute, which is this: that the report, which was copied from some Plymouth paper I believe, stating that a regulation had been established regarding the Civil situations of the Navy, was without foundation; and when I stated that my motive in informing you thereof was to prevent your readers falling into the error of believing it, by seeing it not only inserted, but commented on, in the Naval and Military Gazette, which the profession generally believe to be an authority for contradicting false, or confirming true, statements, it was surely reason enough for my communication, without conjuring up the sinister motives which your correspondent has thought proper to attribute to me.

I repeat that it would be impolitic and unwise, and in many cases even injurious to Naval officers, to change the Civil situations now filled by them, until the occupants are worn out. I speak more particularly as regards the public service; for I will never agree with your correspondent that the Superintendents of Dock-yards, &c., which he has instanced, are sinecure offices; on the contrary, they are situations of great responsibility and trust, where incompetency or irregularity, or a lack of judgment or discretion may not only entail the expense of millions, but possibly retard the equipment of a Fleet, and involve consequences which your professional readers will readily understand, but your correspondent A. cannot. If sinecure situations are required in order to enable those officers who, not having the means to maintain their families and educate their offspring, make improvident marriages, let such be provided if the legislature see fit; but that the responsible offices quoted are to be appropriated to this purpose is most unreasonable, and the everlasting confusion which it would create would soon render a recurrence to the old plan necessary. Your correspondent has named some officers who fill, and have long filled those situations with ability. I cordially admit it, and no one is more ready to do justice to their merits both in active and Civil employment than myself; but why has he invidiously excluded others? Is not Sir Frederick Maitland as efficient a Superintendent (I will say quite as efficient) as either of the officers named?—and his name was not altogether unknown during the war, as your correspondent must have been aware of, if his reminiscences reach so far back. But I hate long letters, so shall just conclude by assuring you that, whatever may be said, there is no truth in the report in question; and, waiving the interrogatories of your correspondent, I will state my opinion to be, that the Civil offices he has named, and many others should be in the first place bestowed upon those who were best qualified to fill them, without regard to parliament[illegible] interest, always [illegible] those officers who had merited support their [illegible] that, after the appointment [illegible] made, and [illegible] of the department [illegible] tinued to [illegible] conducted, frequent [illegible] should be deprecated, and other means devised to educate the children of these officers whose improvidence precluded them from doing so, or whose aspirations soared above their condition in life, lest inconvenience or detriment should occur to the public service in prosecution of such a secondary object.

[It is but fair to A. that, as regards ourselves, we acknowledge and accept his apology.—Ed.]

THE COCKADE.

Sir,—The remarks of Miles in your last number are well worthy of consideration, for it does appear most absurd to see footmen wearing the same cockade as our Naval and Military Officers.

To remedy this evil I would suggest that our officers should wear a cockade similar to our colours, and thus, that it should be either that of the proud old union, or simply the St. George's Cross in the white field*. This would look very handsome, and would, moreover, essentially benefit our silk trade. The Naval and Military officers of other nations wear cockades of different colours, in order to mark the distinction of the country to which they belong; all, I believe, excepting those of America, do this, and these wear black cockades exactly like our own, whereby they have constantly been mistaken for British officers, more particularly as their uniform so closely resembles ours. Thus affording an additional reason for altering the cockade of our Army and Navy, and which I hope to see done at no distant period.

July 4. Cato.

* [We question whether this would be any improvement; our Correspondent seems not to be aware that Foreign Ambassadors' servants * wear party-coloured cockades.—Ed.

CHARGES FOR PASSAGES TO THE MEDITERRANEAN.

Sir,—Your pages being at all times open to the abuses which occasionally exist in the Service, I wish to lay before you the following one, which I imagine publicity in your widely circulated Journal may in some measure check, if not effectually stop. The object I allude to is the system which prevails in some of the steam-vessels carrying the mails to the Mediterranean, wherein Supernumeraries (of a rank entitling them to mess in the Midshipmen's berth) appointed to ships on that station are charged the enormous sum of 4*l.* and 5*l.* for a passage to Malta, which seldom exceeds 15 days, and 2*l.* to Cadiz and Gibraltar, a passage of six, not forgetting that there are extras in the shape of wine, ale, &c.

Now, Mr. Editor, the case stands thus—the members forming these messes seldom pay more, individually, than 20*s.* per month. Supernumeraries on board flag and guard ships, keeping a superior mess, and, in fact, in every vessel in H. M.'s service, with the foregoing exceptions, are never charged more than 1*s.* or 1*s.* 6*d.* a-day; but in these vessels, certainly not famed for comfort and various other et ceteras which might be added, the sum of 6*s.* on a daily average is demanded with the most perfect nonchalance. This measure has caused general dissatisfaction among those unfortunates whom chance has thrown in the way of the sharks: instances have occu[rred] a direct refusal of payment, besides various unpleas[antness] arising. That it is not sanctioned generally [by] any interference of the heads of [the] Naval de[partment] can confidently assert. The remedy should prop[erly] be, either to adhere to the custom generally obser[ved] in Mids' messes, or provide a suitable berth-place for those junior officers ordered passages.—These sentiments I have heard expressed by several.

London, July 14th. Supernumerary.

REMUNERATION TO MILITARY AND NAVAL OFFICERS.

Sir,—The note in your last number has shown me that the Military officer receives no additional allowance for his brevet rank when on half-pay, and which the clear and convincing letter of Fabius confirms. Of what use then, I would ask, is this nominal title to an old and meritorious officer, who has retired from the active duties of his profession after 40 or 50 years' services? It only adds to his expenses by having to keep up a station in society which he had far better be without.

Let us hope the Lord Hewick will generously set about correcting this small anomaly before the next session, and that his Lordship and his liberal-minded colleagues will advise the bestowing an adequate half-pay on each and every rank in the Army, so that our gallant Military defenders may not, after sacrificing the best of their lives in their country's cause, find themselves in their old age on barely sufficient to subsist upon, whilst the Civil servants of the Crown are in the enjoyment of treble the amount of the salaries of the officers of our Army and Navy, though with [not] half the length of service, nor with one-tenth their value. Your impartial pages, Sir, have opened the eyes of the country to these important truths, and through your continued zeal in so good a cause, our Naval as well as our Military, defenders confidently reckon on at length obtaining justice.

July 11th, 1836. A Searcher after Truth.

[* Our Correspondent is all wrong when he treats of Military matters. There is no such case as a retired Military Officer of 40 or 50 years' service getting Brevet Rank, which can add to his expences.—Ed.]

WRONGS OF THE NAVY.

Sir,—A constant reader of your impartial Gazette claims through your columns, to give publicity to some of the wrongs of the service he belongs to. The Senior Officers of the rank of Captains, Commanders, and Lieutenants of the Navy, who had served the whole of the war, were most shamefully used when peace came in 1815. The Senior Captains are now upwards of thirty-four years' standing, without promotion, whilst the Army had promotion about six years back, and many Officers, from seven to ten years junior to those in the Navy, have not only been promoted, but allowed to retire upon 400*l.* per annum.

The Navy was said to have done its duty last war, and, more particularly those officers in command, by sweeping the seas of the enemy, protecting the trade of the country and coasts, and giving security to our fire-sides, but we are now despised and neglected by those who ought never to have lost sight of a service which used to have a share of the patronage; and moreover we had been promised since the Peace that we should be placed on the same footing with the Army. But no, we are considered not worthy now even of fair play with the other service, who can never have done anything without us to entitle them that promotion unjustly withheld from us.

It is notoriously known, had promotion been granted the Navy with the other service, as to dates, the country would have been gainers by deaths alone of upwards of 50,000*l.* per annum, and the stimulus of promotion, however slow, would have kept the service alive.

The soldier, [as] soon as promoted to a Field Officer, independently of having more half-pay than the sailor, is allowed to dispose of his commission for the sake of his family; but the Navy Officer has no such boon; he not only is degraded in the eye of a discerning public, but is worse paid than the officer of a corresponding rank. Why it is so I am sure our profession would like to know, and why we are not allowed, after worn out, to get the same value for our commissions? We are both supposed to move in the same sphere of life, and aught is justice to have the same emoluments.

Surely our Army brethren in the House of Commons aught to support those of our profession that are not tongue-tied, that we might go hand-in-hand with them, if it true that we are a United Service, but this, I will never be the case until we are put upon same footing. The time may not be far distant when they will have to look to the wooden walls of Old England for that protection which it will never be in the power of the Army to give so effectually.

It is never too late to retract:—when it is very generally known that injustice has been done to a set of men who have spent all their lives in the cause and defence of their country, if they be not promoted, they may either be allowed to dispose of their hard-earned commissions, or allow [them] retirement which has been de[nied] the Army [on] placing them upon the same footing [as] [and] giv[ing] satisfaction to the Junior b[ranch] [to] profes[sion] those who have stood all cl[imates], [and] where, so creditable to themse[lves] to be at last rewarded for their past services by an enlightened Government, who came in to office to do justice; and should advise His most gracious Majesty, however late, to protect that arm of the service which ought to be considered England's staff as long as she is sole mistress of the sea.

Upwards of 200 Majors and Lieut.-Generals have been promoted to that rank since a Naval promotion. I have to apologise for trespassing on your time.

An Old Worn-out Naval Officer.

London, 15th June.

[It has cost us some pains to make this letter intelligible so extraordinary is the writer's mode of constructing sentences. We have often expressed the wish, and now repeat it, that our correspondents in advocating the claims of the Navy, would abstain from making comparisons which are invidious—or taken as such by the sister service. No one can assert that soldiers possess greater emoluments or advantages than they deserve; on the contrary, all things considered, our army is the hardest worked and the worst paid in the world, to say nothing of comparing the service with any civil profession. The Navy has just claims of its own on its country's gratitude and consideration, without making those comparisons, which can only tend to create a bad and jealous feeling between two services, where unanimity is so desirable on every account.—Ed.]

THE ROYAL STANDARD OF ENGLAND—ITS IMPROPER DISPLAY ON VARIOUS OCCASIONS.

Sir,—Having seen it often stated that on the arrival of some Foreign Prince or Princess at one of our sea-ports, or on their visiting our public establishments, the Royal Standard of England has been hoisted, although no part of the Royal Family of Great Britain was present, I would humbly submit that this is not right, and that, if the royal visiters belonging to other states be of that exalted rank to entitle them to the display of a flag to show their presence, it should be the flag of the nation to which they belong, and not the standard of England, which I think, moreover, should be confined to the presence of the King and Queen these realms only; thus increasing the respect that [is] to be attached to it wheresoever it is displayed, for, by so commonly and so generally used, it ceases to make [an] impression on those who regard it, which an emblem [of] such kind should ever convey.

The other branches of the Royal Family might have a flag appropriated expressly for them, such, for example, as the Union Flag, with a canton in the upper corner, charged with the three Lions of England; but the royal standard itself ought to be held sacred, and never displayed but when either the King or Queen was actually present on or near to the spot from whence it was seen to fly.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Sir,—The whole Naval Service must unite in expressions of satisfaction on seeing the patronage of the First Lord of the Admiralty so justly bestowed as it has again been within the week in the advancement of 3 old passed Midshipmen to the rank of Lieutenant. This, Sir, is as it should be, and affords a treat, I trust, that in all future promotions to this [rank], if not two, in every three commissions that are bestowed will be given to the senior passed Mates now serving in our ships of war and revenue cruisers whose characters are unimpeachable, until the whole of these 120, or thereabouts, who have passed more than five years, have received this reward, for which they have so long toiled in every clime. This will be real justice, and will assure to Lord Minto the heartfelt pleasure of receiving the lasting gratitude of those poor and unprotected, but deserving servants of the Crown.

11th July, 1836. Justus.

CAVALRY FOR INDIA.

Sir,—It is reported in the Military circles, that the following Cavalry regiments, who never saw a shot fired, nor have no honorary distinction on their colours, never having been out of England during the whole of the Peninsular War, are to be made Light regiments, like the 4th that are in India, and sent there to relieve the three regiments [that] have been there the longest, and those regiments, on their return home, are to be made heavy, in lieu, if wanted, [of] the 2d Dragoon Guards, 6th do. or Carabineers, 7th Dragoon Guards. It is but fair that the above regiments should have their turn of foreign service, in order to give them the chance of gaining laurels and honours like the other gallant regiments. I do hope that, for the sake of justice, the report may prove true. They are three fine corps, and will be of great use in India.

HUME AND THE ARMY AND NAVY, versus THE CIVIL SERVICE.

Sir,—Accustomed as I have been for many years to place implicit confidence in the Parliamentary assertions of Mr. Hume, it is with regret I am now compelled to differ with him; I mean with regard to what he stated respecting the pay of the Army and Navy while Mr. Bannerman's motion on the subject was lately before the House of Commons. What he could mean by saying they were the best paid Services under the Crown, I am totally at a loss to comprehend. His knowledge of the Civil Service must indeed be limited, or he would know that a master shipwright has 650*l.* per annum, with 20*l.* for stationery, and a house to live in free of rent, rates, and taxes. A storekeeper at 600*l.* a-year, with 35*l.* for stationery (see Navy Estimates 1836 and 37, pages 15 to 20), with similar advantages as to a house, [and] in those establishments, too, he will find clerks of 20 to 25 years' servitude, either in possession of, or gradually progressing, at an annual increase of 10*l.*, to the astonishing amount of 450*l.* per annum. Others of the same length of service at 800*l.* Let Mr. Hume compare these with the low pay given to Officers either in the Army or Navy, and then say whether they are "the best paid Services in the world." These gallant defenders of "our home, our native isle," have dearly earned their scanty pittance: exposed to vicissitudes of climate; to perils by land and perils by water; to the dangers of the cannon's mouth and the sabre's wound—whilst clerks in Civil situations, many of them, at least, have never endured greater hardships than being caught in a shower of rain without an umbrella, going to the office! But enough.

Yours, &c. Philologus.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, JULY 16, 1836.

As we stated last week, our remarks on the subject of relieving His Majesty's regiments in India after fifteen years' service abroad, have drawn the attention of the Military Authorities to the state of the Army, and the unequal system under which it serves in that country. We have some reason to think, that the regiments in Ceylon will ere long be put on the same footing with those on the continent of India with respect to service, which will be in future of the same length as in Bengal, Bombay, and Madras. By sending out the four company depots of the regiments now in Ceylon, a regiment could be sent on to India without reducing the force in that island:—the 90th, as the junior regiment, would probably be selected, for the 78th has been abroad since 1826, and the 58th and 91st since 1828. Unjust as it is to retain our regiments twenty years on the continent of India, it is still more unjust to relieve the regiments which are only a few miles removed from them, in the island of Ceylon, after a service of ten years only, while they enjoy the advantage of having four companies at home as a depot, in addition to the shorter service they undergo.

The manifest inequality of service, to which the twenty Indian regiments are doomed, is made still more striking by comparing their lot with that of the four regiments in Ceylon, for all that can be urged respecting distance and expense, against relieving our corps in India, equally applies to Ceylon; and it is quite unaccountable to us, that the system has not been altered long ago. Some years since it was the practice to send out the regiments from the Cape and Ceylon to India, and had this been followed up to the present time we should not have regiments in Hindostan (solely dependent on the regiments from New South Wales for reliefs) serving abroad since 1819, and without a hope of being relieved before 1839. The 20th has not yet reached England, which was relieved probably in May last by the 17th from New South Wales, and the 45th cannot be relieved by the 4th in time to arrive before the end of 1837; the 54th will hardly be relieved by the 21st, so as to reach England in 1838, and the 16th by the 50th in all 1839.

On what ground can the system be defended which thus leaves the 16th Regiment in India three years longer than the 20th, though the above four corps went abroad in 1810. Why are not regiments sent out direct to relieve these corps. Since the year 1822 the only regiments sent out direct are the 2nd, 31st, 26th, and 62nd Regiments. Compare with this scanty relief from India that from the Mediterranean in one year only. In the year 1834 not fewer than four regiments were relieved from the Mediterranean by the 47th, 59th, 68th, and 70th.

But we can put the system in a still more glaring aspect of injustice to our Indian Army. From the year 1825 to the year 1835 only nine regiments have been sent as reliefs to India, while, in the same period, fifteen regiments have proceeded to the Mediterranean. Lest the fact might be doubted that only nine regiments had been sent as reliefs for a force of twenty regiments, while fifteen had been sent as reliefs for a force of fifteen,—that is, not relieving in India at the rate of twenty years' service, and relieving in the Mediterranean at the rate of ten years, we shall give the corps. Sent to India as reliefs:—2nd, 31st, 57th, 39th, 26th, 63rd, 17th, 62nd, 9th. Sent to the Mediterranean as reliefs:—42nd, 88th, 10th, 11th, 2nd Battalion Rifles, 73rd, 53rd, 1st Battalion 60th, 5th, 92nd, 47th, 59th, 68th, 70th, 2nd Battalion 60th. Here are the regiments which went to India and the Mediterranean from 1825 to 1835, and which relieved an equal number from both quarters.

The gross injustice is too obvious to require further comment, and redress of such a grievance cannot in these days be long delayed. If the Head of the Army had more leisure, we are inclined to suppose, he would have compared the roster of relief, and long ere this have remedied the evil. There is but one simple plan to follow,—to relieve the regiment which has been fifteen years in India in preference to that which has only been ten years in any station except the West Indies. This we shall never cease to reiterate.

The following table of casualties by deaths and killed in action among the commissioned ranks of King's regiments, from May, 1822, to December, 1835, forcibly illustrates our comments on the severity of the service in India:—

Mr. Goulburn, who appears to have been misled by the statements of some interested parties, put a question to the Secretary of the Admiralty, in his place in Parliament, on Tuesday evening, upon the subject of the vessels lately chartered to convey Convicts to New South Wales. A very mistaken notion seems to prevail, and of which the Honourable Member evidently partakes, that the age of a ship is the only criterion of her excellence, and the arbitrary arrangement rendered necessary for classification by the Society at Lloyd's, goes far to strengthen this supposition. Persons, conversant with nautical affairs, are well aware however that the distinctions of A 1 or Æ 1 are only applied, by the rules of that Society, to vessels of a certain age, and that many exist in inferior classes superior in every respect to the first. For instance, a vessel having just undergone a thorough repair, and reduced to Æ, must be preferable to one in class A, just on the point of requiring such repair. But this is not all, many of the old vessels built during the war, while the shipping interest flourished, are of such great scantling, and so well put together, as in an infinitely superior in all respects to the frail constructions of the present day. Ever since the unfortunate loss of the Amphitrite the survey held upon ships, taken up by Government, has been most strict, the directions of the Admiralty are imperative on this head, and, in order that the survey may be effectually performed, a professional person from Deptford Dock-Yard is always associated with the officer, Lieutenant Bailey, the Resident Agent for Transports, whose duty it is to perform this survey, and his name is appended to the report. Under these circumstances it will be admitted that no blame can attach to the Admiralty, and of this the House of Commons appeared to be satisfied by the impression which the straight-forward statement of Mr. Wood produced; but it is necessary that the public mind should also be disabused on this point, and hence it is that we again recur to the subject, the more necessary as those journals, which are always ready to impute blame to public officers for mishaps caused by false reckonings or the force of the elements, and consequently beyond [illegible] control, presume an unaccountable sail[illegible] proceedings submitted [illegible]

An anonymous letter having appeared in the Times journal, purporting to be from the Commander of the Bengal Merchant in 1815, stating that she was not built of teak,—we extract the following description of the vessel as she stands on Lloyd's Register just published: "Bengal Merchant, Ship, doubled in 1830, coppered in 1836, 503 tons; built in Calcutta in 1812, teak; wales cased 1834; J. Somes, owners, London, destined to New South Wales; character for hull and stores A 1."

We shall make further inquiry, but we have reason to believe the statement of the Secretary of the Admiralty to be the correct one, at all events the ship has been minutely surveyed, and reported in all respects fit for the purpose required. We believe the frames of Calcutta built ships to be generally constructed of timber called Saul and Sissoo, the plankings invariably of teak. The Bombay ships are all teak.

An order has lately been promulgated by the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, directing that the annual clothing shall, for the future, be issued to the Royal Marines when due, and requiring officers in command abroad to demand the same whether the men are or are not in want of clothing. It has heretofore been the practice to allow each private thirty shillings for every suit of clothing not taken up by him, and the object of the present order is to avoid paying the men the money, as contracts are entered into by the Government for the supply of the estimated quantity of clothes, and a considerable loss frequently arises from a surplus of those stores remaining on hand, and becoming unserviceable. We cannot but admit that the Admiralty are perfectly justifiable in striving to protect the country from the loss which it has frequently suffered by men serving abroad receiving money instead of the annual clothing; but we think they will agree with us, that care should be taken to insure to the men such articles only as are likely to prove universally useful, that the soldier may not, as far as it can be avoided, be forced to purchase one description of article while he has a gratuitous and surplus stock of another.

The suit of clothing annually allowed to the Royal Marines is as follows: namely, one red coatee, one white woollen waistcoat, one pair of cloth trousers, one linen shirt, one pair of half gaiters, and one stock; of these the waistcoat, half gaiters, and the stock are comparatively useless, for most men who have been in a warm climate, when their return to a cold one renders additional clothing necessary, prefer a flannel next the skin to the uniform pattern waistcoat; the general use of half-boots has superseded the shoes and half gaiters, and a stock with fresh binding will last a man two years. If, therefore, the Government would substitute for these articles something of equal price, for which all soldiers in all climates have occasion, they would mitigate the inconvenience that will be felt by forcing a man to the East or West Indies to receive the warm clothing, adapted only to the European climate; thus, were a man supplied with a pair of half-boots, a forage jacket, a cap, or a pair of white duck trousers, in lieu of the above-mentioned articles, he would be more disposed to submit cheerfully to the new arrangement, and Government might, by carefully selecting a just equivalent for the articles discontinued, protect themselves from loss while they materially benefited the soldier.

It is true, that men serving in warm climates frequently convert two white waistcoats into one light and convenient fatigue jacket, but we do not think that, on this account, we should continue to supply them generally; some officers, also, still prefer shoes and half-gaiters to half-boots; let us, therefore, meet the peculiar ideas of these individuals by keeping a proportion of white jackets and half-gaiters in charge of the different Quarter-Masters, to be by them issued as slops usually are to such men as require them, that those only who are in the habit of using may be required to pay for them; having thus attended to the convenience of the few, let us ascertain that every article of the annual clothing is of a description most likely to prove generally useful to all climates and under all the circumstances of our service.

Another Captain has, we find, returned to England from the flag-ship at Rio Janeiro. This being the second within a few months! When we look at the high characters of each of those gallant officers, we feel almost assured, indeed we have been thus informed, that these extraordinary resignations have arisen from some cause which calls for the close investigation of their Lordships at the Admiralty Board. We have seen it stated, it is true, that the last Captain of the Dublin has quitted her from ill health. If this be the sole reason, we much regret the misfortune which has removed from active employ another meritorious and zealous officer; but, when we bring to our recollection a variety of circumstances that have been stated to us, connected with the sudden resignation of the former universally esteemed flag Captain of Sir Graham Hamond, we must own that we are a little sceptical on this point, and regard those unusual changes of Captains to an Admiral in such quick succession, as an event which demands a rigid and impartial inquiry, for the service must suffer from the recurrence of measures of this kind. We will not say more on this subject at present, but most likely shall recur to it again.

An animated discussion took place on Tuesday night, on the House of Commons going into Committee upon the Lighthouse Bill. The clauses up to 40 were agreed to without observation; but upon the 41st being read, Mr. Warburton proposed the striking out of certain words, preparatory to an amendment to the effect that the Trinity Board be placed in the same situation as the Bill proposed to place the Commissioners of Northern Lights and the Ballast Board of Dublin, so as to bring the whole system of Lighthouses under the controul of the Admiralty. However desirable such an intention might be,—and it is a policy under which our maritime interests first rose to importance, for at the earlier periods of our history we find everything relating to shipping under the jurisdiction of the Lord High Admiral, generally one of the most distinguished men in the realm,—still there are at present very many impediments in the way of accomplishing this intention, not the least of which is, the charter and the privileges claimed by the Society of the Trinity, an institution founded by Sir Thomas Spert, Comptroller of the Navy, upwards of three centuries ago, and incorporated by royal charter. Like other corporations, however, the system of management has greatly deviated from the intentions of the founder, and also from the spirit, if not from the letter, of their charter, which requires the Master, Wardens, Assistants, and Elder Brethren, to be selected from Commanders of the Navy and Merchants' Service, and imposes duties and obligations respecting the capability of the Masters, &c., many of which have fallen into disuse; for with the exception of an examination as to the knowledge of the soundings, tides, shoals, and landmarks, in the English Channel, which Masters in the Royal Navy are required to pass, to qualify them for different rates, no investigation takes place under the authority of this Society into the character or capacity of persons in charge of Merchant vessels; and it not unfrequently happens that Masters of coasting, and, in many cases, of vessels in the foreign trade, are totally unacquainted even with the rudiments of navigation. The apathy of the Board in this respect, presuming they have the power to amend these matters, appears to us a much heavier charge than that of admitting a few of the distinguished statesmen of the day into their Corporation, probably with the intention of guarding its privileges, and adding to its respectability. And as regards their controul over Lighthouses, we are also of belief that there is much room for amendment. We have before expressed the opinion that the system of lighting the Coast should be made a national object, and borne at the national expense. To us it appears as unjust and impolitic to impose heavy duties for the maintenance of Lighthouses upon persons navigating the sea, as it would be to place toll-gates at the end of every street in this large metropolis, and call upon the pedestrians to pay for using their locomotive powers, and the enjoyment of light to conduct them safely from place to place. Surely the whole community are benefited by the industry of those whose business it is to fetch and carry; and, we conceive, the seaman who risks his life on the elements, and in foreign climes, to convey the raw material to our artizans or transport the manufactured goods to market, has even superior claims upon the nation; and having overcome those impediments, his approach to his native land should be made as safe as human means could accomplish, by the aid of lights or beacons upon a dangerous coast, without taxing his pocket to a great extent for that protection which other classes receive from the contributions of large societies, or the national resources. As the Lighthouse Bill has passed through Committee in the Lower House, and the report been brought up, we shall return to this subject at an early opportunity.

We have seen it stated by some of our contemporaries, that some deserters from the Royal Marines had been met with by the detachment of that gallant corps employed at St. Sabastian, in the British Auxiliary Legion, with the rank of Officers and Non-commissioned Officers. Although we can hardly bring ourselves to believe in the strict correctness of these statements, yet, a recent order issued by General Evans, relative to the local rank to be enjoyed by His Majesty's officers serving in conjunction with the Legion, would seem to confirm the truth of those representations. By this order, which is dated 18th of June, we find, that "thenceforward all officers in the service of the allies of Her Catholic Majesty shall be considered as holding two steps of rank above that which they actually hold in the service of the power to which they belong, and shall be obeyed and treated with the proper honours accordingly

The late Duke of Gordon.—On Tuesday se'nnight a meeting of the gentlemen of Badenoch was held at Kingussie, at which it was resolved, that in order to testify their respect for the memory of the late Duke of Gordon, a subscription should be entered into for the purpose of erecting a suitable monument to commemorate the character of so distinguished a nobleman, and so patriotic and chivalrous a Scotchman. It was also resolved that Kinrara should be chosen as the most eligible site for the monument, from the well-known partiality of his Grace to it as a place of residence, and also from the circumstance of the remains of the late Duchess of Gordon being laid there. A committee was appointed to forward so desirable an object, but it being understood that the county of Inverness was about to hold a general meeting for a similar purpose, it was resolved to delay final arrangements until the sentiments of the county generally could be ascertained.—Edinburgh Advertiser.

It will be recollected that about four years ago, the second sister of an Earl met her death by a melancholy accident. Her son, who is a Member of Parliament, and married to the eldest daughter of an Earl, is, we lament to say, at present in a state of mental derangement, almost beyond hope of recovery.

On Thursday morning, a hostile meeting took place in a field at the back of the Eyre Arms, St. John's Wood, Regent's Park, between a gentleman residing in Park-street, Grosvenor-square, and Lieut. S——, R.N. residing at Kensington. The cause of the meeting arose out of money transactions on the Stock Exchange. When the parties arrived on the ground, a reconciliation was attempted by the seconds, but refused by Lieut. S——. The ground was then measured twelve paces, and the parties fired, but missed each other. An amicable arrangement was again proposed, but again rejected by the officer. On the second fire, the contents of the gentleman's pistol took effect upon the thick part of Lieut. S——'s thigh. The Lieutenant fell, when the gentleman advanced, and requested to shake hands with him, which he immediately agreed to. Lieut. S—— was removed from the field to a carriage, and conveyed to his residence.

An order is issued, preventing all prisoners under sentence from receiving letters, or being seen by friends until 6 months after conviction.

GENERAL ORDER.

"Head-Quarters, San Sebastian, July 4, 1838.

"Five officers of the 4th and two of the 3rd Regt having represented to the Lieutenant-General that having served in the Legion one year, they consider that, the conditions of service, they have a right to retire with a gratuity after that period, if they should prefer it to two years, and that they are now desirous of availing themselves of that supposed right, the Lieutenant-General has at all times been desirous of doing justice to all as far as his judgment enabled him to do so, and even of consulting individual interests, by permitting, for the general good of the service, occasional resignations in cases of sickness, wounds, or other individual grounds. But no power whatever has been granted to him to decide on a question of this comprehensive nature, at least in point of principle, if not practically. There are two parties to every contract. The Government of her Catholic Majesty is the other party in this instance as a matter of simple justice, it is quite evident that Government should therefore be appealed to for the opinion on the subject; and this appeal the Lieutenant-General will not fail to make. In the mean time, if any one should be so ill advised as to assume to himself the right of interpreting those conditions, without producing a specific agreement in writing, or proof of a verbal agreement, that he was to serve only for one year instead of two, and shall attempt to act on that opinion, the Lieutenant-General will feel himself bound, from the responsibility of his present position in command, to treat the same as a military offence of the most serious nature.

"If he did not so act he would obviously himself be liable to be brought to a Court-Martial, and would deserve the utmost penalty of military law. Still, however, the Lieutenant-General has to repeat, that if any one can show the slightest proof of having engaged for one year instead of two, he will undertake, however great the responsibility may be, to allow to such officer the benefit of such agreement of limited service, without awaiting the orders of Government.

"But though truly desirous at all times to meet the wishes of every individual under his command, as far as his duty has permitted, the Lieutenant-General cannot help expressing his regret that any British soldier should, without any special ground of grievance, find himself so peculiarly situated as to think of quitting his brother soldiers while so immediately before, and almost in contact with, the enemy. And the Lieutenant-General feels this more strongly at the present moment as he has, at this instant even, received accounts from the Government of such a satisfactory nature as assure him there never was a period of the existence of the Legion in which its prospects were brighter."

[We do not understand how Lieut.-General Evans reconciles this General Order with the 1st & 4th Clauses of the "Conditions of Service," viz:—1st. "The time of service to be for either one or two years, as may be preferred by the individual engaging to enter Her Majesty's service." 4th. "At the conclusion of the service, each officer to receive a compensation equal to the amount of pay of one-half the time of their respective service, without prejudice to any further recompense which the Government may confer for special services, on the recommendation of the Commanding Officer of the Forces."—ED.]

The Phare de Bayonne of 9th inst. contains a letter to the Editor, from Mr. J. V. Harvey, British Consul at Bayonne, in which he says he is authorised to deny in the most formal manner that there is any truth in the reports circulated, that General Evans intends returning immediately to England; and that the General has no idea yet of quitting the service of the Queen of Spain. The same paper affirms that the Legion is paid up to June, that month's pay having been procured through bills, amounting to 300,000f. (12,000*l*.), drawn on M. Carbonel. The pay has farther been settled up to July. Don Carlos has lately ordered the execution of the venerable Dr. Manzanares, whose only crime was that of being the father of Manzanares, who was Minister at Cadiz in 1823, and who was subsequently shot by order of Ferdinand. The father Manzanares was 85 years of age. He was shot at Escoriaza, at the door of his own house.

The General Evans cutter arrived last week at Portsmouth from San Sebastian, which place she left on the 27th ult. She brought 46 men from the Legion, who have been sick, with 14 women and 6 children. Col. Considine, Maj. Keevil, Capts. Rogers, Cornwall, Irwin, Hon. Lieut. Curzon, Ens. Medlicott, and Mrs. Col. M'Cabe, were passengers. We find that several of the Officers who have resigned the Legion, are about to enter the Greek Service, in which they will have the advantage of a step of rank.

Notwithstanding various reports to the contrary, it is said in the highest circles, that the amiable manners and attentions of an illustrious and very accomplished foreign Prince, now in this country, have made a deep impression upon the mind and affections of the "Rose of the fair State," and that time is likely to consummate the desired

Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Monday, 11th July.—The South Durham Railway ill was thrown out by a majority of 32.—The Lord Chancellor moved the second reading of the Imprisonment for Debt Bill. The Duke of Wellington protested against so important a measure being taken to consideration at that late period of the session. Lord Abinger thought it impossible that the Bill could receive adequate consideration at that advanced period of the session. Lord Melbourne saw no reason why the Bill should not be proceeded with. On a division the numbers were—for the amendment, 46; for the original motion, 22; majority, 24. The Bill was consequently lost.—Lord Melbourne then moved the second reading of the Registration of Births, Marriages, and Deaths Bills. After some observations from the Archbishop of Canterbury and Lord Ellenborough, the motion agreed to.—The Blackheath Small Debts Bill was read a third time and passed.

Tuesday, 12th July.—The House was occupied with the consideration of the English Tithe Commutation Bill in committee. A few verbal amendments were made, and the Bill, as amended, was ordered to be printed.—The Murderers' Execution Bill went through committee.—The Holyhead Road Bill was also committed without amendment.

Wednesday, 13th July.—The House was occupied for a considerable time in hearing further evidence on the Stafford Disfranchisement Bill. On Saturday evidence will be heard on the part of the petitioners against the Bill.

Thursday, 14th July.—On the order of the day being read for receiving the report on the Prisoners' Counsel Bill, Lord Wharncliffe opposed the measure, as being not only unnecessary, but likely to be injurious to justice. The Noble Lord then moved that the Bill be received that day three months. Lord Lyndhurst, Lord Plunket, Lord Abinger, the Duke of Richmond, and the Lord Chancellor, highly approved of the principle of the Bill. The Earl of Devon opposed the measure; after which Lord Wharncliffe consented to withdraw his amendment, and the report was brought up.

Friday, 15th July.—The Judges' Chambers Bill was read a third time and passed.—Lord Radnor presented a petition from the subscribers to the South Durham Railway, complaining that after they had gone to great expense the Bill had been thrown out.—The order of the day for taking into consideration the reasons of the House of Commons to the amendments made by their Lordships to the Municipal Act Amendment Bill, was read. The Lord Chancellor moved that the Lords do agree to the first amendments. Lyndhurst complained of the difficulty of discussing them until they had been printed. After a desultory conversation, Viscount Melbourne suggested that it would be better to have these amendments printed at once, which was agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, 11th July.—Mr. Walter moved that an address be presented to the Crown, in order to ascertain by whom, and by whose authority, certain placards on the subject of emigration had been distributed among the postmasters of the United Kingdom. Sir G. Grey opposed the motion, because the information required was already before the House, and after a short discussion the motion was negatived.—The House then went into committee on the County Police Bill, and after considerable discussion the several clauses were agreed to.—The House then went into committee on the Stamp Duties Bill, after some opposition from Mr. Wakley, who wished to have the subject postponed, on account of the absence of Mr. Hume and Mr. Roebuck. The discussion on the several provisions of the Bill occupied the remainder of the sitting.

Tuesday, 12th July.—Mr. Moreton withdrew the Bill relative to railroads, on account of the late period of the session, and the great opposition which was likely to be offered to the Bill.—Mr. Goulburn inquired if it were true that two vessels had recently been engaged in the conveyance of convicts, one of which was thirty-two years old, the other thirty-four years old. Mr. C. Wood said it was true that a teak-ship built in 1812 had been employed, but a report had been made to the Admiralty that she was in every respect seaworthy, and no pains had been or would be spared to make sure that every vessel so employed was calculated in every respect for the service.—Mr. Hutt inquired of the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Post-office had it in contemplation to make any alteration in its rules, by which letters within certain limits would be delivered free from any extra charge? The Chancellor of the Exchequer believed there existed a disposition to extend the limits at present observed.—The House went into committee on the Lighthouses Bill. On the 41st clause being read Mr. Baburton moved an amendment, that the Board of Dublin, the Commissioners of Northern Lighthouses, and the Trinity-house, should be placed under the control of a central board, that Board being under the superintendence of the Admiralty. A discussion ensued, after which the committee divided—for the clause, 68; for the amendment, 7. The remaining clauses of the Bill were then agreed to. Mr. Hume moved the addition of a clause to put an end to the granting of further pensions by the Trinity-house, which, on a division, was lost.—Mr. Hawes inquired whether it was intended to make any alteration in the timber duties, or in the mode of measurement? Mr. P. Thomson said, there was no intention to propose any alteration in either of them.—Mr. Maxwell, on Lord John Russell moving that the order of the day be read for the House to resolve itself into a committee on the Established Church Bill, moved the second reading of the Hand-loom Weavers Bill. The amendment was lost by a majority of 14.—Mr. Ward moved, "That it be an instruction to the committee on the Established Church Bill, that they have power to receive a clause that no clergyman not fully conversant with the Welsh language be appointed to any benefice in the Principality." Lord J. Russell opposed the motion. After a short discussion the House divided—for the instruction, 741 against it, 64.—On the motion of Mr. Divett it was ordered that no new writ be issued for the borough of Stafford till that day fortnight.

Wednesday, 13th July.—Capt. Alsager brought up the report on the Metropolitan Cemetery Bill, but Mr. Potter and others having opposed its reception, on account of several of its clauses which were considered inexciting to the Dissenters, the Bill was recommitted, the Hon. and Gallant Member having stated that he was ready to expunge the exceptionable clauses.—Sir C. Burrell complained to the House that he had been assessed by Mr. Cundy, the projector of one of the lines of railway to Brighton, with having voted in favour of Stephenson's line from corrupt motives; and on the motion of Mr. C. Wynn, Mr. Cundy was ordered to appear at the Bar of the House on Monday.

Thursday, 14th July.—The Greenwich Pier and the Personal Tithes Bill, the Deeds Registration and the Irish Constabulary Act Amendment Bill, were read a third time and passed.—Mr. Hume called the attention of the House to a petition from Calcutta, on the present state of India, and moved certain resolutions. A discussion ensued, in which Sir J. C. Hobhouse, Messrs. Hogg, J. Mackenzie, P. Thomson, Buckingham, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, took part, after which the resolutions were negatived without a division.—The Committee on the Stamp Duties Bill was postponed till Monday.—The Report on the Established Church Bill having been brought up, a long debate ensued. Mr. Hogg, Mr. Poulter, and Mr. C. Buller opposed the Bill, and Mr. Hume moved that the report be read that day six months. Sir R. Peel was convinced that His Majesty's Government, having duly considered what were the best means of securing a measure of practical Church Reform, had actually brought forward a measure of great practical reform. If the House rejected the Bill, they would reject a great benefit. He thought no delay ought to be opposed to its progress. For the amendment, 48; for the original motion, 90.—Mr. A. Trevor then moved that the income of the Bishop of Durham should not be less than 10,000*l.* per annum, but he found no supporters.—Mr. C. Buller moved a clause, providing that the salaries of all bishops shall be equalized, except that of the Bishop of London; and that until this provision shall have been made for the adequate payment of the parochial clergy, the Archbishop of Canterbury should receive 8,000*l.*, the Archbishop of York, 7,000*l.*, the Bishop of London, 4,500*l.*, and the other bishops, 4,000*l.* per annum. Lord John Russell opposed the motion, and on a division the clause was lost by a majority of 38. The report was then agreed to.

Friday, 15th July.—Mr. Warburton brought forward the petition of the claimants on the Troutbeck estate, and moved, "That a select committee be appointed to consider the claims of Catherine Robson and Isabella Ainsley, the claimants." After some observations the debate was adjourned till Tuesday next.—Sir A. L. Hay presented the report on the petition, for leave to bring in a Bill for forming a harbour at Trinity, when, after some opposition, leave was given to bring in the Bill.—Mr. Clay brought forward his motion, that the petition which he had already presented from persons having suffered loss by seizure of property by the Danes in 1807, should be referred to a select committee. The Chancellor of the Exchequer opposed the motion. After a lengthened discussion, the House divided—for the amendment, 51; against it, 59; majority, 8.—The Church of Ireland Bill, and the Civil Bill Courts (Ireland) Bill, were read a third time and passed.

Foreign Intelligence.

France.—The assassin Alibaud was executed at five o'clock on Monday morning. There is little doubt that the capital punishment would have been remitted but for the obstinacy of the unhappy man himself, who refused every effort of his counsel to induce him to ask for his life.—The Parliamentary session was closed on Tuesday, and the expected prorogations of some of the Chambers are announced in the order of the day. Peerages are not to be [illegible] until after the July fêtes, at which a review of the National Guard will take place. The Chamber met on Tuesday, that day being unusual. A number of reports were presented. The King of the French had again escaped from assassination.—Louis Philippe's projected journey to Eu is countermanded. He will go to Fontainebleau with the King and Queen of the Belgians.

Russia.—At St. Petersburgh there are upwards of 3,000 workmen employed in building a cathedral to be dedicated to St. Isaac. The outside of the cupola is to be ornamented by 24 columns of granite, each of one piece, 42 feet high, 15 of which have already arrived. The porticos will be 120 feet in length, and will be supported by 48 columns of granite, with bases and capitals of bronze. When finished, it will be the most magnificent edifice erected in modern times.

Spain.—A telegraphic dispatch from Bayonne announces that some deplorable troubles took place on the 11th, at Figueras. The approach of the bands of Bruch and Torilla, the assassination of the Barcelona courier near Gironne, served as a pretext for a revolt, which the troops of the line could not put down. False reports of treason raised the populace to the highest pitch of fury. Brigadier Tenax, governor of Figueras, fell a victim to their rage—he was assassinated, and his body dragged through the streets of the town. After this horrid event order, however, was restored; disturbances had ceased on the departure of the courier.

The Gazette publishes a letter from Saragossa, in which it is stated, that on the 20th of June, Cabrera appeared before the town of Alcaniz, and summoned it to surrender. The garrison, composed of National Guards, killed the two officers who bore Cebrera's answer, upon which the General stormed and took the town, upon which the whole garrison to the sword.

Turkey.—An imperial mandate has been issued, displacing Akif Effendi, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, in consequence of his ill-treatment of Mr. Church. Ahmed Hoolcoosi. The result has given great satisfaction to the English residents of the Turkish capital, who is interested favourably for the firmness and vigour displayed by the Ambassador upon that occasion. Mr. Ellis has succeeded in obtaining from the Shah, British subjects, the same advantageous commercial leges enjoyed by Russian merchants.—According to letters from Tunis, in the Courrier Français, the French general there was determined to oppose any attempt of the part of Tahir Pacha, who commands the Turkish fleet, to take possession of that town.

Hungary.—The town of Grosswardain was visited on the 10th ult. by a dreadful calamity. A fire broke out in the house of a clergyman of the Greek church, and a high wind blowing at the time, it spread rapidly and continued, with a short interval, for three days, during which it is estimated that 1,500 houses, many churches, and many public edifices were destroyed. ## Literary Notices.

istory of England, from the Peace of Utrecht to the Peace of Aix-la-Chapelle. By Lord Mahon. Vol. I. John Murray.

WE have just reason to be proud that many members of he Aristocracy of Great Britain are devoting themselves o literary pursuits; and it is more especially gratifying t the present moment, when, under the mask of the march of intellect," it is stupidly argued in some quar-ers that the other classes are not only equal, but rising superior to the nobility in mental attainments. The splendid talents of the Noble Lord whose work is before s, and the recent literary productions of other branches f the Aristocracy (and we consider the question with-ut regard to party), are, however, convincing proofs at the Aristocracy are well qualified to maintain their osition.

In looking over the pages of Lord Mahon's volume, we arcely know whether most to praise the classic and ele-nt taste of the Noble Lord, his mental reflections, or e industry and research with which he has sought out aterials for his work. As a specimen of his Lordship's yle and general views, we will give his exposition of e past and present principles of Whigs and Tories:—

"At that period the two great contending parties were stinguished, as at present, by the nicknames of Whig and ry. But it is very remarkable that, in Queen Anne's gn, the relative meaning of these terms was not only fferent, but opposite to that which they bore at the acces-n of William the Fourth. In theory, indeed, the main nciple of each continues the same. The leading prin-le of the Tories is the dread of popular licentiousness; leading principle of the Whigs is the dread of royal en-achment. It may thence, perhaps, be deduced, that od and wise men would attach themselves either to the hig or to the Tory party, according as there seemed to be greater danger at that particular period from despotism from democracy. The same person who would have en a Whig in 1712 would have been a Tory in 1830. r on examination it will be found that, in nearly all par-ulars, a modern Tory resembles a Whig of Queen Anne's gn, and a Tory of Queen Anne's reign a modern Whig. st, as to the Tories. The Tories of Queen Anne's reign sued a most unceasing opposition to a just and glorious r against France. They treated the great General of the e as their peculiar adversary. To our recent enemies, the each, their policy was supple and crouching. They had indifference, or even an aversion, to our old allies, the utch. They had a political leaning towards the Roman tholics at home. They were supported by the Roman tholics in their elections. They had a love of triennial liaments in preference to septennial. They attempted to olish the protecting duties and restrictions of commerce. ey wished to favour our trade with France at the expense our trade with Portugal. They were supported by a fac-on, whose war-cry was 'Repeal of the Union' in a sister ngdom. To serve a temporary purpose in the House of rds, they had recourse (for the first time in our annals) to a large and overwhelming creation of peers. Like the Whigs in May 1831, they chose the moment of the highest popular passion and excitement to dissolve the House of Commons, hoping to avail themselves of a short-lived cry for the purpose of permanent delusion. The Whigs of Queen Anne's time, on the other hand, supported that splendid war which led to such victories as Remillies and Blenheim. They had for a leader the great man who gained those victories. They advocated the old principles of trade. They prolonged the duration of parliaments. They took their stand on the principles of the Revolution of 1688. They raised the cry of 'No Popery.' They loudly inveighed against the subserviency to France—the desertion of our old allies—the outrage wrought upon the peers—the deceptions practised upon the sovereign—and the other measures of the Tory administration. Such were the Tories, and such were the Whigs of Queen Anne. Can it be doubted that, at the accession of William the Fourth, Harley and St. John would have been called Whigs—Somers and Stanhope, Tories? Would not the October Club have loudly cheered the measures of Lord Grey, and the Kit-Cat find itself renewed in the Carlton? It is, therefore, a certain and a very curious fact, that the representative at this time of any great Whig family, who probably imagines that he is treading in the footsteps of his forefathers, in reality, while adhering to their party name, is acting against almost every one of their party principles!"

Our limits at present do not allow of further extract; but the work must be read to be fully appreciated. His Lordship has had access to the Stuart papers, Lord Hardwicke's papers, and Mr. Secretary Stanhope's Memorials; and from these stores he has collected many most important historical facts.

A Narrative of the Operations for the Recovery of the Public Stores and Treasures sunk in H.M.S. Thetis, with a concise Account of the Loss of that Ship. By Capt. Thomas Dickinson, R.N. Longman and Co.

WE some time since alluded to Capt. Dickinson's book as forthcoming, and anticipated much pleasure from the perusal of it. It is now published, our expectations are realised, and we enter on our promised review of it.

The loss of the Thetis, with a very large amount of treasure on board, at the Island of Cape Frio, is doubtless fresh in the memory of many of our readers, as one of the most extraordinary, in all the circumstances attending it, that ever occurred; and this remark will equally apply to the undertaking of Captain Dickinson, for retrieving that loss to the utmost extent possible; and we do not hesitate to say, that, whether as to enterprising spirit, ingenuity, personal resources, a combination of nautical and mechanical tact, and talent, and perseverance, in putting them in practice, to which may be added, danger and privation, it never has been surpassed; and in this opinion we feel assured that every one who reads the work will join us.

The author has very appropriately introduced his Narrative by a short but impressive account of the shipwreck, in reading which it is impossible not to feel excited by the terrific circumstance of a frigate under full sail, running at the rate of ten miles an hour, on a dark night, against perpendicular cliffs higher than her mast-heads, and, as it were, in an instant being, reduced to a helpless and unmanageable hulk, and the distressing consequences. He has avoided giving an opinion on the disaster, confining his remarks merely to the uncertainty and influence of the currents in the vicinity of Cape Frio, which information may be of great benefit to persons visiting those parts.

Cape Frio is about 70 miles from Rio de Janerio, at the latter place Captain Dickinson was lying in the Lightning when the account of the catastrophe arrived, from the particulars of which the universal impression was, that the frigate with everything on board of her was totally lost, and that any attempt at the recovery of it must be fruitless; but adopting the principle nil desperandum, and with an energetic zeal becoming the most shining days of the British Navy, the author at once determined, however disheartening the prospect, to dash at it; and his description of the difficulties he met with at the outset, and his resources in overcoming them, are highly interesting. First he was disappointed by discovering that there was not a diving-bell in the country, an obstacle got over by inventing and constructing one of iron water-tanks; the next was, that not a person was to be found who could make an air-tight pipe or hose, to communicate air for the supply of the diving-bell; for this he found a substitute in preparing and adapting Truscott's pump-hoses: nor was there an air-pump to be found at Rio, but this he discovered means of getting made. With these and some other preparations he arrived at Cape Frio on 30th January, 1831, nearly two months after the Thetis was lost, and on visiting the spot found that the Thetis had entirely disappeared. This caused an increase of difficulties, for some implements which he had devised under the impression that the hull of the vessel was entire, were rendered useless, and also a plan of a suspension cable, which he had formed at Rio, found to be unavailable, from the great length of time construction would occupy. On viewing the tar situation in which the disaster occurred, he was impr ed with the prospective danger that must attend t progress in the work before them, and the numbe lives that would depend on his management of the m sures he might adopt, and the scanty means he had accomplishing so great a task; but, says he, "relyi however, with proper confidence on the zeal and supp of my officers and crew, who were ready to submit w cheerfulness to the perils and difficulties which it now clear we must inevitably encounter, and which wo be necessary for the accomplishment of the work hef us, I encouraged myself and them with the thought t the merit would be in proportion to the obstacles mounted."

Relinquishing the plan of the suspension cable, thought of at Rio, he immediately determined on anot of more ready practicability. This was a derrick crane, which, after great labour and difficulty, was co structed of the enormous length of 158 feet, and co posed of 22 pieces of the fragments of the spars sav from the wreck. This stupendous machine, which w estimated with its gear to weigh 40 tons, was fix against, and projecting from the cliff; the description preparing and getting the rigging for it over the faces the cliffs is really quite exciting, and the placing t derrick in its position, exhibited on the part of Capt Dickinson a most masterly piece of practical seamansh the detail of which, and also that of the immense qua tity of rigging attached to it for its support, and t working of it, cannot fail to be interesting to Nav officers particularly. The nature of the service render it necessary that three-fourths of the officers and cre should be landed and live on shore; therefore, hut framed of the wood and thatched with the grass of t Island, were built as well for residences as workshops, hospital, provision stores, store houses, &c.; in fact, a short time, they had constructed quite a village, which Capt. D. gives a lively and picturesque descri tion. Here they were miserably tormented by insect "In addition to our sufferings from the wind and ra penetrating our slightly constructed huts, we were no attacked by myriads of tormentors, in the shape of ant musquitoes, fleas, and, though last not last, but worst all, jiggers (chigres), to such an extent, that one mig have thought we had invaded the United Kingdom Insects, and that the whole community had risen masse to expel us from their territory." The effects pr duced by them being ulcers which lamed half the cre at a time. Centipedes, scorpions, and tarantulas, we in great numbers, and frequently found in their clothes their encampment was also visited by a large kind of r which annoyed them, and snakes were so numerous th the thatching and almost every other part of their hab tations were infested by them; on one occasion one terrific magnitude appeared, being nearly 30 feet long the relation of all this is highly amusing. Amongst the privations was that of scarcity of water, there being bu one stagnant pool on the island, and that which tha got therefrom is described as being of the colour o weak coffee.

The construction of the derrick requiring a consider able time, our author's zeal and anxiety to discover whe ther the wreck was still in existence, prompted him t the attempt of working a diving-bell from a boat, and h accordingly constructed a small one, and fitted the Launch for the purpose. This we hold to be one of the mos clever devices ever formed, and does the Captain infinit credit. On the 4th of March they commenced searchin the bottom of the open sea with it, it succeeded fully and in a short time they found various fragments of the Thetis between the interstices of the rocks, at once proving that she was entirely broken up. The following will give an idea of the danger which constantly attended their sub-marine operations:—

"The agitation of the sea became greater every minute, and there was a rise and fall of eight or ten feet against the cliffs; the danger had become most extreme, and I was on the eve of directing the bell to be raised when the order was hastened by the appearance of an immense column of air rising from it. It had been driven violently against the rocks, by which cause it was thrown on its side and filled with water. The next moment I discovered the two men emerge from the bell and swim up."

They continued a most perilous search with extraordinary perseverance, and at length, on the 31st, discovered a few dollars in 7 fathoms water, and it became apparent that if the treasure was there it must be under the numerous large rocks which lie strewed over the whole surface of the bottom, and consequently must be removed before it could be obtained. The ingenious and mechanical contrivances had recourse to, and hazardous exertion in putting them in practice, must prove deeply interesting to all who read of them. After describing their first success the author says, "The ardour of the officers and people was raised to the highest pitch; good fortune had given such a spur to their zeal as inspired them with a perfect contempt of danger; appreciating this on their part, it was impossible that I should not experience corresponding feelings;" he therefore ventured on the daring and entirely novel attempt at working the diving-bell at night by torch-light, in which they fully succeeded. On this subject he says, "I may be thought to have exceeded the bounds of prudence on this occasion, in exposing the lives of so many persons; but it must be recollected that the enterprise was unique in its nature, and that this was only following up a series of experiments which had all proved successful, none of which would have ever been attempted had I been guided by a cool calculation of what might be prudent in the general acceptation of the term." It appears that on the occasion of trying this experiment, the cove in which the Thetis was lost, when lighted up by the numerous immense torches requisite for the work, presented a magnificent spectacle, of which the author gives a vivid description, and says, "Thetis Cove on this occasion would have supplied a fine subject for the artist."

On the 11th of May the derrick was brought into operation, and in the space of eight days numerous large rocks were removed, and the sum of 50,000 dollars in value was recovered; but such a series of misfortunes soon befel the adventurers as would have quenched the ardour of any body of people but English sailors. A tremendous gale destroyed that machine with the diving-bell and air-pump attached to it, and shortly after they were all nearly lost in their boats, by the wind suddenly setting in towards the shore, and to save their lives they were obliged to cut away the small diving-bell from the Launch. Speaking of the latter misfortune, the gallant author observes, "I should do despite to my own feelings, and withhold justice from my officers and crew, were I to pass this point of the narrative without expressing my unqualified admiration of their conduct under these perilous circumstances. Great coolness and sturdy fearlessness were indispensably necessary, and equally manifested on this trying emergency; the critical nature of our situation seemed to infuse an additional spirit into them all, and to have summoned them individually and collectively to the exercise of their utmost efforts, which happily resulted in safety;" and he adds, on the subject of the peculiar dangers and obstacles to be encountered in the prosecution of the work, "they had now come on us in rapid succession, and seemed to occur in so connected a train, that, in truth, the surmounting of one appeared to be but the introduction of another." Notwithstanding this, such was the foresight, prearrangement, and resources, called into action in this singular undertaking, that no sooner was one device destroyed than a substitute was promptly found; in fact, it was throughout a chain of expedients.

It sometimes happened that after ceasing work in the evening they could not get the Launch into the harbour, in consequence of the strength of the wind. she was, therefore, left in the cove, and was of course in danger from a sudden change of wind, which it seems was of frequent occurrence at Cape Frio. On one of those occasions all hands were suddenly called in the night to go out to tow her in, and the frightfully dangerous situation in which they were placed in doing so is thus described:—

"By the time we had got through the Gut (the narrow passage between the island and the main) it was a perfect calm, and the night was so dismally dark, save during the flashes of lightning, that it was impossible to judge how near we were to the rocks, excepting by guessing at the distance from the line of white surf just distinguishable through the deep gloom. We had not reached more than half way to the cove when a terrific storm burst over our heads; the thunder reverberated in echoing peals along the stupendous cliffs from one end of the island coast to the other in a continuous roar like hundreds of cannon, and the vivid flashes of lightning following in rapid succession affected the eyes to such a degree that we could scarcely see where we were going, and caused the rocks to appear much nearer than they really were, while every rising swell seemed threatening to cast us against them. The whole circumstances, taking into consideration the perilous situation in which we were placed, rendered it the most appalling night I ever experienced."

At the end of each month there is a concise statement of their sufferings from disease and lameness, which at one time were so great as to cause apprehension that their force might be so reduced as to render them unable to continue their operations.

From the title the general reader may perhaps infer that the subject is too technical to be interesting, but we can assure him that this is not the case; every page is replete with interesting matter, the technical terms are clearly explained by notes, and the work is embellished with five very appropriate lithographic illustrations; there is also in an appendix, a table showing the amount of treasure recovered daily.

We should not feel justified in making further extracts, but hope that those we have given are sufficient to show the nature and style of the work; they have already some what exceeded our usual bounds, but we have been led to do so by its peculiar character and the deep interest we feel in it. We most cordially recommend it to the public generally, and offer our opinion, that no member of the Naval profession, whether high or low, should be without it, for we know of no service more conducive to the just reputation of the British Navy for talent and daring enterprise than that of the undertaking for the recovery of the public stores and treasure sunk at Cape Frio.

Journal of the Movements of the British Legion. By an Officer. Effingham Wilson.

The Court and Camp of Don Carlos; being the results of a late Tour in the Basque Provinces, &c. By M. B. Honan. John Mecrone.

These two writers are of very opposite politics; the "Officer" not only belongs to the "Legion," but is madly enthusiastic in his party feeling, denouncing his opponents with the fury of a bedlamite. In charity we hope that his services in the field will gain him more credit than his pen is likely to procure for him. The author of the second work, Mr. Honan, is in principle a Carlist, but though we rank him as a decided partizan, he has, we admit, the ability to write; and all who peruse his volume will derive from it interesting information, not only as to the war in Spain, but as to the people, country, and customs; in fact, it is the work of an intelligent traveller. Our task is to collect from both matter that may amuse our readers, and we begin with the "Officer."

Brutality of the War.—"30th August, 1835.—In the early part of the action, the Carlists had made seven or eight prisoners of the regiment of Ferondo, who, in sight of several officers of the 1st British, were taken to the rear, and deliberately shot. The deaths of these men were, however, fearfully avenged. When a party of the regiment found itself compelled to retire, they had with them fourteen prisoners. The Carlists were then in close pursuit, and the last round of ammunition was in the muskets of the Fernandos. In this emergency, fearing their prisoners might be re-captured, they consulted together for a few moments, and then levelled at the hearts of their victims;—a simultaneous discharge, and they fell,—the bayonet completing what the bullet had left unfinished. This was no sad but a just retribution for the early massacre by the enemy. But neither the Fernandos nor the Chapelgurris give or receive quarter."

Disorganisation of the Legion.— "November 3d.—Several men of two regiments, billeted at some distance from head-quarters, having been guilty of plunder, complaint was made to the Lieutenant-General, who, on riding up to the cantonment with a view to institute inquiry into the case, caught a party in the very act of plundering a house, the inmates of which were screaming loudly for assistance. A drum-head Court-Martial was instantly assembled. . . . General Evans in addressing the officers, to whom he seemed to attach some blame,—the outrage having taken place within the limit of the cantonment—he said it was possible that some had come out with a sincere desire to make themselves acquainted with the service, and the duties required by it; while the object of others might have been to spend a year or two agreeably in the capacity of military tourists. With the private views of these latter he had nothing to do, neither would he inquire into them. But he had everything to do with their conduct as officers while in the service, and the strictest attention to their respective duties. If, he hinted, there were those who thought that service too fatiguing, and too little in accordance with the ideas they had originally entertained of it, nothing could be more simple than to disembarrass themselves of their charge."

The author's ideas of war and mercy towards the peasantry and inhabitants of a country, are much of a character with the late sanguinary order imputed, we hope, erroneously, to the Commander of the Legion:—

"Had the several Commandants of the Spanish army been empowered to carry fire and sword into the country of their enemies, the accession from the ranks of Don Carlos would long since have been such as to have rendered his army a mere skeleton. . . . If the faction could be put down by the destruction of ten towns, its extinction would be cheaply purchased; and if, on the other hand, the existence of such towns, which are the only places of refuge for Don Carlos's army during the winter, are the means of continuing that faction, surely their immunity from harm must be considered as purchased at a fearful price, both to the Government and the cause of the Queen. This much appears certain, that if the army of circumvallation about to be raised, of 100,000 men, do not take the field with us, as promised, we shall never of ourselves—that is to say, Cordova's army of 30,000 men, and our Legion united,—succeed in so dispersing the Carlists as to put them down, unless we burn and destroy wherever we go. No man can coolly advocate a war of extermination, under ordinary circumstances; but what mercy have these people a right to expect from us, to whom they will show no other than the bullet or the cord? But after all, there is not so much severity in this, as at first view of the question appears; in as much as before we had burned half a dozen villages, the object would be fully attained, in the secession of more than one half its force from the ranks of Don Carlos."

From such wretchedly absurd and unmilitary doctrine we pass to the author's character of Cordova and Espartero:—

"Cordova is not by any means a fine man. His figure is thin and spare—his shoulders are narrow, and altogether his appearance is not so much that of the robust soldier as I had been led to expect;—yet, notwithstanding this, there is an elasticity and lightness about his action—quickness of intelligence in his eye—and an ardour of expression in his countenance—all which united, convey at once, to a reader of character, the certainty of a man prone to conceive, and no less ready to act. Although extremely youthful both in figure and feature, there is an expression of determination about the man, which redeems his want of the severer personal attributes of the mere soldier:—a man one cannot behold him without being sensible that a mind of no common order inhabits his delicate frame. About the middle height, and apparently not more than thirty-five years of age, he forms a striking contrast to Espartero, whose dark unbending brow, and immovable features, half buried in whisker and moustache, convey the impression of the warrior of many battle fields. While Cordova, on the other hand, with shaven cheek and beardless chin, reminds you rather of the gay frequenter of the drawing-room."

The volume concludes with a very meagre and imperfect account of the battle in May last before St. Sebastian.

We are compelled to delay some extracts from Mr. Honan's work.

[ADVERTISEMENT.]

Perfection and Preservation of the Teeth is only to be attained by care, and the judicious selection of an effective Dentifrice—that prepared by ROWLAND AND SON, under the Title of their ODONTO OR PEARL DENTIFRICE, has long maintained unrivalled reputation among the most conspicuous possessors of that most beautiful ornament of the countenance A FINE SET OF TEETH; and it is not worthy of pointed notice, in connection with a recent discovery made through the medium of microscopic observation, viz., that the Tartar adhering to the Teeth is the Nidus of Animalcul.æ, by which the destruction so much regretted is ultimately wrought, that the Dentifrice, with the exception of a potent acid (Acidum Aceticum Verum) is the only known specific for the eradication. Thus, with the utmost elegance of preparation and cleanliness in use, is united those medicinal virtues which render Rowland's Odonto a Palladium of the Toilet, and, upon its merits alone, deserving the general attention and patronage.

PROSPECTUS OF THE DEPOSIT & LOAN BANK COMPANY.—CAPITAL, £500,000, With power to increase the same, if necessary.

In 100,000 Shares of 5*l.* each. Deposit, 1*l.* per Share. The remaining 4*l.* to be paid in two Instalments, namely, 2*l.* per share each call, of which two months' notice shall be given.

Office, pro. tem., No. 89, Essex Street, Strand.

Secretary, Mr. W. MONTAGUE.

THE object of this Company is to afford the means of immediate pecuniary assistance to every one (of whatever station in life) who will deposit satisfactory security, in goods or otherwise, for the repayment of the Sums advanced, with equitable remuneration for the same, during such period as the loan may be required.

The extensive business transacted by those already engaged in lending money on deposits, and their immense profits, are of themselves sufficient reasons for the establishment of a Deposit and Loan Bank; but pecuniary facilities, such as this Company will be enabled to afford to every class of Society, by means of their large Capital and resources, are not at present attainable through the ordinary channels of deposit and loan.

It is intended that the laws, enacted for the regulation of those persons who are already occupied in similar pursuits, shall be scrupulously observed by this Company.

The abrogation or partial repeal of the Usury Laws, recognises the principle that "those who lend money are entitled to an equitable remuneration;" and the Company will avail itself of the advantages to be derived by a fair, just, and honourable observance of this principle.

The business of the Deposit and Loan Bank will be divided into several departments—all of them to be conducted on such a liberal scale, as will be consistent with the accommodation of the public generally, and the protection of the interests of the shareholders.

Among the advantages to the Shareholders, it is intended that every one holding five or more Shares may make deposits of money at any time with the Company (agreeably to a scale hereafter to be determined), for which he shall be entitled to, and shall receive as high interest thereon, 5*l.* per cent. per annum. And such Shareholders (holding two or more shares) who require pecuniary accommodation, shall always be entitled thereto, and shall not be called upon for a higher rate of interest than 7½ per cent. per annum, upon any loan they may obtain by the deposit of their goods, &c., as security.

Arrangements are making to extend to the Provinces the benefits offered by this Company, Branches of which will be established in most of the principal Towns throughout the Empire.

Applications for Shares to be addressed (post paid) to the Secretary.

A second Prospectus will be ready for delivery in a few days.

W. MONTAGUE, Secretary.

MESSRS. DELCROIX & CO., Perfumers to their Majesties and the Royal Family, beg leave to inform the Nobility and Gentry that they have now completed their SPRING STOCK of NEW and FASHIONABLE PERFUMERY, and have also just imported, from Paris and the South of France, a choice selection of the most approved articles of the day. They respectfully recommend the following esteemed preparations to the attention of their Patrons and the Public:—

Delcroix's celebrated Esprit de Lavande aux Millefleurs, for the pocket handkerchief, Delcroix's Vegetable Extract, for cleansing and beautifying the hair.

Delcroix's Pommade Regenerative, for the growth and preservation of the hair.

Delcroix's Aromatic Mecca, Almond, Rose, Camphor, and Vegetable Soaps.

Delcroix's much-esteemed Oil Brown and White Windsor Soaps.

Delcroix's long approved Circassian Opiate, for preserving the teeth and gums from decay.

Delcroix's Creme de Sultanus, for softening and beautifying the complexion.

Delcroix's Genuine Russian Bears' Grease and Huiles Antique.

Messrs. D. and C. have recently obtained Injunctions from the Court of Chancery preventing certain parties from selling a spurious imitation of their Esprit de Lavande aux Millefleurs and Vegetable Extract, both of which will in future bear their signature on the labels, and their address, 138, New Bond-street, on the back of the bottles.

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY.

AS the following letter received from Major-General Sir Henry Wheatley, Keeper of the Privy Purse, testifies:—

Sir,—I am honoured with the King's command to express his Majesty's sense of your polite attention in sending the two bottles of Essence of Ginger. His Majesty has been pleased to direct me to forward you ten pounds in payment for it—inclosed you will find that amount.—I am, Sir, your's obediently, St. James's Palace, June 25th, 1835. H. WHEATLEY.

To Mr. Decimus Woodhouse.

WOODHOUSE'S ÆTHERIAL ESSENCE of GINGER is particularly recommended to all cold, phlegmatic, weak, and nervous constitutions; it is certain in affording instant relief to Cholera Morbus, Spasms, Cramps, Flatulence, Languor, Hysterics, Heartburn, Loss of Appetite, Sensation of Fulness, Pain and Oppression after Meals; also those Pains of the Stomach and Bowels which arise from Gouty Flatulencies; Digestion, however much impaired, is restored to its pristine state, by the use of this Essence for a short time, if taken in Tea, Coffee, Ale, Beer, Porter, Cider, or Wine; it corrects their Flatulent tendency.

The undernamed, and 200 other Medical men have given certificates of their unqualified approbation of the value of the Essence, as also of its superiority over all other similar preparations. Drs. James Johnson, Physician to his Majesty, A. T. Holroyd, S. Ashwell, R. Rowley, A. Middleton, C. Loudon, D. Davies, Surgeon to their Majesties, J. Pereira, G. Pilcher, F. Salmon, F. Tyrrell, J. H. Curtis, Aurist to his Majesty, C. Millard.

This Essence is prepared only by DECIMUS WOODHOUSE, Operative Chemist Extraordinary to his Majesty, 16, King William-street, New London-bridge, and sold by him, wholesale and retail, in bottles 2*s.* 6*d.*, 4*s.* 6*d.*, 10*s.* 6*d.*, and 21*s.* each; and may be had of all Medicine Venders.

TO PREVENT FRAUD.

THORN'S POTTED YARMOUTH BLOATERS, for Toast, Biscuits, Sandwiches, and Wine, in Pots, 1*s.* and 2*s.* each. The high repute and immense sale of this delicate preparation has induced several would-be tradesmen (who not having an idea of their own) to attempt an imposition by labelling a pot exactly like his, thereby to deceive the public and injure him, (having actually applied to his printer for that purpose;) well knowing they cannot prepare the Fish, the receipt being an old family one, and the secret in the curing of the Herring, by which its rancid qualities are destroyed, and it becomes so delicious a relish. It is easily detected by observing his signature, ALEX. THORN, on the side, and on the top, Proprietor of the celebrated TALLY HO! SAUCE, for Fish, Game, Steaks, Wild Fowl, and all Made Dishes, imparting a zest not otherwise acquired—the most economical now in use: In Bottles, 2*s.* and 4*s.* each, warranted in all climates. Wholesale at the Manufactory, Thorn's Oil, Italian, and Foreign Warehouse, 223, High Holborn; also of all wholesale oilmen and druggists; and retail by all respectable oilmen, grocers, and druggists in the United Kingdom.

WITHOUT INJURING the HAIR or SOILING the SKIN.—The only article that has stood the test of experience is AGID HASSAN'S CIRCASSIAN HAIR DYE, which will in a few hours change light, red, or grey hair to a rich auburn or jet black, or any shade between, with a fine glossy appearance, without injuring the roots. It will also be found invaluable to Cavalry Officers and others in removing "white stockings," and giving to every spot of the horse any colour required. Sold by the Sole Agents, W. Day and Co., at their Old Italian and celebrated Fish Sauce Warehouse, 95, Gracechurch-street; and Hannay and Co., 63, Oxford-street; in Bottles, at 5*s.*, 10*s.*, and 15*s.* each, with directions for use, and a fac simile of the signature of Agid Hassan; also that of W. Day and Co. All others are counterfeit.

IMPROVED WAX DRESSED CLOTHS for TROPICAL CLIMATES, MARQUEES, &c. THOMAS EDGINGTON (from Tooley-street) No. 17, Smithfield Bars and Old Kent Road, London, Manufacturer to their Majesties, respectfully informs the Nobility, Gentry, Merchants, &c., that he has now on sale an extensive Stock of Marquees and Tents of all dimensions, admirably adapted for Horticultural Societies, Archery Meetings, Cricket Clubs, Public Dinners, Fetes, &c. Rick Cloths with Poles complete. Improved Wax Dressed Cloths, light, clean, and Impervious to water, at Reduced Prices. Bunting, Rope, &c. Wholesale and for Exportation. A Pavilion, capable of dining 1,000 persons, and a variety of other Marquees, Awnings, &c., may be had on hire. T. E. begs to remind the Public, that he had the honour of erecting last season the beautiful Pavilion at Sion House, and at the different Colleges at Cambridge, the Zoological and Horticultural Show, Studley Castle, Bromley Palace, &c. N.B.—Temporary Rooms, Verandas, Entrances, &c., fitted up, and tastefully lined and decorated, on hire.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Broths, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, 72, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sams, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c., &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

98, New Bond-street.

TEETH.—Gold is the only material with which decayed teeth can be filled with any permanently beneficial result: the various cements to which so many impossibilities are unblushingly attributed, being amalgams of mercury, with silver, tin, &c., quickly combine with the acids of the mouth, and thus, forming muriates of those metals, turn the teeth black, and ultimately destroy them.*

GREIG THOMSON, Surgeon Dentist, informs the Public that he has succeeded in making a preparation of gold, which, without inflicting the least pain, effectually arrests the progress of decay, and resembles the teeth in point of colour much more than any other invention now in use.

G. T. continues to perform all the operations of Dental Surgery, and to fix natural and artificial teeth upon the most improved principles, combined with the utmost moderation in terms.

* Is it credible that any member of the Medical Profession can recommend these deleterious compositions; or can any reference, real or pretended, alter the facts above alluded to?

THE MECHIAN DRESSING CASE.

THE most portable ever invented, measuring only 6½ inches long, 3¼ wide, three-fourths of an inch deep; in fact, the size of a pocket-book, and contains one pair of Mechi's ivory-handle peculiar steel razors, his magic strop and comb, badger-hair shaving-brush, his patent castellated tooth-brush, and a neat useful nail-brush—price only 25*s.* The same, with hair brush and soap-dish, 35*s.* To military men, and as a steam-boat or travelling companion, this invention must prove an invaluable acquisition, the articles therein being all of the first quality. An immense variety of other dressing-cases for both gentlemen and ladies, either in fancy woods or leather, at all prices from 20*s.* to 50 guineas, at Mechi's Cutlery and Dressing-case Manufactory, 4, Leadenhall-street, London (four doors from Cornhill). An extensive stock of leather writing-cases, work-boxes, bagatelle tables, razors, razor strops, Sheffield plated goods, tea-trays, tea-caddies, &c. cheaper than any house in London. Every article warranted, or the money returned if not approved.

JULY DIVIDENDS. GRIFFIN AND HYAMS, 22, Cornhill, opposite the Royal Exchange, most respectfully inform the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public in General, who visit the City at this period, that a pamphlet with their prices, may be had gratis, of the best MANUFACTURED SPOONS and FORKS, cottage and other pattern, TEA SETS and COFFEE SERVICES, every description of superior Jewellery, Ladies and Gentlemen's Patent Gold and Silver Lever Watches, Sheffield Plate, and all other articles. By comparing the prices of Griffin and Hyams, with those of the pretended cheap shops, a saving may be effected of from 10 to 30 per cent. Their establishment is conducted upon honourable and tradesmanlike principles, the public are therefore secure from imposition by any misrepresentation being resorted to. The articles purchased of them will be exchanged within one month, or the money returned if not approved of. The utmost value given for diamonds, pearls, second-hand plate, &c. All foreign money exchanged.

"ENGLISH PEOPLE DIE from neglecting the Use of LAVEMENTS."—See Victor Jacquemont's Letters, Vol. I. page 122. The Manufacturers respectfully announce, that a DOMESTIC LAVEMENT APPARATUS has at length been invented, which does not tease people with screwing and fixing, or require the fuss of Basins, Chairs, and other troublesome preliminaries; it has no elastic materials to cause inconvenience and expense by decaying and becoming defective; and, lastly, it has the peculiar property of injecting the fluid in a continued current, which, at the same time, gives the additional advantage of excluding the admission of air. Having been constructed by its professional Inventor with a view to remove those objections and difficulties which have hitherto appertained to all Lavement Machines, the Manufacturers confidently aver that DR. SCOTT'S CLYSO-PUMP will be found extremely commodious by every individual—even the most infirm person or timid female may manage it with the most comfortable facility. In fact, this unique and elegant Apparatus supersedes all former inventions of the kind, and should be in the possession of every family, particularly of individuals habitually requiring aperient medicines, or suffering from indigestion and disorders connected with a confined or faulty state of the bowels. An eminent Physician, who has filled an important station in the Honourable Company's Service for thirty years past, has thus expressed his opinion of this Machine:—"I am convinced that the introduction of Dr. Scott's CLYSO-PUMP into India will tend greatly to the preservation of Life; and it is a desirable thing that every family should be provided with it. It is admirably suited for hot climates, as it does not possess any elastic tubes, the best kind of which are very perishable and annoying in any country; but decay most quickly in tropical climates. In short, I think that Scott's Patent Lavement Machine should form an item in every outfit to India." Orders to be addressed to SAVORY and CO., Chemists and Medical Mechanists, 369, Strand.

BREWSTER'S ALMOND and HONEY SOAP, combining the Emollient and Balsamic Properties of Honey with the finest Almond Oil Soap, and possessing fragrance, it removes Sunburns, and prevents Chapped Hands.—Brewster's Asiatic Vegetable, or Extract of Cocoa-Nut Oil, for promoting the growth of hair; it invigorates the roots, gives strength and brilliancy to the hair, and causes a luxurious growth; has only to be known to be an indispensable appendage to the toilet and the nursery.—Lavender Water from the flowers, Royal Perfumed Lavender, &c., Carbonised Flower Tooth Powder, much admired for its efficacy, elegance, and simplicity; improved Cold Cream of Almonds and Roses. Made and Sold Wholesale and Retail by Brewster, 43, New Bond-street. Sold by all respectable Perfumers in Town and Country.

PLATE GLASS.—Carving and Gilding, Chairs and Cabinet Work, Carpeting, Upholstery, and Interior Decorations in the present improved style, on Terms which fear no Competition, at HENRY L. COOPER'S Old Establishment for superior furniture. Looking Glasses of a quality cannot be excelled. HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL, unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, preserving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, rendering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and sustaining it in curl under the different varieties of atmosphere.

Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO., Perfumers to the Royal Family, No. 63, Oxford Street, London.

Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and Co. were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to the Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individual who divulged it to them, or whose head would inevitably have paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties successively employed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn oaths of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three centuries.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed the greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and most uncivilised countries great value is set upon a fine head of hair. The great care is proverbial that is paid to the cultivation of the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, and art is there well known to soecred in outrivalling even the far-famed beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during the period of three centuries, and has been found unfailingly successful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, soft, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess (as is done in some instances) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair upon cast iron—it will do no such thing; but, if regularly applied, it will re-produce the hair where nature ordained its existence, if lost from those causes to which baldness is referable; it will promote the growth of the hair generally.

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY, sustain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a brilliant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a pure LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, unsophisticated with the deleterious articles usually employed to dye Otis red, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the hair, and although an oily substance, the

ORIENTAL OIL DOES NOT RENDER THE HAIR GREASY, and is therefore free from the general complaint against every other article in present use for the same purpose, including those filthy substances miscalled Bears' Grease, which are neither more nor less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil submitted to various manipulations to divest them of the fetid animal smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform principle. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dews of the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprive it of which it soon withers and dies; so the hair, unless properly nourished, becomes weak and gradually drops off; for, minute as a single hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human hair will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface covered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, and which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tendency, the hair is destroyed thereby: thus it will be observed that those persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in life, which is merely caused by the acid caustic nature of the perspiration settling on the hair and being absorbed, which entirely destroys it; but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will prevent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury; and if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely removes the scurf, without the assistance of the dandruff combs, an operation so distressing to the heads of children.

Price 3s. 6d., 6s. 6d., and in pint bottles, with glass stoppers, 12s. each.

SARSAPARILLA.

"Great praise is due to Mr. Hilliyard for his very clever and much needed preparation of Sarsaparilla. His mode of preparing it preserves the necessary active qualities, which, according to the old mode, were allowed to evaporate, thus rendering it one of the most sure, as well as simple, remedies in purifying the blood."—United Service Gazette.

"In justice to one of the many preparers of Sarsaparilla, we must give the meed of praise to Hilliyard's condensed preparation, knowing some friends of ours who have received much benefit from its use."—Fraser's Literary Chronicle.

Prepared only by Hilliyard, chemist, 59, Oxford-street, five doors from Barnets-street, and sold by him wholesale and retail, and retail by the following Agents—Prout, Strand; Willoughby, 61, Bishopsgate Without. Observe—Half-pints, 1s. 6d.; pints, 2s., quarts, 11s., being less than half the price of any other preparation of the kind, and the strongest ever made.

TESTIMONIALS.

From JOSEPH HENRY GREEN, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London.

"I have made trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba. From BRANSBY COOPER, Esq., F.R.S., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c. &c.

"Mr. Bransby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony of the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases with perfect success. "New-street, Spring Gardens, April 13, 1835."

From WILLIAM HENTSER, Esq., No. 3, Furnival's Inn, Holborn, late House Surgeon to the Free Hospital, Greville street, Hatton Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I know of: the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly,

HEALTH, BEAUTY, and LONG LIFE.—An eminent medical writer has remarked, and experience has proved the fact beyond dispute, that those who are attentive to keeping the Stomach and Bowels in proper order, preserve health, prevent disease, and generally attain robust, cheerful, and healthy Old Age. For that truly desirable purpose

are particularly adapted, being prepared with the Sulphate of Quinine, Extract of Chamomile Flowers, and the most choice stomachic and aperient drugs of the Materia Medica.

They have in all cases proved superior to every other medicine in the cure of Stomach and Liver Complaints, Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Sensation of Fulness, Sick Head-ache, Pain and Oppression after Meals, Habitual Costiveness, Flatulence, Shortness of Breath, Stomach Coughs, Spasms, Worms, and Fits in Children and Grown Persons, and all Disorders incident to the Stomach and Bowels. They are also truly efficacious in the cure of Colds, Agues, Asthmas, Rheumatism, Gout, Jaundice, Dropsy, and Gravel, and an excellent restorative after any excess or too free indulgence at table, as they gently cleanse the bowels, strengthen the stomach, sweeten the breath, cheer the spirits, brace the nerves, induce a healthy action of the liver, improve digestion, and invigorate the whole system. Females who value good health and personal appearance, should never be without them, as they purify the blood, remove obstructions, pimples, cutaneous eruptions, sallowness, &c., and give the skin a beautiful, clear, healthy, and blooming appearance. Persons of a plethoric habit who are subject to head-ache, fits, giddiness, dimness of sight, or drowsiness, singing noise in the ears, which indicate too great a flow of blood to the head, should be particular to take them frequently. They are an mild and gentle in their action that children and persons of all ages may take them at any time, as they do not contain mercury or any ingredient that requires confinement or restriction of diet. Many healthy aged individuals, several of them highly distinguished Members of the Royal College, who know their value, make it a rule to take them two or three times a week, by which they remove the causes that produce disease, preserve their health, and keep off the infirmities of age, retaining, in a surprising degree, all the energy, vigour, vivacity, and cheerfulness of their youthful days. They should be kept in every family as a remedy in case of sudden illness, for, by their prompt administration, cholera morbus, cramps, spasms, fevers, apoplexy, and other alarming complaints, which too often prove fatal, may be speedily cured or prevented. Numerous patients, whose cases had been considered hopeless, have been restored to sound health by them. This can be proved by the testimony of thousands, and shown by letters from numerous patients who have benefitted by their unrivalled efficacy. To describe all their excellent properties, and the cures they have performed, would fill volumes, and exceed credibility; in fact, there is scarcely any disease to which the human frame is subject that they will not either prevent or cure, and none in which they can possibly do harm.

Prepared only by J. W. STIRLING, Chemist, 86, High Street, Whitechapel, in Boxes at 1s½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each, and may be had of all the principal Medicine Venders in the kingdom.

 Ask for Stirling's Stomach Pills.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—Mr. HOWARD, Surgeon Dentist, 52, Fleet-street, continues to supply DEFICIENCIES of the TEETH, on his improved principle, at the same moderate terms, whether arising from neglect, diseases of the gums, or age (from a single Tooth to a complete set), without extracting the roots, or giving any pain, and in every case restoring perfect articulation and mastication. An inspection of Mr. Howard's method will immediately convince those at all acquainted with the subject of its superiority.

Tender and decayed Teeth cured and effectually preserved from further decay.—At home from ten till five.

"Leigh-street, 11th April, 1836.

GENTLEMEN,—I have lately seen in the public prints a letter to you, signed "Paul Johnston," testifying certain beneficial effects which he had received from your KALYDOR. As I entirely agree with that gentleman in the sentiment he expresses, that an individual ought to make known any advantages he receives from a composition advertised to public notice, I hasten to inform you of an inestimable service lately done to me by your MACASSAR OIL. About a year ago I lost nearly all my hair through an illness, added to a natural tendency of the hair itself to weakness. I frankly confess that, when first advised to try your Oil as a restorative, I ridiculed the idea; but on suffering myself to be persuaded, I soon became convinced of the absurdity of my scepticism. I have now a far better head of hair than I could ever boast of at any period of my life, which can only be attributed to the persevering use of your Macassar Oil. You are quite at liberty to publish this if you think fit so to do, retaining my address, which you give only to respectable inquirers. I am, Gentlemen,

Your obliged servant,

Messrs. Rowland and Son. WILLIAM ASHBY.

TROTTER'S ASIATIC TOOTH POWDER, Established upwards of 70 years, so long been a general favourite of the Nobility and Gentry of this and foreign countries, conspicuous for its virtues in cleaning and preserving the Teeth. The Proprietor of this most excellent and invaluable Dentifrice having served as an Officer in his Majesty's Navy the whole of last war, most respectfully solicits the patronage of the Officers of the United Service.—Sold wholesale and by the single box, at the Manufactory, 2, Arundel street, Strand, and by all Perfumers and Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom.

NORTON'S truly valuable CAMOMILE PILLS, for INDIGESTION, &c.—These Pills are a pure extract of Camomile Flowers, prepared by a peculiar process, by which all the medicinal properties of rather more than one ounce of the flowers, are concentrated into four moderate sized Pills; they are mild in operation, and have proved wonderfully successful in removing every symptom of indigestion, sick headach, loss of appetite, giddiness, heartburn, costiveness, eruptions of the skin, and all complaints arising from a disordered state of the digestive organs; they require no alteration of diet, and their operation will be found so beneficial in giving tone to the stomach, regulating the bowels, and in promoting a healthy habit, as fully to convince all who take them of their great utility.

Persons who have suffered from indigestion for several years, have by their use in a few weeks perfectly recovered, which is a convincing proof, that in the smallest compass, is contained the largest quantity of the tonic principle of so peculiar a nature, as to pervade the whole system, through which it diffuses health and strength.

Sold wholesale by Barclay and Sons; T. Butler; E. Edwards; F. Newberry and Sons; W. Sutton and Co., and A. Willoughby and Co. (late D. Godfrey Windus), 61, Bishopsgate-street Without, London: and retail by nearly all respectable Medicine Venders.

Be particular to ask for "NORTON'S PILLS," for in consequence of their great success some unprincipled persons have prepared a spurious imitation.

TO TRAVELLERS, Merchants, Captains, Shippers, and Families.—WRAY'S CHALYBEATE GERMAN SEIDLITZ POWDERS, prepared by M. C. WRAY, Chemist, &c., 118, Holborn Hill, and sold in boxes (containing powders for 12 glasses) at 2s. each. The various effects produced by the operation of Seidlitz Powders, depend entirely on the different modes of preparation. The Chalybeate German Seidlitz Powders now recommended by the proprietor are brought to that state of perfection by which the most uniform results will be experienced, and, in conjunction with their pre-eminence over all other aperient medicines, the proprietor flatters himself the low price at which they are now prepared (being less than one half usually charged by druggists for the common Seidlitz Powders) will accord to them a decided preference. Where also may be had, Ginger Beer Powders, 6d. per dozen; three dozen, 1s. 3d. Soda Water ditto, 5d. per dozen; three dozen, 1s. Common Seidlitz, 1s. per dozen, three dozen, 2s. 6d. Lemonade ditto, 6d. per dozen; three dozen, 1s. 3d. N.B. Be careful to have the "Chalybeate German Seidlitz Powders," prepared by M. C. Wray, 118, Holborn-hill, as no others are genuine.

NO sooner does an article of real utility attract public attention than Imitators start into the field to snatch from the Inventor the just reward of his labours. J. READ begs leave to inform Ladies, Gentlemen, & the Medical Profession, that, after fourteen years' experience in the manufacture of his inventions of the Stomach and Enema Pumps, he has ascertained that a Double-action Machine for Enema Injections is not only unnecessary, but DANGEROUS, from the quantity of air contained in the double chamber, which must unavoidably be passed into the Bowels, and that he has lately made such improvements in his Machines as renders them more simple, portable, and durable, without the possibility of admitting of air, and are fitted with flexible and metallic tubes, that will stand the test of oil, turpentine, and the hottest climates.

Manufactured ONLY by the Patentee, 35, Regent Circus, Piccadilly.—N.B. None are genuine, except stamped with the words "READ'S PATENT."

WHOLESOME SUMMER BEVERAGE.—There is nothing of more importance at the present season than the choice of a Beverage. The leading Members of the Medical Profession, aware of the necessity for great caution in this respect, having strongly recommended weak Brandy and Water in lieu of the general class of fermentable liquors, J. T. BETTS and Co., fortified by this recommendation, and the constantly increasing sale of the PATENT BRANDY (exceeding, in the last year, that of the preceding year by between twenty and thirty thousand Gallons), may, with great propriety, dwell upon its peculiar adaptation to the season; not only as a safe and agreeable beverage, but also with reference to its importance in the manufacture of Home-made Wines, in the preparation of Confectionary and Preserved Fruits, and for general Culinary purposes. For all which objects it is peculiarly adapted by that extreme purity and freedom from acid which has been established by the analysis and Certificates of many of the most eminent Chemists.

As Distillers, J. T. BETTS and Co. cannot send out less than two Gallons of their Patent Brandy, which may be obtained at Eighteen Shillings per Imperial Gallon, of the highest legal strength, at the Distillery, No. 7, Smithfield Bars, leading to St. John Street, which is their only Establishment.

BRIGHTON RAILWAY

TO THE SHAREHOLDERS OF STEPHENSON'S LINE.

GENTLEMEN,—A short time since, one of your party, actuated no doubt by the purest motive, kindly advised the Directors of Cundy's and Sir John Rennie's Lines to relinquish all further opposition, and to divide their few remaining stivers among the disconsolate Shareholders. Now, Gentlemen, allow me to return the compliment, and to recommend the same plan to yourselves for be assured there are more cogent reasons for your settling your affairs than for us; there have been other fees, it is said, than merely those to Counsel, if reports are to be relied on it will require a very considerable amount beyond the £5 instalment to liquidate the enormous sums either paid or promised. You will be in a pretty dilemma therefore, should you not carry your Bill this Session, an event by no means so certain as you imagine.

But let us suppose, for the sake of argument, that you do carry your Bill; that the Lords, God forgive me for the thought, care nothing about ruining Brighton, and are determined to force the inhabitants eleven miles out of their way to please Mr. Goldsmid: we will suppose this, and what comes next! Why two or three calls of £10, and all the host of people, who are to be remunerated with Shares on the passing of the Bill, rushing into the market to realise their ill-begotten profits. The will act wisely; for under no possible circumstances can the people of Brighton remain two years, or even one, without a Railway to London by the shortest line practicable, which is that projected by Sir John Rennie.

A SHAREHOLDER.

INFANTRY.

GRENADIER GUARDS, 1st Batt.—On Wednesday morning, between 9 and 10 o'clock, a considerable number of persons assembled opposite Portman-street Barracks, to witness a private of this battalion drummed out of the regt. At the above hour the barrack-gates were thrown open, and the delinquent marched from out of the barrack-yard, preceded by a corporal, escorted by a private on each side of him, the band of drums and fifes playing the Rogue's March. On his entering Portman-street he presented a most ludicrous appearance, his jacket being turned inside out, and torn in slips up the back. As soon as he got into the street, he threw the jacket off, and ran away with all speed, followed by an immense concourse of persons. The conduct of the fellow during the time he had been in the regiment had been most outrageously disgraceful. Nothing could alter his disposition for getting drunk, deserting, and selling his kit.

ROYAL ARTILLERY, WOOLWICH.—On Saturday last, the Master-General, attended by the Dep. Adj.-Gen. Col. Sir A. Dickson, unexpectedly visited the garrison. The Master-General separately inspected the battalions, and having formed each into a hollow square, and put the question to the men whether they had any complaints to make, they were marched off from the barrack-field to their own parade, and there dismissed. Sir Hussey subsequently visited the Hospital, attended by Sir J. Webb. He then walked into one of the soldiers' barrack-rooms, where, finding all things to his perfect satisfaction, he immediately proceeded to the Common, where the Horse Brigade and Field Batteries, the Riding School Troop, and the Reserve Horses, were drawn up in heavy marching order to receive him. After the usual honours, the whole filed past at a walk, and were then formed into a square, and questioned by the Dep. Adj. Gen. whether they had any complaints to make; but there not being any response, they were dismissed to their barracks. Sir Hussey Vivian expressed himself much gratified with the highly efficient state of the corps.—On Monday the Persian Princes visited the garrison, and were received with a salute of twelve guns from the mortar battery. They were attired in eastern costume, and immediately proceeded to the marshes, where the Rocket Troop was put in requisition. The exhibition of these tremendous projectiles appeared to create great astonishment in the Princes, who afterwards visited the Arsenal, and were highly gratified with all they saw; they were then conducted to the Artillery mess-room, where they partook of refreshment. After mounting horses (to which they seemed to stick with great tenacity) they were shown to the Mortar Battery, where three rounds of round-shot were thrown from the howitzers and mortar; not with that effect which has so often distinguished them, as sufficient allowance was not made for the high wind blowing at the time, so that most of the projectiles fell many fathoms to the left of the staff. This being ended, the Military Repository was the next object of attraction. While on the Common, three troops of Horse Artillery (two guns each), under the command of Col. Wainyates, and three brigades of the Field Batteries, under Col. Cleaveland, were drawn up in review order. After marching past at the walk and saluting, then at the trot, the Horse Brigade changed and reversed, returning at the gallop; the Field Batteries executed some manœuvres with beautiful precision, retreating with the prolonge, forming echellons, &c. &c. The Horse Brigade then advanced, and performed a somewhat varied course in their accustomed style, finishing with dismounting the guns and limbers, remounting them and firing a round, and closing with the general salute. The Princes expressed thanks, and their admiration of our tactics, through their interpreter, and returned to town. After dismounting the guns and limbers, one of the guns (which for an obvious reason is not particularised), from a laudable desire to exhibit celerity, was fired before the linchpins were in the wheels, a practice which, if continued, might be productive of dangerous consequences to the gunners.—On Wednesday last a Private received 150 lashes for repeatedly selling his "kit." He was an old soldier, therefore his crime was considered the more flagrant, from the bad example he was setting, presuming on his length of service for pardon of his offence.—On Thursday a similar punishment was inflicted on another Private for a second desertion. These painful exhibitions in this distinguished corps are now of rare occurrence, and only resorted to from absolute necessity.—Gunner M'Peake, 7th batt., has been sentenced by a General Court-Martial to be transported for seven years, for striking a Bombardier with his sabre, which sentence his Majesty has been pleased to confirm.—On Thursday, his Grace the Duke of Beaufort and Lord F. Somerset visited the garrison, and a similar routine was observed, but the evolutions of the Field Batteries and Horse Brigade were protracted until near six o'clock in the evening, from the bad state of the weather. The detachment at Armagh moved to Tanderagee on 13th. Maj. Wyld's co. (field battery) will move from Limerick to Athlone 13th to 17th Aug. Detachment of Capt. Hardieg's co. from Athlone to Dublin 17th to 20th Aug.

ROYAL HORSE ARTILLERY—Maj. Blackley's tr. from Athlone to Dublin 2d to 5th Aug.; Capt. Saunders tr. from Dublin to Limerick 5th to 12th Aug.

 All the troops lately detached in the Northern District of Ireland were to arrive at their former stations on 19th, 20th, and 21st inst.

Lord Hill's Levee, which was to have been held on Thursday, at the Horse Guards, is postponed until next Thursday.

Maj.-Gen. Lord Fitzroy Somerset held a Levee at the Horse Guards on Tuesday, which was attended by several military officers.

Maj.-Gen. Sir George Elder is appointed on the Staff at Madras, vice Maj.-Gen. Watson, ordered home.

Lieut.-Col. Cuyler, Aide-de-Camp to Maj.-Gen. Sir E. Blakeney, has been appointed one of the two superintending Commissioners under whom the Dublin city watch and police force is placed by the new Act.

Opposition to the Statue of George the Third.—Wide streets are becoming the rage with a vengeance. It is urged that the fine statue of George III. would be an obstruction, erected in Cockspur-street, though, after it shall have been set up, a carriage-way of forty-five feet eight inches will remain in front of the noblemans' house. Really the gentlemen who, on such a plea, oppose the exhibition of a noble work of art are rather exorbitant in their claim of space. More ground they cannot in reason desire; and less ground for raising a colossal statue could hardly exist.

Spanish Flies.—From the Belgian papers we observe that an army of Spanish flies, from the southern parts of France, has entered the [illegible] of Luxembourg, and committed great [illegible] crops. Their depredations resemble [illegible] in the east.

Diving.—A certain Lorenzo Giordano of Fiumara, has found the means of remaining for six hours at a time in the deepest places at the bottom of the sea, with the power of walking at the rate of a mile an hour. For this secret he asks the sole right of doing this for two years, and the half of what he finds in his submarine peregrinations.

Portsmouth, July 21st.—(From our own Correspondent.—The Inconstant, 36, was commissioned on Saturday by Capt. Hayes, C.B., and the Pique, 36, on Sunday, by Capt. the Honourable H. J. Rous; they are masted and in the basin; they have each entered about 30 men. The party of Marines for the Pique, under the orders of First Lieut. Parker and Second Lieut. Aslett, will embark to-morrow; the detachment for the Inconstant is expected from Woolwich. The Pembroke returned to Spithead on Sunday; during her cruise, by some accident or another, she got foul of the Eagle, outward-bound East Indiaman, and injured her greatly; her bowsprit and cutwater carried away, some of her fore bats started, and foremast sprung; the Eagle is alongside a King's hulk repairing; the Pembroke experienced but trifling injury, and has since dropped down to St. Helens. Rear-Admiral Sir C. Paget and his suite embarked in the Hercules yesterday, and the ship then moved to St. Helens. Sir Charles will go to sea on Sunday if the weather will permit. The Bellerophon only returned this afternoon, and has anchored at St. Helens with the rest of the squadron. The destination of the squadron is not known, there have been a variety of reports; among others, that they were going to St. Sebastian, to embark General Evans and his force, and bring them to England, the affairs at Fontarabia having been magnified into a battle most disastrous to the Legion! but the Glasgow steamer came up on Wednesday night from St. Sebastian bringing true particulars. The Madagascar will go to Spithead next week; she is to call at Plymouth before going to Jamaica, and it is expected take charge of the Goliath, fitting as a coal depot. Beacon is rigging in the basin. Conway and Samarang are under repair in the Long Dock. Partridge, tender to Royal George, is nearly ready. Capt. Hindmarsh, his family, and about 200 male and female emigrants, with vast property, are in the Buffalo, at Spithead; her crew were paid advance on Tuesday, and the ship only awaits a fair wind. Griffon, Lieut. Parlby, arrived from Sierra Leone on Wednesday. Rear-Adm. Sir P. Campbell was at the Cape, with his flag in the Pelican. Thalia has been to visit the different ports on the station, and was on her return to the Cape. Lynx and Rolla at Sierra Leone. Ætna and tender, the Raven, surveying at Fernando Po. Water Witch off Prince's Island. Charybdis, Pylades, and Fair Rosamond, in the Bights, cruising; the squadron very healthy. Griffon has lost but one boy since she has been employed on the coast; she is ordered to Sheerness to be paid off. The Court-Martial ordered on Capt. Corytoe, R.M., of this division, will not take place; mutual explanations between him and Lieut.-Col. Jones have been effected, and the matter ended. Ships in Port, Hercules (flag), Vanguard, Asia, Cornwallis, Pembroke, at St. Helens; Buffalo, Griffon, Bonetta, and a Norwegian brig, at Spithead; Britannia (flag), Inconstant, Madagascar, Pique, Beacon, Partridge, Cracker, Emerald, in Harbour. Volcano is masted, and will be sent to Woolwich for her boilers, engines, &c.

Milford Haven, 20th July.—(From our own Correspondent.—The Hamoaze lighter arrived here from Liverpool on Wednesday last with Mr. Walker, of Plymouth-Yard, and a company of riggers, who had been employed navigating the Arethusa to the former port fitted as a lazarette. The old vessels hitherto employed for that purpose there having been, on survey, found defective, are forthwith to be sold out of the service. In the short space of four days the party took out the masts, which had been shipped on board the Dido, put others in their places, rigged her, bent sails, and were ready for sea. On Sunday, with half a gale of wind dead on end, Mr. Walker, in a most seaman-like manner, worked her down the harbour; on reaching this place she carried away her main topsail yard, which compelled her to come to an anchor. The lighter was sent down with another on Monday morning, on the arrival of which she again got under weigh and left for Sheerness. Mr. Walker would be an invaluable acquisition to Pembroke in case of war, not only for the masterly manner in which he handles a ship, but for the accurate knowledge he possesses of the haven generally. Few persons would have undertaken the working an untried ship through the narrows in the manner he did on Sunday last. On visiting the dock-yard this week, I find that as no orders have yet been received relative to the relief of the Marine detachment there, they are likely to remain at least till early next spring, when, as ships are likely to return from foreign service, a relief will be afforded from one of the divisions. These men are so immediately under the directions of the Admiralty, that it is not likely they will be relieved by men from the line, particularly as the expense of fitting up the Old Dragon, 74, as a barracks has devolved entirely on that board. The experiment too of employing the Marines as labourers in the dock-yard, proving such a source of economy to the nation, ensures the continuance of a detachment of this valuable body to that establishment. Captain Deans, Inspecting-Commander at this place, visited the out-stations of Coast Guard last week.

A splendidly constructed four-oared boat has been built at the command of his Majesty, which is intended as a present to the Prince of Orange. The cutter is 36 feet in length, built of oak, and is fitted up with considerable neatness, totally avoiding every thing that would tend to give her a gaudy appearance. The cushions are green, with orange tufts, trimmed with gold lace, and she has orange yoke lines.

Woolwich Dock-Yard, July 22nd.—(From our own Correspondent.— All the st.-vs. are at a nonplus on account of the strike among the Civil Engineers, whose firms are employed by Government. The Firebrand st.-v., Master Allen, left here for the Westward on Tuesday. The Rhadamanthus st.-v. has had her foremast taken out to be replaced by a new one, and she is being proceeded with with all despatch. The Messenger st.-v., Mr. J. King, has had her starboard wheel taken off, and it has been found necessary to strengthen her beams and midships; her topsides have been caulked afresh, and so has the Rhadamanthus. The Lightning, Lieut. Shambler, is almost at a stand-still on account of the "strike," though her Engineer, Thastrick, has been using his best endeavours to bring her forward. The Firefly st.-v., Lieut. J. Pearse (a), has had her masts taken out to be overhauled, and has got a party of Engineers off the Cheque to get her engines into order if possible. The Flamer st.-v. will require entire new boilers. The Echo st.-v. is still up in the City Canal waiting for Engineers. Ships in Port—William and Mary yacht. In the Basin—Firefly and Lightning st.-vs. Not in Commission—Rhadamanthus, Confiance, Flamer, st.-vs., and the Messenger st.-v., Mr. J. King. In Dock (not in Commission)—Blazer st.-v.

On Tuesday afternoon a Court-Martial, which continued till Friday, was held on board the Britannia flag-ship in Portsmouth harbour, to try Mr. Robert Rogers, late Master of the Rover, for an indecent assault on a boy; Rear-Adm. the Hon. Sir C. Paget was President, and the other Members of the Court were Rear-Adm. Sir F. L. Maitland, Captains Hon. D. P. Bouverie, S. Jackson, Sir T. Fellowes, W. Fisher, Sir J. S. Peyton, Sir J. Rowley, T. Hastings; J. Hoskins, Esq., Judge Advocate: Mr. Rogers was assisted in his defence by W. Mischie, Esq., of Portsea. The Court was occupied two days in the prosecution, and on Friday the prisoner entered on his defence, which occupied but a short time. The Court determined that no part of the charges had been proved against Mr. Rogers, and he was fully acquitted. Sir Charles Paget, after congratulating him on the complete manner in which the charges against him had been refuted, thus addressed him:—"It has now become my pleasing duty to return you your sword, which you have hitherto used with so much credit to yourself, and which you will, I am sure, hereafter wield with advantage to your country." The Commander-in-Chief, Adm. Sir P. C. H. Durham, immediately ordered the witnesses in the above case, W. Tully, cook, Rowett, a boy, and Henry Benjamin, joiner, to be kept in close custody until the determination of the Admiralty be known, there being no doubt but that the charge against Mr. Rogers was a foul conspiracy.

☞ A Court-Martial was ordered to be held on Capt. George Hunt Coryton, of Portsmouth Division of Royal Marines, on charges preferred against him by Lieut.-Col. George Jones, of the same corps, arising out of some misunderstanding with respect to mess transactions, which it was expected would assemble on Tuesday last at the Mess Room. Simultaneous with the application to the Admiralty made by the latter officer for this proceeding, one was forwarded to that Board by Capt. Coryton, for a Court-Martial on Colonel Jones. The trial will not take place.—(See our Portsmouth Letter.)

Mr. Hepburn is appointed Master-Attendent and Mr. Sadler Assist. Master-Attendant at Portsmouth Yard.

The thirteenth anniversary meeting of the Royal Naval Annuitant Society was held last week at the Society's Buildings, at Plymouth, Capt. J. Lawrence, R.N., in the chair. From the report of the Committee, read to the members, it appeared that the capital of the Society had increased to the large sum of 96,105*l.* 3s. 6*d.*, which was invested with the Commissioners for the reduction of the National Debt, and that on the 21st May last the Committee had divided 4,276*l.* as annuities among the widows, orphans, parents, and sisters of deceased brother officers.

Capt. Wm. Hillyer (1836), late Commander of the Revenge, has been appointed Secretary to Rear-Adm. Sir Chs. Paget. This is the officer who drew up the diagrams which are supposed to give the most correct account of the trial between Vernon and Barham. We formerly detailed the gallant action which brought him under the notice of Nelson.

An order in Council appears in The Gazette of Tuesday night, declaring the port of Plymouth a fit and proper place for the reception of goods from places within the limits of the East India Company's charter, and authorising the importation of such goods into that port.

The Lords of the Admiralty have been pleased to superannuate Wm. Payne, Esq., Master Attendant of Chatham Dock-yard, on 450*l.* per ann., he having been upwards of 56 years Master in the Royal Navy.

Greenwich Hospital.—The Governor, Rear-Adm. Sir Thos. Hardy, has been on leave of absence, but resumes his duties on the 27th, when it is to be hoped the gallant officer will order a new jack to be hoisted, as the one at present flying is absolutely black and ragged, which has certainly a disreputable appearance to foreigners passing up and down the river.

The Sulphur, surveying ship, Capt. Beechey, was at Monte Video on the 7th April, and going in a few days to Port Famine, in the Straits of Magellan.

A letter has appeared in the Times respecting the quality of the timber of which the Bengal Merchant is built, which confirms the statement we made last week; and we find, on inquiry, that the ship is considered by competent judges to be every way qualified for her destined service.

The lower rigging of H.M.S. Minden has been condemned, the defect is supposed to have been occasioned by the system of preparing the rigging a considerable time before it is required, and stowing it away in heated stores, rooms where a free circulation of air is wanting. It is supposed that on account of the necessity for re-rigging the ship, the Minden will not accompany the squadron under Sir Charles Paget in its first cruise.

An attempt was made on Saturday to undock the Prince Regent yacht at Deptford, which failed; she will be undocked next spring, and rigged in the basin; she is now most splendidly gilded, and is really an object in every way deserving of inspection; she will, it is expected, proceed to the Imaum of Muscat next September.

The Henry Porcher, convict ship, for New South Wales, and the Mary schooner for Malta, have sailed from Deptford this week; also the Ida for Gibraltar; where the St. Vincent, Enel Grey, Bengal Merchant, and Pyramus convict ship, are fitting for New South Wales.

Captain Couch, R.N., the patentee of the "Ships' Solid Channel," has been summoned before a Select Committee of the House of Commons, and from his examination on the 19th instant, the Chairman has been pleased to express his entire conviction of the valuable character of his invention, both as to the preservation of life and property at sea. It was shown by some documents (selected from numerous testimonials) which were read to the Committee, that, in recent cases of last winter, two vessels, the "Elizabeth" (lost with seven of her crew,) and the "St. David," the Commanders have certified that had they had the advantage of this "patent channel," the principle (amongst many others) of immediately getting clear of the wreck of the masts from the bottom, would have saved both vessels and crews.

ROYAL MARINES, WOOLWICH.—Col. M'Clavarty, C.B., is on leave of absence, but returns in about a fortnight.

Lieut. Rea and Courtis, with a detachment of the Woolwich Division of Royal Marines, are under orders for Portsmouth to join H.M.'s frigate Inconstant, lately commissioned at that port.

Lieut. Norcott, of the Curlew, during the first three months of his service on the African station, has captured five vessels fitted out for the slave trade with 12,000*l.*, destined for the purchase of slaves, which sum he has lodged in the colonial chest at Sierra Leone, where it awaits adjudication. From one of these prizes (the General Alonzo, a brigantine of 250 tons), it was attempted to smuggle ashore in a boat 3500*l.* in dollars, but Lieut. Norcott's vigilance prevented the success of this attempt. It is much in favour of Lieut. N.'s attention to the ingenuity and cleanliness of the Curlew, that he has not had a man on the sick list. Subsequently to effecting the above captures, Lieut. N. received orders to cruise in the Bights of Benin and Biaffra, and to visit the American settlement of Liberia, on the state and prospects of which he is enjoined to report for the information of Government.

The Masters Attendant of the dock-yards are in future to have 480*l.* per ann. instead of 650*l.*, and the Second Masters Attendant 380*l.* instead of 200*l.* per ann., holding the appointments for five years, or at the pleasure of the Lords of the Admiralty—a wise and judicious regulation, as a means of keeping up active and zealous officers. Although the appointment is for five years, the party will be eligible for re-appointment, if qualified by age and ability; if not re-appointed, to go upon the half-pay class of the rank, with an additional one shilling a-day. Messrs. Sepburo and Sedlor have entered upon their duties. It is supposed the second Master Attendant at Chatham will have the duty of the first, vacated by Mr. Payne's superannuation, and that the first will not be filled, although several changes will. We hear it is in contemplation to make a proportional increase in the pay of Assistant Surgeons of Portsmouth and Plymouth Dock-yards. These appointments are held by Surgeons who are paid but 200*l.* per annum (the Surgeons have 500*l.*), and which appears inadequate to the duties and responsibility.

A Court-Martial was held on the 6th inst. at Lisbon, by the Captains of four English men-of-war (the Hastings, Malabar, Talavera, and Russell), the Admiral presiding, upon a marine of the Malabar, who stabbed an officer when that vessel was at Cadiz. The man has been condemned, and the sentence forwarded for the consideration of the Lords of the Admiralty.

Official notice has been given to Adm. Sartorius, that on his complying with the usual forms of sending a memorial to his Majesty, he would be re-instated in his rank in the British navy.

Capt. Daniel, R. N., has received the honour of knighthood from Lord Mulgrave, at Cove.

The Constitution American frigate, sailed from Valparaiso, for the Northern Ports, 25th Feb.; and the Thisbe sailed from Lima for Islay, 30th January last.

The Naval Obituary for the last quarter, reports the demise of one Rear-Admiral, eight Captains, ten Commanders, twenty-one Lieutenants, four Masters, nine Surgeons, and seven Purser.

When the Griffon left Sierra Leone, there were 23 vessels lying there that had been seized under the new Order in Council, authorising H.M. cruisers to detain all that had fittings, &c. for slaves; the Admiral had a copy of the Act of Parliament, but the Judge at the Colony had not received one, or any Instructions on the subject.

YACHTS.

THAMES YACHT CLUB.—Considerable anxiety prevails relative to the disposal of the silver cup, sailed for on Monday last by the Wave, Gem, Maria, and Alarm. It is customary to present the prize to the Capt. of the victorious boat on the evening after the contest, unless a protest be put in, signed by a majority of the Captains who sailed in the contest. On this occasion the protest against the delivery of the cup to J. Christian, Esq., was put in, and the prize necessarily withheld by the Commodore. The protest sets forth that the Wave exceeds her entered tonnage (ten), and that as the first class is not allowed to exceed that, she is not entitled to the cup. A special meeting of the Club will be called, and in the interim the yacht measured by the proper authorities. Most of the bets have been paid.

THE BRITISH YACHT CLUB.—The match for the splendid silver cup and cover, given by the members of this Club, was sailed for on Tuesday last, but owing to the unfavourable state of the weather, the river did not present the usual gay and animated appearance usual on such occasions. The match was an above-bridge one, and the distance to be sailed was from a boat moored off the Temple gardens to another moored off Wandsworth meadows. There were only three boats at their station at the hour appointed for starting; viz:—The Selina, nine tons; the Margaret, eight tons; and the Brilliant, eight tons. The three boats started well together at about two minutes before five o'clock. The Brilliant won in gallant style, rounding the flag off the Temple gardens full ten minutes before the second boat.

The Lady Emma yacht, which was to have sailed on Monday for the silver cup and cover, was upset on Sunday afternoon, near Lambeth Palace, by a sudden gale of wind, and three persons out of seven on board were lost. On the following day, after the sailing match, the Alarm yacht swamped near Battersea Church, but fortunately no lives were lost.

Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, the Plymouth regatta attracted considerable numbers of the admirers of aquatic sports, and the race on Wednesday passed off with great eclat. The Vice-commodore of the Irish division, in the Dolphin, was present, but many yachts expected from the eastward were prevented, by adverse winds and bad weather, from reaching Plymouth up to that day.

A splendid dinner was given by the Earl of Wilton on Wednesday, on board his beautiful schooner yacht Zariffa, off Greenwich Hospital, which was attended by the Dukes and Duchesses of Buccleugh and Beaufort, Marquis and Marchioness of Aylesbury, the noble families of Jersey, Cadogan, &c.

The following noblemen and gentlemen were elected members of the Royal Western Yacht Squadron, on Monday. W. Wooby Cavie, Esq., Thomas Slade, Esq., owner of Arab, of Poole, James Slade, Esq., W. F. Moore, Esq., owner of the Ianthe, of Plymouth, Capt. C. H. Paget, R.N., owner of the Nancy yacht. On Tuesday, Lord A. Beauclark, Adm. Com.-in-Chief of Plymouth, Capt. Skyes, flag Capt., Capt. Lockyer, R.N., J. D. Oliver, Esq., R. W. Jamieson, Esq., R.N.Y. Club. There are now 215 members belonging to this club, and 50 yachts enjoy its peculiar privileges.

The Duke of Norfolk and one of his grandsons have arrived at Cowes, for the purpose of commencing their aquatic excursions on board the Arundel. A gloom is cast over the Royal Yacht Club by Lord Yarborough not hoisting his flag on board the Falcon, as Commodore. The Falcon is for sale. Lord Belfast, the Vice-Commodore, is travelling abroad.

There are four yachts at their winter quarters, Cowes, viz:—Earl of Coventry's Ariel cutter, Earl de Grey's Nautilus, Mr. Oliver's lugger Phœbe, and Mr. Braithwood's cutter Zephyr.

East India Intelligence.

THE abolition of the mints at Madras and Sangor appear to have occasioned considerable annoyance at those places. The principal cause of complaint against the Supreme Government is their refusal to establish a bullion office at Madras, in compliance with the wishes of the mercantile community of that place.

Meetings have been held by the officers of the Bangalore and Trinchinopoly stations, deprecating any further augmentation of the capital of the Military Fund, by doubling the donations, and augmenting the subscriptions, for diminished advantages.

The 30th reg. N.I. to march from Madras to Secunderabad, to be there stationed; and the 17th N.I., now on route from Cuddapah to Palaveram, to proceed to Madras, to be their stationed.

The smuggling across the Jemna is carried on to an amazing extent, in spite of the large establishment of preventive service. In consequence of the large quantity of water expended in the canals, the Jumna, twenty miles north of Delhi, is in many places not above knee deep, which accounts for the smuggling. The principal trade from the Jumna to the Ganges is cotton, with sugar in return. The principal smuggling is in salt.

A rather severe shock of earthquake was felt in the evening of the 3d Feb., at Guntoor. It was preceded by the usual rumbling noise, and the shock lasted about a minute, rocking houses in the town. In the districts to the westward it was felt more severely; some tiles were shaken from the Cutcherry in one place, and a few houses had been thrown down; but no material injury had been done.

Theatres.

LYCEUM.—An opera entitled The Rose of the Alhambra has been produced at this house, and played every evening during the week with some success. This piece was played for a few nights at Covent Garden Theatre a short time since, and suddenly withdrawn. The music of this opera is by Mr. De Pinna. The drama is said to be the work of Captain Pelbill; we have heard it attributed to his brother-in-law, Mr. Deacon. Of the music of this opera we cannot speak in terms of praise, it is a poor, meagre, common-place composition from beginning to end: the only portion of it with which we were at all pleased, was the chorus "Morn on the sunny hills is beaming," and a ballad, "Where is the voice that has thrill'd me?" and the highest merit they possess is, that they are pleasing. The overture is a very poor affair; and the instrumentation generally is anything but skilfully or effectively written. We cannot feel surprised that this opera was not continued at Covent Garden Theatre, for it boasts of as little merit as any we have witnessed for some time past; the [illegible] of comparing it, in point of merit, to Barnett's Mountain Sylph and Balfe's two operas, is too absurd, and must have emanated from some person to whose ear a street-organ is the perfection of all musical performance. The incidents of the piece are neither striking nor effective, nor is the piece as well got up as it was at Covent Garden; the last scene of the first act is [illegible] indeed. In the cast of this opera we [illegible] there is an improvement. We like [illegible] and Wilson, in he characters of Jacintha and Ruys, better than Miss Romer and Mr. Borker, indeed we never heard Miss Shirreff's voice to greater advantage than in this theatre; our only regret was, that the music she had to execute was of so ineffective a description. Wilson's fine manly voice was only heard to advantage in the ballad above mentioned. Of Mr. Bland's efforts in the part of Sebastian, the least said the better. The reception given to Wilson and Miss Shirreff was most enthusiastic on their first entry. The committee have acted wisely in engaging these favourite vocalists, and if they will but get good pieces for them, they may rest assured their theatre will be crowded nightly. They have now the opportunity of sailing with wind and tide, if they let it slip, they have no chance of retrieving themselves this season.

STRAND.—A new, domestic, and well-written burletta, in three acts, entitled The Bill Sticker; or, the old House in the City, was played for the first time at this theatre on Thursday evening, and met with decided success. The burletta is partly founded on a clever paper which appeared in Blackwood's Magazine a few months since, called "The Old House in the City," and which was the contribution of Mr. Douglas Jerrold, who, we may fairly presume, is the author of the present very pleasant piece. The characters are all well drawn; that of Cyrus Cognovit is a too faithful picture of many a "head of an old house in the city." Such vermin are very numerous among our overwhelming list of attorneys. The part of Maximilian Tango is evidently a touch from real life—a hit at a celebrated bum-bailiff of Chancery Lane, well known for his polite attention to the victims consigned to his precious keeping. The character of Buxbottle, the bill sticker, is a novel and highly humourous conceit; it is one of the best original low comedy parts we have seen for some time. We suppose it has been written for Mr. Hammond; his acting of it is quite equal to any thing of the kind of the present day, and has raised him considerably in our estimation; it is by far the best thing he has done. The performers one and all exerted themselves in the most praiseworthy manner for the success of the burletta, particularly Messrs. Forester, Hall, Wyman, and Attwood, and Miss Daly. When this piece has been acted a few evenings, to allow the performers to get more perfect and mellowed in their characters, it will go on admirably. We should recommend judicious curtailment, particularly in the first and third acts; also, more attention to the termination of the second act, which was rather a bungling piece of business. CATSPAW is too long relating his story; the denouement ought to be brought about more speedily. We make no doubt but this piece will prove the most attractive yet produced at this comfortable little theatre.

American Theatricals.—We are glad to find that Mr. Collier's amusing little comedy of Is she a Woman, is playing at New York with great success.

Beulah Spa, Norwood.—The improvements lately effected in these delightful grounds add considerably to the many attractions formerly offered to visiters. A confectionary and reading-room, with a rustic colonnade, afford a large extent of in-door accommodation to visiters and invalids. The grounds and lawns, which abound with natural beauties, have been most tastefully laid out with rustic flower-beds, stocked with a variety of choice flowers and shrubs. A large hotel, with a crescent, are about to be erected. The saline waters, after a careful analysis by Mr. Faraday, and others, have been pronounced to be eminently calculated to produce those sanative effects for which mineral waters are resorted to. Two effective bands are in attendance; and tents, marquees, &c. have been erected for the convenience of pic-nic and gipsy parties.

The Norwich Festival commences on 19th September. We subjoin a list of the Performers engaged:—Madame Caradori Allan, and Mademoiselle Assandri, Mrs. A. Shaw, Miss Rainsforth, Miss Tipping and Miss Bruce; Signor Ivanoff and Signor Lablache, Mr. Hobbs, Mr. E. Taylor, Mr. Hawkins, and Mr. H. Phillips. Leaders of the Band—Mr. F. Cramer and Mr. Blagrove. Conductor—Sir George Smart.

COURTS-MARTIAL.

CAPTAIN RAINES, 77TH FOOT.

[PENDING the promulgation of the sentence, unusually delayed, we shall this week, at the request of several officers, give the Charges, with Major Wilson's letter, and Captain Clerke's reply, to which we alluded last week; and, if our space will allow, we shall resume the subject in our next.]

Charge 1st.—For having, on or about the 23d of Nov. 1835, at Wigan, addressed a letter to Major Wilson, of the same corps, falsely imputing to Capt. W. Clerke, of the 77th regiment, a calumnious statement, painful to the feelings of the said Major Wilson, and calculated to cause serious consequences between him and the said Captain Clerke, the above false imputation being made at a time when Captain Clerke was in arrest, awaiting his Majesty's pleasure, on the finding and sentence of a General Court-Martial previously held on him (Captain Clerke) at Glasgow, at the prosecution of the said Captain Raines.

2d.—For having—although long since apprised that Captain Clerke had denied to Major Wilson that he had ever made the statement so imputed to him by the said Captain Raines, and further, that he (Captain Clerke) had stigmatised Captain R.'s assertion of his (Captain Clerke) having made such statement as infamous and false—omitted up to the presented period to take proper steps with respect to Captain Clerke, in vindication of his honour, or in refutation of the strong imputation cast on him by the said Captain Clerke: all such conduct on the part of the said Captain Raines being unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, and highly discreditable to his Majesty's service.

Letter from Major Wilson to Captain Clerke, communicating the calumny against him, alleged by Captain Raines:—

"Haydock Lodge, 25th Nov., 1835.

"SIR,—Having received a communication from Capt. Raines yesterday evening, where he states you made use of the following slander against myself and family, namely:—"The precipitate manner in which it is said my marriage was concluded, and the vile insinuations Captain Clerke accompanied the information with." It leaves me only, at the present stage of the affair, to request your full and downright denial or affirmation to these extracts now furnished, and with as little possible delay as you can. I have the honour to be, &c.,

"N. WILSON, Major 77th Foot."

"Captain Clerke, Chester Castle."

Captain Clerke's answer to Major Wilson, denying Capt. Raines' assertions:—

"Chester Castle, Nov. 26, 1835.

SIR,—In answer to your letter of yesterday, communicating the disgraceful attempt of Captain Raines to vent his miserable malice against me, by attempting to embroil me with you by making statements as ridiculous as they are FALSE and INFAMOUS, and the motives of which are evident to the world, I beg to say that I can safely call upon the officers and their wives of this corps, to attest the terms of respect and esteem in which I have invariably spoken of yourself and Mrs. Wilson. I cannot, even in the most remote degree, comprehend the meaning of the pitiful fabrication communicated to you, whether it be the invention of the individual himself, or of the unhappy female, who, I understand, has been making similar attempts with other families of the corps, but which attempts have been treated as they merited. I beg leave to add, that if it were not for my well-known esteem and respect for yourself and family, I should not deem it necessary to take the slightest notice of any assertion made by an individual at present labouring under charges so deeply affecting his veracity and honour. I have the honour to be, &c. &c.

"W. CLERKE, Capt. 77th reg."

"Major Wilson, 77th reg.,
"Haydock Lodge."

ASSIST.-SURG. T. HUNTER, 2ND, OF QUEEN'S ROYAL REGIMENT.

This officer has been tried at Bombay on the following charges:—

1st—Highly unofficerlike and disgraceful conduct, in being intoxicated and incapable of performing his duty as a medical officer in charge of invalids, proceeding from Poonah to Bombay, on Oct. 26, 27, 28, and 29, 1835.

2d—Highly unofficerlike conduct and neglect of duty, in quitting the detachment at Carli on the 28th Oct., proceeding in advance, and affording no medical aid to the invalids during the remainder of the march to Bombay, viz. from the 29th Oct. to the 2d Nov., 1835.

3d—Scandalous and disgraceful conduct, unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, in appearing intoxicated before a board of officers assembled at Poonah on the 25th Nov., 1835, to investigate into the above conduct, and appearing in the Regimental Hospital on the mornings of Nov. 20, 21, and 22, in a state of intoxication.

Of all which charges the prisoner was found guilty, and sentenced to be cashiered.—Approved by the Commander-in-Chief of India.

Remarks—The Commander-in-Chief desires to point the attention of the army to the case of Mr. T. Hunter, as it is but three months since this very individual was before tried for a similar offence. It is with much regret that his Excellency has to observe, that this is the third officer of H. M.'s army who has been cashiered for this odious offence within the last two months, so that he can little wonder that thoughtless private soldiers should give way to the pernicious vice when such examples are set before them. He has the utmost confidence in the Commanding Officers of H.M.'s regiments that they will aid him in his endeavours to root out this evil from the army, and that they will oblige the officers under their command not only to assist in preventing drunkenness amongst their men by personal exertions, but also by setting a proper example to those under them.

TO THE RIGHT HON. LORD HILL.

LETTER II.

My Lord,—I am rejoiced to find that the letter I had the honour to address to your Lordship on the 11th instant has awakened your attention to the abuses complained of in it, and I rejoice still more to learn, that in the approaching inspections you will have an opportunity of personally witnessing the effect of Mediterranean and Indian service, as exemplified in the state of the 7th Fusiliers and 38th Regiment, and thus putting my statements to the test of observation.

To comment upon the past services of regiments is unnecessary, particularly, as in the present case, where they have been so nearly equal; but we will venture to assert that your Lordship will admit the appearance and discipline of the Fusiliers to be as perfect as if they had never been out of Hyde-park, while, in the wasted appearance and neglected drill of the remnant of the 38th Regiment, your Lordship will recognize the effect of protracted service in a tropical climate. By the system pursued a few years ago, the 38th would, after four or five years' wearisome drill in England, and more painful service in Ireland, have been sent back to wither again in the east or west, while the Fusiliers, finding favour where impartiality alone should reign, would have been sent a second time to the Mediterranean or America. It is not, however, our intention to rake up the past; it is sufficient that we feel assured you, my lord, will not in future sanction such palpable injustice. It has been urged in defence of the old system, that our engagements to the East India Company and to New South Wales render it impossible to make the necessary reliefs without injustice to some corps, but if your Lordship will adopt and adhere firmly to a single principle, which you cannot but admit to be a just one, such objections will easily disappear. The principle I allude to is this—let no regiment be recalled from the Mediterranean or America until those who have been 15 years eastward of the Cape, or 10 years in the West Indies, shall have been previously relieved. Remember, my Lord, that all regiments, except those doomed to India or New South Wales, leave four companies in England, which, if fairly managed, would allow of considerable relief, while those stationed in India are deprived even of this advantage.

Facts are, however, better than argument: in order, therefore, to prove that we do not demand impossibilities, I shall venture to submit a table of proposed reliefs, and though I do not suggest it as the best arrangement which might be made, I trust it will at least point out the practicability of administering impartial justice to the army at large, without doing injustice to any particular corps.

I have the honour to be, your Lordship's obedient servant,
ROUND ROBIN.

[We will give the proposed 'Roster in our next. In the meantime we refer our readers to our leading article on this subject.—ED.]

Died lately, at Staughton Lodge, near Bedford, the seat of Lieut.-Col. Latour, of the late 23d Lancers, his grey charger Blucher, aged twenty-seven years. This noble animal carried the Colonel during the three days at Waterloo. On his death eight balls were extracted from him; he also bore the marks of several lance and sabre cuts.

IMPROMPTU,

BY MISS JANE ANNE PORTER,

While riding in Hyde Park, and seeing a grave dug there by soldiers, to receive the remains of the well known old Waterloo horse belonging to the 2nd Regiment of Life Guards, which having become too infirm to sustain life without pain, was to be shot next day and buried with military honours.—June 29th, 1836.

They have dug a deep grave
For the Steed of the Brave,
But not in the red battle-field!
With a heart-bursting sigh
They have doomed him to die—
And nobly his life shall he yield!

For the charger that sped
O'er the burial bed *
Where full many a Briton doth lie,
Will only betray
By a wild, scornful neigh,
How proudly the British-born die!

Let them plant in the soil,
Where he'll rest from his toil,
A laurel, whose leaves shall bestrew,
When the wind blows around,
And they fall on the ground,
The dust that reveals—Waterloo!

THE SERJ.-MAJOR OF MARINES, NOW MAJOR IN THE BRITISH AUXILIARY LEGION.

Sir,—From paragraphs which have lately appeared in some of the papers, the public is led to believe that the late Serjeant-Major of the Woolwich division quitted the Royal Marine service in a manner discreditable to himself. To do away with this impression allow me to state, that the individual in question, after having served upwards of 21 years in the corps, applied for his discharge; agreeably to the usual practice in the Royal Marine service his request was complied with, and he was allowed the pension generally given to those of his rank who have completed this period of service. Shortly after quitting the British service he was appointed to an Adjutantcy in one of the regiments of the Spanish Auxiliary Legion, where his knowledge of his profession led to his speedy advancement, and his good conduct in action obtained for him a decoration and the rank of Brevet-Major. I do not mean to deny he had in common with some of our greatest warriors and statesmen, a predilection for a "noggin of the strong," but this little infirmity never attracted the public notice of his superiors, and was not in any way connected with his discharge.

London, 18th July. A. C.

PURSERS' WIDOWS' PENSIONS.

Sir,—Most of your Naval and Military readers are no doubt aware of the besotted regulation by which, about 18 years ago, the widows of officers of either service were allowed to retain their pensions on marrying again. As if to push the folly of this measure to its utmost limits, it was permitted to operate retrospectively! Hence, many re-married widows who had, of course, long given up all idea of a pension forfeited by such fresh connubial contract, found themselves, to their great surprise, all at once invested with a right to claim it. Many a septuagenarian answered to the summons. To make the thing complete, I marvel that the persons then in "authority" did not order the payment of arrears. As it was, it was pushing liberality, alias folly, as far as it could well go. The course since pursued has been as opposite as the poles, although we then heard, as now, a great deal of cant about economy. Just glancing at the regulation by which a Naval officer (does it extend to the Army?) is not eligible to leave his widow any pension, unless he shall have held his rank ten years at the time of his decease, a regulation which must bear extremely hard on all those who are promoted late in life, such as old mates and clerks; just glancing at the cruelty of depriving in toto that most useful class of men, the warrant officers, of the hard-earned right to leave a paltry pension, a dirty quarter of a hundred, to their surviving helpmates; my present purpose is to call attention to an anomaly in the pensions of Pursers' widows. When, about five years since, an increase took place of ten pounds a-year, the wiseacres then in office, whisking round to the very antipodes of the besotted regulation I have commenced with, declared that it was not meant to benefit the then existing widows, many of whom had but recently become so. Oh, no! it was intended, forsooth, to act prospectively only! How wondrous careful of the public purse! As all the widows thus cruelly excluded, and left to struggle on the pittance of 30*l.* per annum, stand as much in need of the increase as those who have since become widows possibly can do,—as, upon every principle of justice and equity, they have at least an equal right, I hope that which I have said, being inserted in your valuable columns, will have the effect of placing all the Pursers' Widows on the same footing, viz.—40*l.* per annum. I would, however, exclude from the benefit of this regulation any of the re-married widows before alluded to, while their husbands are still living. An Old Officer.

NAVAL CHARITABLE SOCIETY.

Sir,—From the clear manner in which your late correspondent, Nauticus, has exposed the truly unnecessary expenses of the Royal Naval Charitable Society's Office, he richly merits the highest encomium from its well-wishers. In that correspondence he drew the attention of members to a review of the past year's expenses, which, as he very aptly termed, was more than propriety demands, and hoped the next meeting would be a large one, at which he should be present. I am not a regular attendant, but from the importance of those communications which I read in your valuable paper, I made a point to be at the Thatched House on the 11th instant. Your promptitude and good feeling for the service in giving publicity to Nauticus's just views, if carried into effect, will enable greater relief to be extended to the widow and orphan, whose cause, for it is theirs solely he so nobly advocated, induces me to request you will give insertion to my opinions, &c., relative to the last meeting. In the first place, on the above letters being brought to the notice of the committee by a member, it was proposed (not from the chair), "that no attention should be paid to an anonymous writer." Nauticus manfully sustained his part by rising and declaring himself the writer, and that he was influenced by no motive beyond the good of the Society, feeling it his duty to point out what seemed to him "unnecessary office expenses;" and as so very few members generally attended the meetings, and, consequently, were not aware of the expenses, he determined on giving publicity to them.—I will add, the indifference too frequently evinced when retrenchment has been spoken of in the depreciated state of our funds, with increased claims upon it. It is true, I have met Nauticus at the meetings, beyond it he is a perfect stranger to me; I feel fully persuaded, from the tenor of his letters, that his only object is to see the affairs of the society conducted conformable to the name it bears. "Economy," as he justly observes, "should be our motto." Considering as I do, that his praiseworthy exertions in the cause of the distressed were not duly appreciated, is a further incentive to my request for your insertion of this, in the hope that it will be the means of increasing advocates in the genuine cause of charity and economy. To proceed with the business of that all-important day,—after some warm debate, pro and con, it was decided that the series of letters should be read. I will do the meeting justice, by observing, that most marked attention was paid during the time that Nauticus so distinctly read his communications. At the conclusion a member (not the Chairman) proposed that the meeting should unanimously dissent from the opinions entertained by that officer; I am pleased to add, that that motion decisively met with defeat, in the decided opposition of several old and influential members, and it was resolved that the subject should be further discussed at the October meeting. Some documents of former years were read by the secretary, and several of other societies were produced by a member, who endeavoured to show that our expenses were not of that nature, which Nauticus proved by further stating that it took the annual subscription of 988 Lieutenants to pay 247*l.*, the office expenses for 1835. Are the extravagances of bye-gone days, or other societies, to be any criterion for us? As a subscriber for many years in the various ranks which I have held, I maintain it as my opinion, that this sum is unnecessary to give proper and due effect to the management of a society based on a "Charitable foundation," and feel much regret at the opposition this officer, in his truly "Philanthropic" views, met with; at the same time, I am well aware of the difficulty of eradicating a long existing evil, and do hope that the next meeting will be fraught with success in an unanimous wish for retrenchment, or rather, I should have said, a majority in its favour. I trust the junior officers (for they are more immediately concerned) will numerously attend at the meeting; I beg to impress upon their minds that all are equal, no feeling of superior rank by chance of birth, or more fortunate success in the profession, ought there to pervade the breast, a conscientious discharge of the duties of a committee is the object that should be paramount. An officer, whom I have not the pleasure of knowing, that was at the meeting, stated, that he had been nearly 40 years a member, and therefore claimed some acquaintance with the affairs of the society, being a very frequent attendant, and was fully of opinion, that, as Nauticus stated, a considerable saving might and ought to be effected, more particularly if a respectful petition on behalf of the society was forwarded to the proper quarter, for an office in Somerset-house (I have been informed there are vacant rooms), or other public building; we have a precedent in the case of the United Service Museum, Whitehall, which Government so very generously granted gratuitously. Certainly our society has equal, if not stronger claims, on the sympathy of Government; I have no hesitation in feeling assured that our petition would be crowned with success, thus would a saving of rent be effected, independant of other proposed reductions, "exceeding 100*l.* annually," still holding our meetings at the Thatched House. How many a care-worn cheek would glow with joy at the prospect of an increased donation, arising solely from a diminution of our present unnecessary office expenses. In allusion to other societies, as mentioned in a former part, I venture to assert they have what we have not, Auditors; I am pleased to say that a motion was made to the effect, that two auditors should be appointed, which was ably seconded, not, as the mover very justly observed, from any doubt of the authenticity of the accounts, but only in accordance with the usage of societies generally. The impartial conduct of our worthy chairman on that day is well deserving our warmest thanks. Having by me a printed list of the Royal Naval Charitable Society, corrected up to 1831, I have made the following extracts, by which it appears we then had as members the following:—Flag Officers, 210; Captains, 749; Commanders, 622; Lieutenants, 1361; Masters, 254; Physicians, 14; Surgeons, 272; Pursers, 369; Chaplains, 21; total number of members, 3866. From that period, I regret to say, up to January, 1836, by the Navy List the Society has lost the following members:—Flag Officers, 56; Captains, 98; Commanders, 90; Lieutenants, 106; Masters, 40; Physicians, 7; Surgeons, 34; Pursers, 52; Chaplains, 6; total, 489; or 363*l.* less annual subscriptions: it is true many members have joined, but not in that ratio. In making the preceding calculation, I am sorry to observe so many officers non-members of so truly a benevolent institution, and sincerely trust, that are seeg they will appear as members; we all ought to unite in the common cause, to alleviate the distresses of our brother officers, their widows and orphans.

19th July, 1836. Philanthropist.

ROYAL MARINES.

Sir,—I have read with more than ordinary satisfaction the different articles that have appeared in your papers relative to the Royal Marines, and, having served nearly a quarter of a century, the few observations I intend making perhaps you will kindly give a place in your columns, that, in addition to what has already been submitted to the public eye, the sentiments of the most neglected body of men now serving his Majesty may be known to the world;—I mean those Subalterns of Royal Marines that joined in the war, many of whom have now no other prospect, except Mr. Baunerman's proposition be carried into effect, but that of remaining Subalterns for many a long year to come. To speak of the unjust manner in which both Army and Navy promotions have been dealt with is but a repetition of what is already not only too well known, but too keenly felt; and when I recall the services of the Royal Marines, and trace back the zeal, loyalty, and bravery they have invariably evinced, I cannot but confess that my astonishment is great at beholding the inefficient state of the Corps, by the long servitude of most of its officers. That inefficiency is manifest even to those unacquainted with Military matters, for every person must be astonished who sees an fine a body of men officered by individuals, who, from bodily infirmities, are totally incapable of performing the necessary duties attached to their Commissions, and which in their youthful days they discharged with so much credit and honour to themselves. Begin, Sir, I beg, with the senior officers of the Corps, and show me how few, bearing the rank of a Field Officer, are equal to the duties attached to command. Men who have served so long, and the youngest about sixty years of age, cannot be expected to possess the same activity of mind and body as those who are not so aged, and whose zeal for the service is kept alive by the promotion due to their exertions. Truly the fault is not theirs, for man cannot last for ever; if such an active, well-disciplined and effective force be not well commanded, how can the country expect from them that service they would render if the officers were equally efficient with the men; common and daily observation must convince every person that a body of men ably commanded, are doubly useful to those who are not so; and though in no instance would the Royal Marines show, or have they shown less military knowledge than any troops in his Majesty's service; yet the country must bear in mind, that the soldier who is in constant communicating with the Officer partakes more or less of his dissatisfaction, an ingredient I have no hesitation in asserting has of late years shown itself strong in the Marine Corps, and which must daily gain ground if so much injustice is allowed to exist.

The complaints of the Officers are well-known, and will not such neglect have weight with the men? for it is a too well ascertained fact that soldiers are drilled to look upon the Officers as their protectors. The same argument for inefficiency is equally applicable to the Captains, and indeed, many of the old subalterns are not exempt; how can it be otherwise, when there are Field-Officers that have served 57 years, Captains 40, and First Lieutenants 28. If not remedied, perhaps, when too late, the Government may repent the manifest indifference with which they have treated this body of men: such is universally felt by the Officers of the Corps, and, to ascertain which, only inquire even if the young Officers now joining, with the neglect of the older serving ones immediately before them, will endure so much injustice. I confidently answer that they will not. Taught by experience they will no longer be content to forego the just rewards of their services, the spirit of discontent is strong, and if means be not taken to render justice the Government will not in future possess that active and enterprising class of Marine Officers, who so largely shared in the toils and dangers of the last war; let the country recollect who saved the fleet at the Mutiny, and also whether or not the Marines be considered as an arm of the Navy loose the zeal and loyalty of that arm, to many it would be considered a right arm, and what will become of the body if it is not too late to do justice to this Corps, by which the Government will preserve its services, but they must bear in mind that these are days when the sting of neglect is not only keenly felt, but acted upon. The time is fast approaching when every faithful subject may be wanted, and what will the country say if, by ingratitude, they have lost the attachment of that body known for ages past to have been firm and faithful. His Majesty, who was long their General, and who promised much, but alas has done nothing, ought well to feel and know the truth of those assertions. That those truths may be read by His Majesty's present advisers, and that those Subaltern Officers who entered the service in the war may be promoted, is the sincere wish of R. M.

PLAN FOR PROMOTION IN THE ROYAL NAVY.

Sir,—Having seen in your valuable paper of the 3[illegible] last, a proposition about the advancement of Captains and other officers of the Navy, in order to place some of the senior Captains on the retired flag list, that youeger ones may be brought forward, I beg to send [yee the followieg plao, and most conscientiously believe, that if his Majasty's Government will adopt it, meey old officers will leave the service, provided they receive a euffialent remuoaration for their long and faithful services in all parts of the world, maoy of them having fought in some of the most glorious battles of the last wer.

Allow me to hint two or three things in sepport of the plan of remuneration.

First—many gellant officers of the Artillery, Eogineers, aod Marloes, have beee permitted to sell their commissions, or, in other words, Goverament gave the Colonels aod Lieut.-Colonels 4,500*l.*, although they did not purchase their commissions; therefore, without the least jealousy or wroeg feelieg, we may bope to receive the same booo.

Messrs. Hums and Co. think to get rid of the old officers very fast by death; but let me tell him they are tough fellows, aod many may perhaps live to see him, and most of his economical friends, under ground.

The great improvement in the revenue this quarter of nearly a million and a half, will enabla a liberal Governmeet to get a grant from Parliament of 500,000*l.*, to ho laid out in purchesieg out old officers, at the followiog rate:—

|---|---|
| Captaies - - | £4500 |
| Commanders - - - | 3000 |
| Lieutenants - - - | 1500 |

Parliament voted twenty millions to purchase freedom for the West India Blacks; and surely a liberal Goverooment and Parliament will not think noe million too much to speed amongst those who not only assisted with the Army to save the coootry from the grasp of Napoleoo, but, let me add, the landed and funded property of every person in England, let his rank be what it may, is indebted to the Army and Navy for their families being in possession of their estates and money at this present moment; for had it not been for them, England would have been a province of France, and most probably the present possessors would not have had ae acre of land, or the funded proprietor a sixpeece of what he now holds, for property would have changed hands. The two services, under Providence, saved the country. What return do we get? We are stigmatised by the name, in and out of Parliament, of the "dead weight." Let Parliament voto for two years 500,000*l.* each year, and purchase out some of the "dead weight." They will save annually upon the half-pay of 200 Captains, at 200*l.* per aneum each, 40,000*l.*, besides deaths, should they purchase out the above number, which will make, with the addition of the deaths of Admirals, Captains, Commanders, and Lieutenants, a most excellent interest for the money voted; and also the saving upon the widows' pensions upon those officers who have been bought out must also be taken into calculatioo; and then, still adhering to the plan during Peace of promoting only one in three death vacancies, the list will be soon reduced to the numbers required for the service.

I cannot conclude this without making one remark upon a passage in your paper, viz. "If with a crowded list of Flag Officers, with all the experience acquired by active service, the then First Lord of the Admiralty asserted that he could not fix upon a successor qualified for the Mediterranean command, and that under this impression he prevailed upon the gallant Lord Collingwood to remain, aotil, worn out with fatigue and anxiety, he actually expired at his post, &c." The First Lord of the Admiralty, who made that remark, most grosely libelled the Flag Officers. Where was the gallant Exmouth, whom he did send out, and who conducted the Fleet so admirably after the death of the noble Collingwood? Where was Sir James Saumarez, Sir George Martin, Sir Sydney Smith, Sir Robert Stopford, Sir Benj. Halcombe, Sir John Warren, Sir Thomas Williams, Sir William Hargood, Sir Harry Neale, &c. &c. &c.? all fully capable of filling that command. If such a hint was thrown out, it was bad taste to do it; and unjust also. I could write a page or two to refute it, but it is now of no use. OBSERVER.

MILITARY PLURALITIES.

SIR,—The contents of Scrutator's letter in your Gazette of last week, cannot be too earnestly recommended to the notice of Parliament; indeed, it is high time that the system of favouritism and interest, which has so long existed at the Horse Guards, should be exposed, and that a more liberal course should be demanded on the part of those through whose votes the public money is expended. Although the number of years and nature of service of many officers is known at the Horse Guards, such is not the case with the public—it is unacquainted with the claims of individuals, whose merit, if generally known, would secure something like reward. I would therefore propose, in addition to what Scrutator suggests in the return of "Army and Navy Promotions," that the number of years and nature of service at home and abroad, of every General Officer in the Army, be stated; such a return would at once shew who they are who are fortunate enough to possess what Scrutator properly terms, Ministerial or Horse Guards' interest and those who, possessing merits far beyond their more fortunate companions, are looked over and neglected. Upon referring to your Gazette of 28th June, 1834, I find the leadieg article offers seme valuable remarks upon the total disregard of the recommendatinn of the t'ommittee on Army and Navy Appointments, that they should be subject to periodical change of holders. To the evidence given by the Duke of Wellington before the Commissioners (if I am not mistaken), his Grace states to the effect, that Regiments were given, or intended to be given, to those General Officers who had commanded regiments, and who, by promotion to the rank of Major General, became unattached. Whether the evidence of his Grace be borne out by the fact remains to be shown, by such a return as ought to be laid before Parliament. In the article I have referred to in your Gazette, the salary, allowances, &c., of the Quarter-Master-General amount to 2160*l.* per anoum, and yet he must needs also have a regiment, with perhaps 1000*l.* per annum, which Lord Howick, in the plenitude of his power (to quote Scrutator), would increase 800*l.* more, any 2000*l.*, so that the Quarter-Master-General's services are estimated at 4150*l.* per annum, while perhaps equal merit is rewarded by less than one-tenth part of that sum; the same remarks will apply to the other fortunates mentioned by Scrutator. I have been, perhaps, prolix on the subject, but, Sir, the exigency of the case requires consideration; the system is unjust, impolitic, and affords an opportunity for person's unacquainted with Military affairs, or inimical to the Service, to indulge in remarks such as are attributed to Mr. Hume. To conclude, let a more liberal and less exclusive system be henceforth adopted, and the recommendation of the Committee be carried into effect, and there will be less ground for complaining of Military Pluralities. Clifton, July 20th, 1836. DUX.

ON THE CIVIL APPOINTMENTS IN THE NAVY.

SIR,—I cannot suffer the correspondence to close between C. and myself, without assuring him that I appreciate, quite as highly as he can do, the distinguished services of Sir Frederick Maitland, and that, if I believed it possible that an Admiral could be permitted to keep his flag flying so long as he lived, because he filled the appointment of Superintendent of a Dock-Yard, I should at once say, that the present Superintendent at Portsmouth is well entitled to this extraordinary favour; but, as I considered that this could not by any chance happen, I did not include this gallant Officer's name amongst those which I referred to in my last letter. It is useless to continue a controversy of this kind, because neither of the parties are likely to be convinced by the arguments of the other; all, then I will add is, that I will fearlessly leave the question at issue to be decided by the Navy, or even the Nation at large, whether a dozen or two favoured individuals should be allowed to retain for their lives the lucrative situations in the gift of the Admiralty, to which, in the majority of the cases, private influence has alone caused them to be appointed, or, that the remainder of the five hundred, to a thousand equally deserving officers on the list of the Navy, who are eligible to these places, should, in succession, have a share in these boons.

The appointments I named as being those which ought hereafter to have a change of officers periodically—say at the end of every five years—are anything but sinecures, I readily admit; nor did I ever style them as such; but they are those which the Parliamentary Committee intended should be thus dealt with, and if the present Administration do not fulfil this recommendation, they will indeed be in practice, as has been stated in the House of Commons, a Tory Government under Whig banners. But I have a far higher opinion of the principles of his Majesty's present advisers, and will not for a moment believe that they mean to uphold those abuses which have too long been suffered to exist, through Tory misrule.

As to the arguments that it would be impolitic, and of injury to the public service, to remove at the end of every five years officers filling the different situations under the Admiralty, as before alluded to, this must at once fall to the ground, when we find Commanders-in-Chief of our fleets and squadrons are removed every three years: and again, that the Governors of our Colonies, and other situations of equally high responsibility and trust, are changed every five and six years. Surely, then, it will not be attempted to be contended for, that the appointments in our Dock-yards and Hospitals, and Coast-guard Service, are of more importance than these? But, as I have already said, it is useless further to enlarge on the subject. It is Justice the Navy ask for, and Justice they will, I confidently foretel, be sure to obtain from the Earl of Minto and his liberal colleagues. A.

ELDER BRETHREN OF THE TRINITY BOARD.

SIR,—The Right Honourable the liberal President of the Board of Trade, has most liberally stated, in the debate on Tuesday evening on the Light-house Bill, that Naval officers are unfit to fill any of these appointments, for two reasons, which he has condescended to make known; first, because he considers that private influence, and not merit, would govern the selection of those officers, even under a Whig Reform Government; and next, because he deems that Naval Captains would look down upon the former Commanders of merchant ships filling the situations of elder brethren! So much for Mr. Thomson's logic, which is about of a piece with his once purposed motion relative to a reduction in the duties on Russian Timber and Tallow,—whereby hangs a tale, which I could unfold, and perhaps will do so some fine day, if I witness any more of the Right Honourable Gentleman's extreme favour and good feeling towards the officers of His Majesty's Naval service. Q IN THE CORNER.

MR. DOMBRAIN AND CAPTAIN HANCHETT.

SIR,—Some months ago you were induced, from the representations made to you, to publish certain documents and statements put into your hands by John Martin Hanchett, and I took the liberty at that time to request you to suspend your opinion and that of your readers until a trial of which notice had then been served had taken place. It was not the fault of the prosecutor, Mr. Dombrain, that the trial was not brought on in March last; he used every endeavour to do so, but was met on the part of the defendant with every impediment the law could throw in his way. Mr. Dombrain applied for a special jury and for the cause to be tried in Kent,—this was opposed, the venue sought to be changed to Middlesex and before a common jury. It was, however, ruled by the Judge in Chambers, that Mr. Dombrain's application should be granted on the ground that if any influence did exist it was more likely to be on the side of the defendant's publishers of a newspaper of most extensive circulation, rather than on the part of a gentleman who had not been resident in the county for twenty years. An application was then made on the plea of the absence through illness of a material witness, J. M. Hanchett, for postponement; this, after some delay, was granted, and the trial postponed until the present Assizes at Maidstone: it accordingly came on there on Tuesday, the 19th inst., before Lord Abinger and a special jury, when a verdict was returned for the plaintiff with damages and costs. In order that you may perceive how anxious I am, as an old and attached friend of Mr. Dombrain, to put you in possession of the whole of this trial, I have directed the paper in which it will appear (for it is not yet published) to be sent to you, and which I know will contain the particulars of the trial. Far be it from me to exult in the defeat or the degradation of a man who once held the distinguished rank of a Post-Captain in the British Navy, and Companion of the Honourable Order of the Bath, with whom, (as Mr. Serjeant Spankie observed upon J. M. Hanchett's admitting that he was a party to what he considered a dishonourable act and breach of public trust,) if honour and patriotism is not to be found, where are we to look for it; but I may, Sir, lament and mourn over the debased and degraded exhibition that unfortunate man made of himself in Court.

I have only in conclusion to observe, that as the defendant, who must suffer, is a woman, and who received intelligence of the death of her eldest son during the time she was in Court, Mr. Dombrain insisted it might be distinctly understood he sought for no vindictive damages, but merely a clearance of his character from the aspersions thrown upon it by J. M. Hanchett. As you, Sir, gave circulation to the statements I have alluded to, I trust you will be equally ready to give the refutation to them which this trial affords, and thus place the character of my friend in that position which it merits in the service with which he is so closely connected, and in which it is his first and highest ambition it should stand, as it deserves to be, unsullied.

London, 20th July. A MAN OF KENT.

[We insert this letter, as our invariable wish is to give every individual "fair play." We also publish the trial, and shall have an opportunity of offering a few comments, with reference to our former observations and the present state of the case.—ED.]

BADGE OF MERIT.

SIR,—Independently of any consideration in a pecuniary point of view, that Government may have considered necessary at any time to have bestowed on an Officer for his long and faithful services, I have often thought it strange that some mark of approbation was not also given at the commencement of peace, to the Officers of the Navy and Army generally, as a national gift, for their conduct during the war. Some device, for instance, "St. George and the Dragon," would have been a very appropriate one, and the whole design not to have exceeded an inch either in height or length, and to have been worn with a ribband, in the manner of the Waterloo medal. I make no doubt that something of the kind was contemplated, but the numbers that would have been included in such an honour at the time, perhaps caused the idea to be abandoned. As there have been, however, great changes since that period, it is to be hoped that something in this way may now be taken into favourable consideration, with an observance of the axiom, "better late than never," towards those who have been thirty-five, or even thirty years in the Service, without causing any great expense, as the device that has been suggested may be executed in bronze, which would be prized as much by those who received the same, as if made of the most precious metal.

To Readers and Correspondents.

Most certainly we have not received one of the letters alluded to by "Cato."—We are sorry our note was not sufficiently explicit for the "Searcher after Truth:" we can only repeat that Military Officers who retire from the service cannot obtain brevet rank.—The letter of "A. C." in this day's paper will show our correspondent in the "West" that he is misinformed, and that the story is not "strictly true."—We shall be most happy at all times to hear from "A. C."—Many thanks to our kind friend the "Old Captain" for his efforts: his persuasions may have effect with the party at some future period.—"An Old Worn-out Naval Officer" has our esteem: his suggestions will always receive due notice.—We have not seen the attack on Mr. Perrot: "R. N." should send his reply to the Editor of the Paper in question; but we cannot interfere further without a very strong case is made out in answer to the opinions lately expressed in the House of Commons.

Naval and Military Gazette.

GENERAL EVANS' accounts of the movements of his Legion at Fontarabia will be found in our columns; and we imagine that, though this untoward, miserable affair is described as a reconnoissance, it will settle opinians as to the military talents of the General. According to the statements received, his force consisted of between five and six thousand men, supported by His Majesty's steamers, Phœnix, Salamander, and Comet, in company with the Isabel II., Reyna Goberdanora, James Watt, and Mazeppa; whilst the ruinous old town of Fontarabia was garrisoned by about two hundred men, and about three thousand Carlists were collected in defence of it. Before this inferior force General Evans appears to have ignominiously retreated.

As respects a reconnoissance, we must add that we have seen it stated, that the night previous to the attack General Evans, in a Spanish boat, reconnoitred the place, and, on his return, assured his friends, "that the next day Fontarabia and Irun would be in his possession!!"

Though we have never been advocates for this Legion, we have invariably reprobated the unnational feeling which has led party scribes continually to revile a force composed of our countrymen; but we confess we feel shame that the British name should be tarnished by enterprises conducted without skill or energy.

An Officer of the Legion, and a correspondent of the Globe, thus some up the issue of this affair:—

"The result of the whole was, that they were obliged to retreat upon Passages, achieving no advantage; on the contrary, we left our ditches and entrenchments, the houses we occupied on the lines—in fact, all we had been labouring at for the last six weeks, save our fortified points, to the dispasition and mercy of our Carlist friends, who, as in duty bound, burned and destroyed every particle of them all. Hardly had the 3d and 4th regts. marched from the houses they occupied when the Carlists succeeded in enveloping the whole in flames. The arrival of this intelligence at San Sebastian, spread a gloom over every countenance: and its effect upon the feelings of the men, who were prepared to engage willingly in any, the most hazardous, enterprise, rather than lead the lives they have done, has been most discouraging. They naturally say to themselves—here we have lost much, gained nothing, and have jeopardised the possession of that which was obtained at the expense of so much of our comrades' blood. What is now to be done is a mystery."

Another writes:—

"San Sebastian, July 14.

"I write to you in gloomy spirits. News of an unfavourable nature press thick upon each other. It matters not, from east, west, north, or south—they come; and all tend to dispirit, discourage, and create a doubt in the mind when and how this warfare is to terminate. Evans is very unwell; there is a talk of his going to England. The Legion must return to England soon, or England must reinforce it, and that immediately."

THE subject of "Naval Promotion," to which we invited the attention of correspardents in our Gazette of the 9th, has, as we expected, produced several communications, all which we shall notice at a proper opportunity. In the mean time, as the writer of a letter, signed Observer, remarks upon our quotation of the First Lord of the Admiralty's opinion, respecting the qualifications of the Flag Officers of 1808 for the Mediterranean command, and instances the names of several who were, in his view, eligible for that important trust; we will show how these officers were actually disposed of, as the best means of strengthening the opinion we have already given, that the promotion of Flag Officers should not depend absolutely on seniority, but that special advancement should occur at the pleasure of the Sovereign, when the merits of an officer point him out as the best qualified for any particular duty.

Our correspondant observes, "Where was the gallant Exmouth? Where was Sir James Saumarez, Sir George Martin, Sir Sidney Smith, Sir Robert Stopford, Sir Benjamin Halcombe, Sir John Warran, Sir Thomas Willieme, Sir William Hargood, Sir Harry Neale?" &c., &c., &c. The gallant Exmouth, then Sir Edward Pellew, Vice-Admiral of the Blue, was Commander-in-Chief in the East Indies; Sir James Saumarez, ditto ditto, held the important command of the Baltic; George Martin, a Rear-Admiral of the White, had his flag on board the Canopus in the Mediterranean; Sir Sidney Smith, ditto ditto, at Brazils, on the delicate service of removing Don John of Portugal; the Honourable Robert Stopford, Rear-Admiral of the Blue (having only obtained his flag the same year), had it flying on board the Spencer in the Channel fleet; Sir Benjamin Halcombe (meaning we suppose Captain, afterwards Sir Benjamin Hallowell) being upwards of forty from the top of the list of Captains, commanded Le Tigre in the North Sea; Sir John B. Warren, then Vice-Admiral of the White, was Commander-in-Chief in North America; Sir Thomas Williams, then a Captain, commanded the Neptune in the Channel fleet; William Hargood was Captain of the Northumberland in the Mediterranean; and Sir Harry Neale, also a Captain, filled the important station of Captain of the Fleet to Lord Gambier, who had his flag on board the Ville de Paris, in command of the Channel fleet.

In this list of gallant names, more or less distinguished, which our correspandent has jumbled together, it will be seen that only three officers of suitable rank, to command a fleet of twenty sail of the line, namely, the Vice-Admirals Pellew, Saumarez, and Warrenare mentianed, and these filled important duties elsewhere; the others were Rear-Admirals and Captains: and it affords no small proof of the discrimination of the Admiralty of that day, to find the whole of these officers, whom our correspondent has selected, actively employed. But there were thirty-four flags flying in 1808, and, of the remainder unemployed, many as distinguished as some of those quoted; still a review of the unemployed Vice-Admirals on the list, and the various qualifications which were necessary to be combined in the official trust of the Mediterranean Fleet, when the state of Spain, Turkey, &c., at that period is considered, might excuse the First Lord's anxiety for an officer who had performed his various duties, both professional and diplomatic, so ably and satisfactorily as Lord Collingwood had done, continuing in the command; and the necessity for thus sacrificing one of the best officers in the Navy is a proof, and a very strong proof, of the evil of that system which prevents the Government availing itself of distinguished talent on account of the impediments which exist to bringing it forward under the present regulations. Let us suppose for instance, that it had been deemed advisable, on account of some singular and universally admitted talent, such as Nelson possessed, and in order to instil confidence into the minds of our allies, to have appointed one of the Captains our correspondent has named to the Mediterranean command. We will take Sir Benjamin Hallowell. In order that he should reach even the bottom of the list of flags it would have been necessary to promote, and of course to shelve the following Captains, all senior to him at the time and then in command of ships:—Charles Boyles, Sir Thomas Williams, John Laugharne, William Hargood, John Ferrier, Sir C. Hamilton, Henry Curzon, Oliver Osborn, Sir H. Neale, Sir J. S. Yorke, Hon. A. K. Legge, Francis Fayerman, T. F. Fremantle, Sir F. Laforey, and P. C. Durham. Now, surely in the above fifteen names we recognise many whose retirement would have been a serious loss to the Navy, to say nothing of the number of Flag Officers whom it would likewise have been necessary to shelve, and if this evil has been experienced in former times, which we believe to be the case, we argue that it would be politic and wise to establish a regulation which, under peculiar circumstances, would enable the Admiralty to select the best officers without reference to their standing on the list, and, in consideration of any eminent service, or extraordinary skill, or reputation in their profession, to advance them to superior rank, where they would have an opportunity of exercising it for their country's benefit regardless of the progressive system now so rigidly adhered to. That there are means of effecting this desirable object we believe; and we think, moreover, that another ten years will place the infirmities of the Flag Officers, as well as the majority of the senior Captains destined to succeed them in such a point of view as to render an alteration of the system imperative; in the mean time the free discussion of this subject is sure to be attended with good.

THERE was an observation, which fell from the President of the Board of Trade in the debate on the Light-House Bill last week, which we know has been read with great dissatisfaction by a large number of officers of His Majesty's Navy, who had hoped, with the rest of their gallant brethren, that the promise of a better era had now arrived and that under the word REFORM the shameful abuses of former times had for ever passed away. We allude particularly to the abuse of patronage in the Navy, and which Mr. Poulett Thomson would seem to apprehend was as likely to be renewed under future Governments, as it had been in the worst days of Borough corruption. The remark we refer to is that wherein the Right Honourable Gentlemen stated, in reply to the recommendation of Mr. Warburton, that the Trinity Board should be composed of a certain number of Captains of the Royal Navy,—"that he was greatly afraid if this were done, that, instead of those officers being chosen for their fitness and proper qualifications for such appointments, it would wholly rest upon the private interest of Captain A. or Captain B."

A declaration of this kind coming from a leading ember of His Majesty's reforming Administration s damped many a worthy and manly spirit, hich had fondly hoped that the words of a former hancellor of the Exchequer (Lord Althorp) were deed to be realised under the present liberally-rmed Government, and that henceforward "pa-onage was in truth to be at an end."

The best palliative that Mr. Poulett Thomson n now apply to soften the unfortunate state-ent which he has made, will be to recommend a immediate appointment of half a dozen Naval aptains, and as many old Naval Masters, to con-itute part of the Elder Brethren, in lieu of the norary and useless members at present bearing is title.

With reference to the observations we made st week, as to the real cause of the return to ngland of the Captain of the Dublin, we have ince received information, from a quarter on hich we can implicitly rely, that satisfies us o health of that officer was the only and real ause of his return. The greatest cordiality arked the short period of his service in that ip, and proofs of respect and esteem were rongly indicated on the termination of his com-and. We sincerely regret to add, that Captain Villes's health is still most precarious, accom-panied with almost a total loss of the use of both ands. Capt. Tait, who has succeeded Capt. W., ommanded the Spartiate with Sir G. Hamond's ag before the arrival of the Dublin on the South American station.

The value of the remarks on Naval as well as on Military affairs, which have appeared from time o time in this Journal, is best proved by the ttention which has been given to those sugges-ions by the different branches of His Majesty's Government to whom such observations particu-arly related: an attention which no other Journal can boast of.

This fact is again manifested, just now, by the uccess which has attended a measure recom-mended by us some eighteen months or more ago, and subsequently repeated in our columns, as a reference to our pages will confirm, in which we urged the employment of steam-vessels in the Chan-nel for the suppression of smuggling, and ex-pressed a conviction that this system would, at a cost of a few thousands a-year only, do more towards the annihilation of the contraband trade carried on from French and Dutch Ports with our Coasts, than all the Coast Guard Service put together, at fifty times the expense to the nation.

A letter which we have seen from Poole estab-lishes the correctness of our views on this point, as one steam-vessel alone, it seems, has caused the loss of full six hundred casks of spirits within a very short period. The following is the statement con-tained in it:—

"The experiment of steam cruisers for the prevention of smuggling has succeeded beyond expectation. It has been ascertained from undoubted authority, that within the last month more than 600 tubs of foreign spirits have been destroyed by the smugglers upon seeing the Vulcan steamer, as they at once upon getting sight of her have thrown overboard their cargoes in Mid-channel, where they can never be recovered, in order to save the vessel and crew from capture."

It is then to be hoped that this plan will be fol-lowed up, and further we trust that, our remarks having thus been proved to be correct and just, our other propositions regarding the Coast Guard Service will, at no distant date, be found to merit the due consideration of their Lordships at the Admiralty Board.

We have already given at some length, in for-mer Numbers, our opinions on the necessity of Corporal Punishment, but the interest of the sub-ject induces us again to turn to a topic which so vitally concerns the discipline of the Navy and Army. Since our article, published in No. 141 of this paper, much has been said and written both for and against this mode of enforcing disci-pline, and the Military public has been furnished with the opinions of the Duke of Wellington on the one side, and the principal Prussian authori-ties on the other. We will not deny that the sen-timents of such high personages have great weight on a subject of this nature, but must still candidly state that we hold the same opinions we promulgated nine months back; we still think, that although the total abolition of Corporal Punishment would be impolitic and dangerous, yet that means might be taken to protect men of good character from this infliction, and that our soldiers would soon be brought to pride themselves on their exemption from this mode of punishment.

It will be recollected by our readers that the outline of the plan proposed by us was, to have three classes in the service; the first class to be composed of one-third of our best chartered men, receiving one shilling and three pence per day; the second to receive the daily pay of one shilling, and to consist of recruits and soldiers not otherwise classed; and the third with the pay of eightpence a day, to be made up of all men de-graded by sentence of a Court-Martial, from either of the other classes, who, while serving in this class, should be liable to Corporal Punish-ment. In most regiments we find a number of men of steady, clean, and orderly habits, whose exemplary conduct merits every reward and en-couragement, but who are not sufficiently active and intelligent to make good Non-commissioned officers; these are the men we wish to see placed in our proposed first class, and we think that Commanding Officers of regiments will agree with us in saying that such men are well deserving of some increase of pay. We are well aware that first offences are now seldom punished corporally, and the knowledge of this fact causes us to think that no inconvenience will be felt by taking from Courts-Martial a power they so rarely exercise, while, by the alteration, we shall have this good end, that we shall engender that pride in the sol-dier which is most likely to conduce to his good behaviour; nor would any individual be able to flatter himself that he enjoyed an impunity for crime, for should he of good character fall into error, the first consequence of his offence would be, to render him for any future dereliction of duty liable to all the severities of Corporal Pun-ishment, and he would know that nothing but a long course of good conduct would restore him to his former position in the service. We should thus give protection to the man who is only acci-dentally drawn into crime, and make a marked distinction between him and the deliberately bad, giving to the former the full benefit of his pre-vious good conduct, while the latter would be made to feel that means still existed of coercing the vicious and disorderly.

It was once customary in the Army for Courts-Martial to sentence Non-commissioned Officers to be reduced and flogged for any serious offence they might commit; we believe that this mode of punishment for this class of persons has entirely ceased. In the Navy it was usual to flog the Petty Officers without dis-rating them, until the practice was discontinued by the directions of the Admiralty; and we well recollect that on the receipt of these orders many officers of the Royal Navy thought that the regulations which thus limited the power of the Captain, would be injurious to the discipline of the service. How that opinion proved correct? Are the Petty officers of the Navy, or the Non-commissioned Officers of the Army, less efficient now than they were while they considered themselves subject to the lash? If officers of sufficient experience to compare the states of the services during the two periods, would give us the results of their observations, they would materially aid us in determining to what extent the principle of action adopted towards our Non-commissioned and Petty Officers may be safely extended to the men; for ourselves, we think that none of the evils anticipated have re-sulted from our more liberal conduct to the indi-viduals in question, and we conceive that the same feelings which induce them to do their duty faithfully, will also operate on the minds of all but the very dregs of the service, and cause them to feel that they are not so degraded as to be influenced only by the fear of corporeal suffering.

The time is fast approaching when the desti-nations of the 18th, 82nd, 33rd, and 35th Regi-ments must be determined on at the Horse Guards, and the eyes of the public in general, and of every Military man, are fixed on the Commander-in-Chief with a confident expectation, that he will give, in the distribution of these regiments for relief, an earnest of the equitable system in future to be pursued towards the corps on foreign service. We have heard that Lord Hill's wish is to relieve one regiment from India by sending out either the 18th or 82nd direct, leaving the other to proceed with convicts to New South Wales. The 33rd and 35th, having been last from the West Indies, can-not with justice be sent to India while the 18th and 82nd are available, the former of which last served in the Mediterranean, the latter in our most healthy colony, the Mauritius. These regiments having enjoyed good stations when last abroad can, with perfect justice to them and the service, be sent to India. On the other hand, the 33rd and 35th having only returned in 1832 from the West Indies, should obtain a healthy station, and, as the 18th and 82nd can only relieve one regiment direct from India (a corps being required for New South Wales), it is to be hoped that Lord Hill will re-member that the 54th and 16th Regiments have, as well as the 45th, been abroad since the year 1819. There is a good and healthy station to which the 33rd and 35th might be sent, and from which two regiments could be sent on to India without incon-venience; we allude to the Cape of Good Hope and to the 72nd and 75th Regiments. The former of these corps had certainly a fair title to the name by which it is best known, "The Cape Guards." It was relieved at the Cape, we believe, by the 6th in 1821, and, after remaining at home till 1828 it returned to its comfortable barracks in Cape Town; it is, therefore, but fair that it should com-plete the remainder of its foreign service in India unless it be intended to recal it from the Cape once more in 1838, and, after a home service of four or five years, once more to send it back to its Dutch demes and old acquaintances the boors and black.

We would wish to press upon the notice of Lord Hill, that he has but one regiment which he can send abroad in 1837, unless he sends out regiments which have returned so late as 1834 from foreign stations. The 46th is the only regiment which can be fairly sent abroad in 1837, for it did not return from India until 1833, and ne it cannot with justice be ordered back to India wo earnestly entreat his Lordship to make such arrangements for the four regimente, now at his disposal, as will leave the regiments, which left England in 1821, and which are serving in India, the next to be relieved via New South Wales. By effecting the relief of the 15th, 54th, and 16th, by three regiments now available, his Lordship will be enabled, in 1837, to send out two cavelry regiments to relieve the 11th and 13th Light Dragoons, which have also been in India since 1819. As no infantry regiment can be sent next year to India, in consequence of the 46th being the only available regiment, the opportunity seems peculiarly to point out the advantage of relieving the three infantry regiments of 1819 this year, and the two cavalry corps of 1819 next year. Unless this, or some similar arrangement, be speedily made all the promises we heard from men, whose sincerity we doubt as little as their zeal to serve their personal friends, must be broken. Sore indeed must these individuals feel that the evidence given by them in their official capacities should not have been borne out by the performance of those promises to the Army, on which they confidingly gave their testimony. Fifteen years were to be the period of service in India. We simply state the fact, and ask the question, "have the regiments been relieved in fifteen years?" The answer we know must be, "No; the 20th, 45th, 54th, and 16th, as also the 11th and 13th Light Dragoons, have been abroad since 1819, and not one of those corps has yet reached its native land."

The squadron assembled at Spithead, under Sir Charles Paget, has been ordered to sea to cruise to the westward for six weeks. It is not certain whether they will touch at any Port, and the Admiral and Officers have laid in three months' stock, the ships having four months' provisions. The Surveyor of the Navy, Sir W. Symonds, has accepted the invitation of the Honourable Captain Bouverie, of the Vanguard, to go to sea in that ship, and he will probably remain on board for a week or ten days, and then avail himself of one of the tenders to return to his official duties. Considerable interest is excited respecting the qualities of the different ships. The Asia is one of the finest of her class, and a known good sailer, provided the same trim can be preserved as she had in the Mediterranean. The Vanguard and Bellerophon have never been to sea, and there is nothing remarkable in the construction of the others. The ships have latterly received some very good men to fill the Petty Officers' ratings, and although not so well manned as may be desired, the crews are infinitely superior to those procured during the war, and, by the end of the cruise, the ships will be equal to any service for which they may be required.

The German chapel, which adjoins Marlborough House, is also being submitted to extensive alterations and improvements.

The Southwark meeting on Monday passed a resolution approving of the conduct of Mr. Harvey, and expressing a hope that he would not persist in retiring from the representation of the Borough; and Mr. Harvey, in return, said he should set his revilers an instance of disinterestedness. On Monday a gentleman arrived at Hatchett's Hotel, in a chariot and four, from Oxford, and on his proceeding to his bed-room, followed by the waiter, he drew a small pistol from his side pocket, and attempted to destroy himself; but fortunately the percussion cap had fallen off, which providentially saved his life. His excited feelings were calmed by a passionate flood of tears, after which, with a friend whom he had sent for, he proceeded on his route to the Continent.

A melancholy accident occurred at Boulogne-sur-Mer on 13th inst., Lieut.-Col. The following characteristic account of the two Representatives of his Majesty in Canada, is given in an extract of a letter from a very intelligent gentleman of that country, to his friend in England. It is hardly necessary to observe that the writer is a Tory:—"Lord G . . . settle matters with a wannion! He is a poor, weak, imbecile, incapable noodle, who has rendered 'confusion worse confounded;' has lost the British party without gaining the French, and will probably end in giving John Bull the trouble of conquering Lower Canada. ## BRITISH AUXILIARY LEGION.

Attack on Fontarabia.—General Evans in his dispatch to the Spanish Ministers of war, states, that in consequence of having received information from several quarters that the Carlists, in expectation of a movement of the Anglo-Christino force upon Fontarabia, had dismantled the defences of that town, and left it in but a very scanty garrison, who would abandon it on the first attack, he resolved to occupy it, being convinced of the importance of ousting the enemy from a point through which they had been so long receiving abundant supplies of every thing they wanted from France. But, on reconnoitring the place, he found that the information given to him of its defenceless state was false, for that the walls, though old, were of considerable thickness and that the breaches made in them had been built up with solid stone walls, loopholed and crenelated; so that to attack it with any certainty of success it would be necessary to set down before it for two or three days and batter it with much heavier metal than that of the light guns and field howitzers which he had brought with him; that to undertake this protracted operation would have given the enemy time to bring down the whole force of the rebels upon him, which might have compromised, if not the safety of the Legion, at least some portion of these extended lines which it had cost so much of exertion and bloodshed to gain possession of. Under these circumstances, he ordered the advance movement to be withdrawn, and led the troops back to their former positions, which orders were executed with remarkable intelligence, coolness, and military talent, by the officers, and the most orderly conduct and firmness on the part of the men. In a subsequent part of the despatch he points out the very remarkable manner in which his orders were carried into effect by Brigadier Gen. Shaw and Colonel Fitzgerald, also commanding brigade.

From the Globe.—It appears that Gen. Evans determined upon making a demonstration towards the Bidassoa, and, if he found it practicable without undertaking a siege, to drive the insurgents from the fortress of Fontarabia, and re-establish her Catholic Majesty's authority. The squadron under Lord John Hay's order proceeded along the coast for the purpose of co-operating with her Catholic Majesty's forces, which crossed the harbour of Passages during the night of the 10th Instant and advanced on Fontarabia by the coast road; a part of the marine battalion accompanied them; and his Majesty's steam-vessels, Phœnix, Salamander, and Comet anchored close off the bar of the Bidassoa. Two guns from the fortress of Fontarabia immediately opened their fire on his Majesty's vessels, which was promptly returned, but at too great a distance to produce any material effect. At nine o'clock, A.M., part of her Catholic Majesty's forces descended the heights, and had nearly reached the town, when it appeared a considerable force of insurgents (at least 9,000) had assembled to oppose their advance. At 11 the insurgents were attacked by one division of her Catholic Majesty's army, and after an obstinate resistance were driven from their position which enabled her Catholic Majesty's forces to take possession of the heights immediately above the town. The Lieut.-Gen. considered it impracticable to breach the walls without heavy artillery, and not considering it prudent to remain in the position he then occupied, towards evening decided to withdraw his troops to the heights he had left in the forenoon, which was accomplished in the most perfect order, and on the morning of the 12th the army returned to Passages. The gallantry and steadiness displayed by her Catholic Majesty's forces who were engaged on this occasion, do them the highest credit. Their loss amounts to nine killed, 108 wounded (most of them slightly), and 30 missing. From the most authentic information the insurgents' loss was considerable—350 killed and wounded, including one chief and two superior officers. As soon as the troops ned to Passages the steam-vessels withdrew from lr anchorage. Some of the men taken prisoners by Carlists are reported to bava been shot after the action Irun, and it was said that two of them were marines Lord John Hey's squadron. There is, however, no ndation for this statement. The marines were ax-ed to a heavy fire during part of the actlnn; and both cers and men behaved with admirable coolness, nf ich the most flattering testimony wes given by her tholie Majesty's officers. They lost two men killed, had threa severely end eight slightly wounded, but e were missing.

Return of casualties In action with the enemy near ntarabia, on 11th July, 1836:—British killed 9, anish 2, total 11; British wounded 52, Spanish 46, l 98; British missing 20. Wounded.—Lieut.-Col. ss, 6th Regt., severely; Capt. Calder, 6th ditto, htly; Lieut. De Backer, 6th, slightly; Lieut. Doyle, , slightly; Lieut.-Col. Beatson, 10th Regt., severely; eut. Extract of a letter from a British officer, dated Heights Arnitza, 7th July.—"The Legion is highly dissatis-; the best officers have all left. Col. Le Marchant, rd W. Paget, and Col. Hicks, have gone home through nce. The Royal Tar takes to-day Col. O'Connell, l. Fitzgerald, Col. Kirby, Capt. Fitzgerald, and Quar-master M'Namara, and all would go from disgust but t General Evans finds it convenient to raise obstruc-ns to further leave, and now insinuates that the term service for which the officers and men entered is not r its termination. How this will be settled I can-say; but this is certain, that three regiments talk of ing down their arms if they do not receive their ar-rs of pay. Captains Morgan and Hornbrook, Lieuts. right, Langford, and Churchill, joined the Marine talion yesterday from England.

From a Correspondent.—The Glasgow steamer, Capt. eclead, arrived yesterday in the river from St. Sebas-n, which place she left on 17th inst., with despatches m Gen. de Lacy Evans to the Spanish agents in this ntry. She landed at Portsmouth twenty-five officers o have resigned their commissions in the British xiliary Legion, in consequence of the non perform-e of the contract entered into by General Alava when nbassador in London, in June, 1835, on the part the Spanish Government and Gen. Evans. She e brought over 280 men invalided and wounded, l others, who have claimed to be removed to their na-e places, having only enlisted for one year, which term ired last month. Nearly two thousand more men e put in the same claim to Gen. Evans, and are ex-ted home in the course of a month or six weeks, or as n as proper conveyances can be obtained for them. number of officers have sent in their resignations to Commander-in-Chief, which have not been accepted, the ground that they were to remain out as long as the r should continue. Many of these, however, notwith-nding this objection, have taken "French leave," and returning to England, through France. Gen. Evans, ce the untoward event at Fontarabia, has been con-ed to his apartments, and it is generally expected that will be compelled to resign in consequence of his se-re indisposition through over-anxiety and fatigue in his lorn cause.

Passengers by the Glasgow steamer—Brig. Gen. De cy Evans; Lieut.-Col. Lousck; Captains Erskine d Miller; Lieuts. Hamilton, Kemp, and Synge; Dr. dall; left the service. Lieut.-Cols. We find with regret, that the authenticity of the nguinary "General Order" issued by General Evans, placed beyond a doubt. We have seen two versions, t the differences are not material.

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Monday, 18th July.—The Swansea Harbour Bill and the Prisoners' Counsel Bill were read a third time and passed.—Their Lordships proceeded to take into consideration the reasons of the Commons for dissenting from the amendments made by their Lordships in the Municipal Amendment Bill. After several verbal amendments had been agreed to, the Lord Chancellor proposed that the amendments regarding the mode of choosing a mayor should also be agreed to. The Duke of Wellington and Lord Ellenborough opposed the motion, and Lord Melbourne supported it. Contents, 88; Non-contents, 63; Majority, 30. The other amendments were agreed to.

Tuesday, 19th July.—A conference was held with the Commons on the amendments made by them in the Municipal Corporations Act Amendment Bill, when the Commons' reasons were given in, and ordered to be taken into consideration.—The amendments of the Commons on the Tithe Commutation Bill were then considered, and several new clauses were added to the Bill.

Wednesday, 20th July.—The Constabulary Force (Ireland) Bill, Turnpike (Ireland) Bill, Cape of Good Hope Offences Bill, were read a third time and passed.

Thursday, 21st July.—The Marquess of Londonderry moved, that there might be a delay of any legislative measures that could affect the spiritual interests of the diocese of Durham; and that a select committee might be granted to inquire into the statements made in the petition from Darlington. The Archbishop of Canterbury, Viscount Melbourne, and the Bishop of Gloucester opposed the motion, and the Noble Marquess ultimately withdrew it.—On the bringing up of the report on the Parochial Assessments Bill, the Archbishop of Canterbury brought forward an amendment; but after some discussion he withdrew it in favour of the following, moved by the Duke of Richmond:—"Provided that nothing in this Act contained should alter the proportion or principles on which different kinds of lands or hereditaments are rated under the existing law." Agreed to.

Friday, 22d July.—The Greenwich Pier Bill was read a third time and passed.—The Bishop of Exeter presented a petition from the Clergy of the Archdeaconry of Wells, praying for protection for the Irish Church. The Right Rev. Prelate also spoke of a personal matter connected with the last Report from the Commissioners of Education in Ireland, and expressed his regret that the Report had been brought forward at so late a period of the session. The remarks called forth a long and interesting discussion, in which several Noble Lords took part.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, 18th July.—Mr. Cundy was examined at the bar of the House. He disclaimed all knowledge of the subject-matter of the accusation against Sir Charles Burrell, of having been induced to support Stephenson's line by receiving 15,000*l.* for land not worth 200*l.* He had merely repeated a report in the Brighton Gazette. The answers were no doubt at variance with the statements in Mr. Brnett's letter, who represented Mr. Cundy as having positively charged Sir C. Burrell with the bribery in question; but having declared that he did not make use of the expressions imputed to him, it was thought unnecessary to proceed further; and Sir T. Fowell Buxton having moved that Mr. Cundy be called in to hear the letter of Mr. Benett read, an amendment was moved by Lord John Russell to proceed to the order of the day, which was carried on a division by 114 to 56. —Sir R. Inglis inquired whether a clause was to be introduced into the Stamp Duties Bill to secure to the proprietors of newspapers the copyright of articles of intelligence, leading articles, and parliamentary debates. The Chancellor of the Exchequer had received the sketch of a Bill in reference to it, which he had put into the hands of the law officers of the Crown. He was anxious to secure to these persons the sole benefit of the talents and means they expended upon their publications; but he saw many objections to the plan submitted to him.—The House went into Committee on the Stamp Duties Bill, in which the Chancellor of the Exchequer explained certain changes he proposed making in the Bill. The object is to secure the revenue, by facilitating the suppression of the unstamped press, without imposing unnecessary restrictions on printers.—The subject of the die, or distinctive stamp, was brought forward by Mr. Grote, and supported by both sides of the House, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer was ultimately obliged to concede the die.—On the third reading of the Paper Duties Bill, Mr. T. Duncombe objected to the 16th clause, which went to deprive Messrs. Stanley and Marshall of rights which they now enjoyed by virtue of a patent taken out some years ago; and moved as an amendment that the clause be omitted. The Chancellor of the Exchequer contended that the omission of this clause would operate to the disadvantage of publishers. The amendment was lost by a majority of 34.—The Lighthouses Bill was read a third time.—Lord Palmerston obtained leave to bring in a bill for a guarantee of the loan to the King of Greece.

Tuesday, 19th July.—The Hungerford and Lambeth Suspension Bridge Bill was read a third time and passed.—On the motion for the further consideration of the Medway Navigation Bill being moved, Sir Edward Knatchbull moved that it be further considered that day three months. After a short discussion the amendment was carried.—The order of the day for the further consideration of the report on the Charitable Trustees Bill having been read, Mr. V. Smith stated that the object of this Bill was to supply the deficiency in the Municipal Corporation Act, relative to the administration of charitable trusts. Sir R. Peel said that the question was, whether they would consent to continue the temporary arrangement which at present existed for the administration of these charitable funds for a brief space longer, until they should be able to come fully prepared to provide a suitable permanent arrangement, or whether they should finally and irrevocably adopt the principle of popular election, leading as it would to an indissoluble connection between local political bodies and the trustees of these charitable funds. He would prefer the temporary arrangement, and he trusted the Bill would not be passed. A long discussion ensued, after which the House divided on the bringing up of the report—for the motion, 133; against it, 98; majority in favour of the Bill, 45.—Lord J. Russell moved the order of the day for the third reading of the Established Church Bill. Mr. Hume hoped that the Bill would not be persevered in this session, and moved, as an amendment, that it be read that day six months. Mr. Lennard seconded the amendment. Sir R. Inglis supported the amendment. A debate ensued, which was ultimately adjourned till Friday.

Wednesday, 20th July.—The Speaker took the chair at the usual hour, but only thirty-one Members being present the House was adjourned.

Thursday, 21st July.—Mr. Baines gave notice that on Tuesday next he should move that whenever a Member rises to observe to the House that 40 Members are not present, a quarter of an hour shall be allowed to elapse from that time, if necessary, for the assembling of Members, before Mr. Speaker counts the House, in order to ascertain the number of Members present.—Lord Darlington wished to know whether, as no report was to be made by the Agricultural Committee, any general discussion on the subject would take place. A long and animated conversation ensued. Looking at the conflicting opinions of the various members of the committee, it was an almost impossible task for that body to come to any coherent decision, and it was therefore better to make no report at all. The report (i. e. the evidence only) was then laid on the table.—Mr. Hume moved an address, praying, that in order to obtain plans for the new Houses of Parliament, his Majesty may be pleased to direct a further competition in designs, without limiting designs to any particular style of architecture, and confining them to a certain fixed sum; and which designs may be publicly exhibited previous to the appointment of a committee by his Majesty to examine and report thereon. A long discussion ensued, but ultimately Mr. Hume allowed his motion to be negatived without pressing it to a division.—The Post office Bill after a long discussion was read a second time.—Mr. P. M. Stewart stated that it was not his intention to press the Municipal Acts Amendment (Scotland) Bill during the present session.

Friday, 22d July.—The Speaker took the Chair at four o'clock, but there being only 32 Members present, the House adjourned.

Foreign Intelligence.

France.—The principal incident of the fêtes will be the opening of the great triumphal arch at the Barriere de l'Etoile, under which the King will take a position, while the National Guard and the troops of the Line (the latter to the number of eighty thousand men) will defile before him. The whole of the relics of the grand army (the Invalids) capable of locomotion, will be present to witness the completion of the monument of their victories, or to form a body guard for the King while reviewing the troops.

Spain.—The Moniteur states that the Carlist division commanded by General Gomez entered Oviede on the 6th, and, having levied a heavy contribution, marched on the next day towards Galicia. Espartero and Mauso, the first from the Basque Provinces, and the second from Old Castile, reached Oviedo the day after the Carlists had left it. Espartero, with twelve battalions, went in pursuit of Gomez, who had to cross several unfordable rivers before he could enter Galicia, and who, it is affirmed, would find on the frontier of the province a corps of troops ready to dispute his passage. The Portuguese brigade, which forms the reserve of the Queeo's troops, entered Leon on the 6th. Cordova arrived on the 15th at Vittoria. On the same day he sent off to Logrono four battalions in pursuit of a Carlist division which had entered the province of Soria. Private letters from Bayonne continue to affirm that Gomez has succeeded in getting into Galicia, in spite of the "unfordable rivers," the corps of troops waiting to dispute the passage, and the ever-pursuing forces of Espartero. Also, that on the 9th instant the Queen's Generals, Rotten and Montes, had set off from Caspe and Castel Terrano, at the head of their forces, about 12,000 men, for High Arragon, thus leaving the Carlists entirely masters of Lower Arragon. It was said that this movement was found necessary on account of the numerous desertions among their troops, who joined the Carlists.

ITALY.—The tragic event which lately occurred at Canino, in which the two sons of Prince Lucien Bonaparte are concerned, continues to be the subject of general conversation at Rome. The name of Bonaparte has given to it an increased interest, and excited public curiosity to an unusual degree. D. Antoine Bonaparte, it is said, has succeeded in escaping to America. The public take a great interest in the trial of D. Pierre Napoleon, and there seems to be no fear of his condemnation.

HOLLAND.—"The Hague, July 18th.—The Prince of Orange and his two eldest sons arrived in good health at Rotterdam this forenoon, on board the Batavier steamboat, from England, where they had been on a visit since the 5th of May.

TURKEY.—The Volage returned to Therapia from the Dardanelles on the 26th June. The Favourite sailed on the 30th for Malta with Mr. Warrington, Lord Ponsonby having represented to the British Consul at Tripoli the present moment as highly inopportune for presenting his claims to the Porte, and the events passing at Tripoli, ever since the Capitan Pasha's arrival in the Regency, as of a nature requiring the presence of an English officer on the spot.

UNITED STATES.—Since the 4th July last, the flag of the United States has been spangled with twenty-six stars, two being added in consequence of the admission of the States of Arkansas and Michigan into the Union. In 1818, the number of States then being twenty, an Act was passed, "That on the admission of every new State into the Union, one star be added to the union of the flag, and that such addition shall take effect on the 4th July then succeeding such admission." The thirteen stripes, denoting the thirteen original States, were, on the admission of Vermont and Kentucky, increased to sixteen; but as the number of States was further enlarged, it was perceived that the flag would not eventually admit of a stripe for each, and so an Act was passed fixing the number at thirteen as before. The last star added to the flag was on the 4th July, 1822, in honour of the State of Missouri, which was admitted into the Union on the 10th Aug. 1821. The star for Maine was added on the 4th July, 1820.

Law.

HOME CIRCUIT.—Maidstone, July 20.—Dombrain v. Wood.—This was an action of libel. The defendant pleaded a justification.

Mr. Sergeant Spankie stated the case. The plaintiff, Mr. James Dombrain, was Comptroller-General of the Preventive Water Guard in Ireland, and had brought the present action for two libels which appeared in the Kent Herald, of which the defendant, Eliza Wood, was the part owner. The plaintiff was appointed, in 1816, Deputy Comptroller-General of the Preventive Water Guard of England, under Capt. John Martin Hanchett, the Comptroller, who was afterwards dismissed from his office, and the plaintiff subsequently was appointed to the situation, which he now filled. Capt. Hanchett, very indignant at being dismissed, presented a petition to the House of Commons, which, however, had not the effect of reinstating him, and now, after a lapse of seventeen years, he had given fresh vent to his irritation by the publication of the libels complained of in the journal of the defendant. The first libel was published in the Kent Herald on 30th July, 1835, and had reference to some pamphlet which Capt. Hanchett had published, and was as follows:—"The matter, however prejudiced by Capt. Hanchett's intemperate mode of expressing his feelings, cannot rest here, especially as the writer in his remarks observes, that on Feb. 3, 1819, I (Capt. H.) received a verbal message from him (Mr. Lushington) by the mouth of the Assistant-Lieut. Dombrain (the plaintiff), being by Mr. L.'s orders, that I should send him (the plaintiff) down as on service to meet some of Mr. Lushington's electioneering friends at Rochester, and that I should charge his travelling allowance, 20*d.* a mile and 30*s.* a day, in my quarterly contingent bill, as if he had been employed in the King's service." The second libel was published in the same paper, on 13th Aug., 1835, and was as follows, and purported to be a letter from Capt. Hanchett to the Speaker of the House of Commons:—"It was on 12th July, now four weeks ago, that I addressed Mr. Lushington, accusing him of a dishonourable and illegal act, and waste of public money, in having sent Lieut. Dombrain, on or about 3d Feb., 1818, down to the coast in the neighbourhood of Canterbury, as on his Majesty's service, and to order him, and to have ordered his expenses to be paid at the rate of 20*d.* a mile, and 30*s.* a-day, which was paid from the public monies, as if he had been employed in the public service, whilst it is a well-known fact that no order of the kind was ever made by the Board of Treasury; and I have every reason to believe, and was so informed by the assistant, that it was to meet Mr. Lushington's Canterbury voters at Rochester that evening, and which accusation now lies on the table of the House of Commons, in a petition addressed by me to the House on 17th May, 1819." The Jury would see that the libels contained most gross charges, that Mr. Lushington had been guilty of fraud in appropriating monies received for public purposes towards furthering his own private electioneering views. The action had been brought against the present defendant, to give Capt. Hanchett an opportunity of appearing as a witness if he thought fit, which he could not have done had the action been brought against him; and when an observation might have been made that his mouth was closed.

Mr. Thesiger addressed the Jury for the defendant. It would not be treating Capt. Hanchett properly, if he were not afforded an opportunity of stating upon oath that which he had been complaining of for the last 17 years, without having obtained any redress. The alleged libels certainly very much affected the character of Mr. Lushington, but he could not see what they contained in them to induce Mr. Dombrain to have his attention distracted from his duty by embarking in such a cause as the present. He was but a subordinate; the charge was made principally against the head, Mr. Lushington, who was at that time, 1818, Secretary to the Treasury. Why did he not come forward and clear his character from the charges brought against him, instead of allowing the plaintiff, who was the Deputy-Comptroller of the Water-guard, to institute these proceedings? Capt. Hanchett had served in the Navy with distinguished honour for many years, and had been made a Companion of the Bath. All these honours, however, he had been deprived of. The lapse of time often did not mitigate, but tended to make the feelings more susceptible of wrongs.

John Martin Hanchett examined.—In 1818 I was a Post Captain in the navy, Companion of the Bath, and Comptroller-General of the Preventive Service; on the 3d of Feb. 1818, I saw Lieut. Dombrain and his father at my office in Pall-mall; I had a conversation with them, and they told me they had been at the Horse and Groom, Holborn, to attend a meeting of voters, and that Lieutenant Dombrain wished to go out of town to Rochester that night to meet the out-voters; I told him I would give him leave for a fortnight; the plaintiff, however, told me it was Mr. Lushington's orders that he should be sent out of town on duty, otherwise his expenses would not be paid; I cautioned him, as he received custom-house pay, not to have anything to do with electioneering concerns; I afterwards mentioned the circumstance to Mr. Lushington, the Secretary of the Treasury, and pointed out to him that I was bound to declare, on my honour, that the charges made in the contingent bill were bona fide in the King's service, and I could not, knowing what the plaintiff was going about, send him without a written order; Mr. L. promised, on his honour, to send a written order; Mr. L. subsequently told him he must send the plaintiff to the nearest place about Canterbury; I sent him to Whitstable Bay and Herne Bay, to hasten the completion of the Hannah Sophia, and to muster the crew of the Scorpion; the contingent bill was 15*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, calculated at 30*s.* per day and 20*d.* a mile; it was paid among the contingent bills, ending the 5th of May, 1818; I never received a Treasury order, though I wrote to Mr. Lushington about it frequently; I received an official answer, dated 31st of March, 1818, stating that the Lords of the Treasury were pleased to approve of the Deputy Comptroller-General receiving the same allowance as a Surveyor-General; I was removed from my office on 19th March, 1819.

Cross-examined:—I did not propose, if the plaintiff would give me 6000*l.*, I would resign my place; I wanted to retire on two-thirds of my salary, 500*l.* from Government and 500*l.* from the plaintiff; I sent the Dombrains to Mr. Lushington, and told them that if they would buy me an annuity of 500*l.* I would resign; I took his Lordship's (then Sir James Scarlett) opinion upon the subject; Mr. Lushington told me if I brought charges against him he would get me struck off the navy.

Re-examined:—After I had sent in my petition to the House of Commons, I was removed from the navy, and about four years afterwards I was removed from the Bath without any reason whatever.

The Right Hon. St. Lushington stated, that in 1818, he was Secretary to the Treasury; he never gave any order to Capt. Hanchett to send the plaintiff to Whitstable in the manner which Capt. Hanchett had stated, nor did he ever promise to send him such an order as he had described; the plaintiff was never sent by his orders to meet his voters, nor to Whitstable; Capt. Hanchett never delivered him a list of voters, nor ever expostulated with him about the breach of honour, in committing so dishonourable an act; he never sent Lieut. Dombrain to Capt. Hanchett, in order that his expenses might be put down to the public; the whole of the statement by Capt. Hanchett, as to sending the plaintiff down to canvass, was utterly false.

The father of the plaintiff also contradicted what Capt. Hanchett had said relative to his conversation with him (witness) and his son, about the meeting of the voters at the Horse and Groom, Capt. Hanchett told him that if he (witness) would give him 2000*l.* he would resign, but it must be under the rose, and not mentioned to Mr. Lushington; witness told Mr. Lushington, who said "Foolish man, he can't part with his situation."

Literary Notices.

An Architectural Tour in Normandy, with some Remarks on Norman Architecture. By G. Knight, Esq., M.P. John Murray.

THE Norman Society of Antiquaries having, in their Report for 1825, asserted that churches exist in Normandy, at Constances, Mortain, and other places, which were built in the eleventh century, and built in the pointed style, Mr. Knight, in 1831, accompanied by Mr. Richard Hussey, a professional architect, determined to have a personal inspection of these miracles, and to relieve himself from the momentary uneasiness excited by the announcement of a new hypothesis. His work goes to demonstrate that the Report is most erroneous, and also to show the dates of the several styles of architecture. The volume is very pleasantly written, and the Plates, by C. Burton, illustrative of Norman Cathedrals, are excellent; to the architect and the antiquary the work must be a valuable acquisition. We cannot resist extracting a paragraph on a subject which deserves the consideration of British legislators.

"In all the larger towns of France there are excellent public libraries, arranged in spacious rooms, with salaried librarians, every accommodation for readers, and every disposition to assist them. I could not visit these libraries without wishing that similar institutions could be introduced in the principal towns of England; for in a country where there are so many persons whose circumstances allow them leisure, where education is more and more diffused every day, and in times when men's minds are on the stir, the easy access to books, in every part of the kingdom, could not but prove at once agreeable and beneficial. The encouragement of such an object would be a wise application of public money."

The Violin; being an Account of that leading Instrument and its most Eminent Professors, including Hints to Amateurs, &c. By George Dubourg. Henry Colburn.

WE guess Mr. Dubourg to be an amateur enthusiast; he begins by telling us that mankind are divided into two classes,—"those who play the violin and those who do not,"—he admits his fear, "to the shame of the latter, that they are by very far the larger body," and humourously adds, "but let them not despair, non omnia possumus omnes, they cannot all belong to 'the glorious minority,' they cannot all hope to play the fiddle." As respects violin players, we imagine Mr. Dubourg to be right, but have our doubts as to fiddlers, for we so frequently meet with pretenders to play "first fiddle," and occasionally some adepts at the "long bow" cross our path, that if they were to be added to the list of scrapers, we should much question the result of "a division." However, if these bold aspirants would read this pleasant book, it might induce them to become fiddlers in real earnest; their notes, if in tune, would then be more acceptable, and their company less avoided.

The volume consists of Essays on the origin and early history of the violin; the Italian, French, German, and English schools; a sketch of Paganini; anecdotes of amateurs, female performers, &c.; and though a very unassuming little book, there is in it wherewithal to claim the consideration of the musical world.

The Court and Camp of Don Carlos. John Macrone.

WE shall now, according to the promise in our last, give some extracts from Mr. Honan's work:—

Queenite and Carlist Exaggerations.—"It was a matter of amusement to me, then resident at Madrid, to read the daily extraordinary gazettes of victories, by which the Carlists were annihilated. The very post was often filled with letters from officers in the army, detailing their misfortunes to their friends and presaging a fatal issue to the war; while ha gazette of tha same day contained brilliant details of operations and omens of final triumphs to the arms of the Queen. Every man in the Puerta del Sol knew that the gazette was false, yet still the government was weak enough to publish it; and though every one knew it was false, yet such was the tyranny of the Liberals, that no person dared avow his opinions, and these narratives were sent into other countries uncontradicted, except by some private letters, to form the groundwork of financial delusion, by which, in turn, each money-market of Europe has been sacrificed, and for the conception and execution of which the Spanish Ministers of the Treasury enjoy a special reputation. I was even told by the officer of the day, on one of these great battles, whose duty it was to count the bodies of the slain enemy on the field, that he found but forty-five corpses, while the gazette represented no less than 3400 put hors de combat—an instance of exaggeration only to be matched by a Carlist bulletin, lately published, of Cordova's retreat to Victoria, which, headed 'Victory! Victory! Victory!!!' declared that 9000 men were destroyed out of 12,000, although in good truth, not more than about sixty poor fellows bit the dust. It must be admitted that the Carlist exaggerations were less frequent than the others; for while the Queen's gazette announced that the Infante's force was diminished to a small mountain band, which was about expiring from starvation, we have seen it increasing daily in number and equipment, until, from a commencement of seven hundred men, it has swollen to a number of 30,000 armed and organised—and that, while it was stated to be in the throes of death, it was driving a succession of seven Queen's generals before it, and finally occupying the whole of the provinces, and defying every new attempt that was made to put it down. So much did this hyperbole prevail, that the beaten Christino Captains even made a jest of it themselves; and I heard one of them say, at a table of distinction at Madrid—'Well, what do you think of us now? I was beaten: I have committed faults which in any other service would cashier me; and look! here is the sword which the Queen has given me, and here is the commission by which I am appointed Commander-in-Chief.' The positive fact was, that nothing but lying and impostare succeeded at Madrid."

Don Carlos.—"His character is but little understood in England; and it is strange to find a prejudice there against him, when he possesses every quality which we prize, and consider indispensable in men of elevated station. He is just, humane, and generous, and so great a lover of truth, that he has never been known to break his word, or to allow an equivocation in his presence. He was the only member of the royal family at Madrid who paid debts, or preserved regularity in the household. The weekly bills were paid with the same exactness as in an English family; and while all the other inhabitants of the palace, to whom tradesmen applied in vain, indulged in dissipation, and disregarded increased expense, his system was so thoroughly maintained, that though he left Madrid for Lisbon at a few days' notice, not a shilling remained unsettled. Don Carlos was born the legitimate heir to the throne; and the law by which the succession was changed was not enacted (supposing that it were then enacted with all necessary forms—a matter we will take for granted, to prevent discussion about it,) until two years after his birth; so that he is the victim of an ex post facto law, and a principle has been adopted against him, which would not stand before any law-court in England, in case of an entail: and the additional cruelty in his case is, that even that ex post facto law was not made public for 40 years after it was enacted, and until a female child was born to Ferdinand. This is what may be called a hard case, particularly as no public or private reproach could be attached to the character of the person thus cut off; and if he had come to the throne, he would have been the father of his people. The truth is, Don Carlos has endangered, if not lost, his claims, by an excess of principle; for had he, during the life of Ferdinand, but given one slight hint to his friends, the matter was settled in his favour. But he repeatedly declared that, while his brother lived, he was bound to obey him as a King, and he allowed the Queen Regent to strengthen her position during the illness of Ferdinand: thus Don Carlos found the door closed to which he had the key for so many years, and declined to use it. . . An heir to the throne, according to a strict entail—full of virtues—without a stain on his public or private character—an honest, moral, and a liberal man—a good husband—a good father—humane and charitable, still he is a fugitive from his proper home, hunted by those who have fed on his bounty, and he may yet fall a victim to the malice of his enemies. Let us not discuss his claims, but render justice to his principles; and if he should succeed, let England believe that fortune has not favoured the unworthy; and if he should fail, let him at least command our sympathy and esteem."

General Iturralde.—"One of the first chieftains who raised the standard of revolt, and who had the manliness to yield the command to Zumalacarregui, though a junior officer. We found him a plain man, without the marks of much thought or character; but he has a high reputation in Navarre, and he is, perhaps, the only man that the people will follow out of the province. He is a native of Navarre, and acquainted perfectly with the temper of this strange people. They call him the father, and approach him with a kind of veneration; and, whenever he is present, they will fight like lions to merit his approbation."

Carlist Officers.—"We found the persons on duty at the advanced post most gentlemanlike; and it was accounted for, on inquiry, by the fact that the greater part of the officers belonged to the army in the time of Ferdinand, and that they preferred taking service with Don Carlos than with the Queen. In England it is imagined that Don Carlos has an army of wild mountaineers, commanded by men of low lives and vulgar manners; while the truth really is, that the Carlist officers come from the best families in Spain, and are better bred, and certainly as well dressed, as many of those I have seen of the Christinos at Madrid."

Carlist Army.—"At Salinas we were joined by an old woman and her son, who was going to join his battalion, and she, who had provided him with new clothing, and fully equipped him, was determined to present her only child at head-quarters as her offering to Don Carlos, whom she called her king. The Roman mother, who put a shield into her young hero's hand, and said, "Return with it or on it," was not animated with a warmer patriotism than this poor Alavese peasant; and I could judge from what she was doing, as well as from what she told me, how deep the natural feeling of independence was among her class. She looked upon it as a disgrace not to have her child enrolled, and she told me such were the opinions of all her neighbours; and though there were not arms for all, nor place for all, every one had his name set down in the regular battalions, or among the voluntaries, and, while he tilled his fields until called for, was delighted with the moment which placed him in the ranks. The truth is, the army had been so admirably managed by Zumalacarregui, that its confidence and enthusiasm were at the highest. He took care never to risk an action unless he was certain to win; and the wild mountaineers, seeing the disciplined soldiers fly before them, fancied themselves invincible, and hailed the moment when the drum called them to arms. That confidence still remained, as the only place where they had been repulsed was Mendigoria, and there the actual balance of men killed was against the Christinos; and as Moreno, who led them on that day had been removed, to make way for the Count of Casa Eguia, whom they looked upon with reverence as the adviser of Zumalacarregui, and were attached to, because he was a native of the province."

Casa Eguia.—"We next paid a visit to the Commander-in-Chief, and were cordially received by the Conde de Casa Eguia, though he was suffering under an attack of the gout, to which he is a victim; but he said he could not think of declining to see us after the long detour we had made to call on him. The Count is a fine old gentleman, at least sixty-five years of age, with large gray eyebrows, and grey whiskers, and white hair; but his appearance was anything but military, the gout having flown to his head, it was bound round with a kerchief, and his eyes were much inflamed. His whole frame exhibited marks of a desperate attempt made on his life when he was Captain-General of Galicia in 1828, by means of detonating powder enclosed in a letter: his left arm was amputated, his right hand was short of two fingers, and his body, altogether, received twenty wounds, more or less serious. The author, nor the motives, of the horrid design, have not been discovered. He was one of the Duke of Wellington's Aids-de-Camp during the war of independence, and speaks with gratitude of the Duke's kindness to him, and with admiration—and who does not?—of his great military talents; and he said he made it a rule to imitate the decision and promptitude which marked all the movements of his great master."

Spanish Females.—"It is astonishing with what a slight stock of accomplishments a Madrid lady sets up in the world, and how admirably they can sustain conversation and inveigle hearts. A fan is her alphabet, and a mantilla her dictionary; and with these she can speak all the languages in Europe; at least I defy any man, from Archangel to Naples, not to understand her. The first lesson she receives is in the art of pleasing, and the first example she sees in her mamma is, how to lever is to be caught and managed. Nature teaches her the rest; and she sets up, at the age of sixteen, an accomplished coquette, and soon picks out a husband and a lover."

Syria, the Holy Land, Asia Minor, &c. Illustrated by W. H. Bartlett, W. Purser, &c. With Descriptions of the Plates by John Carne, Esq. Part III. Fisher, Son, and Co.

THE character we gave of the former Parts of this beautiful work applies equally to the present, which has exquisite views of Tripoli, Antioch, Beteddein, the Palace of the Prince of the Druses, and a scene on the river Orontes, near Suadeah. Nothing can be finer than the plate of Beteddein, which represents the gathering of the Chieftains to join the Army of Ibrahim Pacha, who was then about to advance into Syria, previous to his capture of Damascus, and the victories of Koniah, &c. But it is not only as a work of art that we recommend this publication, for Mr. Carne's spirited descriptions are equally entitled to our praise.

Colburn's Modern Novelist. Vol. 13.

THIS volume of 538 pages, with illustrations, contains the whole of the first series of Theodore Hook's incomparable "Sayings and Doings." Who, having a library or book-shelves, would be without such a cheap and splendid edition of this sparkling work?

Finden's Ports and Harbours of Great Britain, with Views of the most remarkable Headlands, Bays, and Fishing Stations on the Coast. C. Tilt.

WE are much gratified with the first Part of this very spirited undertaking. It contains admirable views of "Tynemouth Castle," "Cullercoats," "Entrance to Shields' Harbour," and "Berwick Bridge," besides a vignette, representing Tynemouth Light-House and Priory, with the Life-boat in the act of saving the crew of a vessel. The Engravings are from Drawings by Bulmer and Harding, and are worthy of the talents of those eminent artists. The Letter-press also deserves commendation.

Biographical, Chronological, and Geographical Compendiums of the Lives of the Duke of Wellington and Lord Nelson. By W. H. Kelsbel. Dickinson.

THE Charts consist of two large sheets, having portraits of these illustrious characters, with maps descriptive of their victories, and well-compiled chronological tables. Both the design and execution are good. They deserve to be framed and hung up in every regimental barrack, as well as in every ship in the service.

Standard Novels. No. 53. R. Bentley.

AN excellent edition, with a new preface, of one of Mr. James's best works. Publications of this sterling character deserve every encouragement.

---

Library of Fiction. No. IV. Chapman and Hall.

THESE clever publications well maintain their ground. The humour of the "Posthumous Papers" is irresistible; and the present Number of the "Library of Fiction" contains a tale, "The Convict," of harrowing interest. The etchings to both works are admirable.

THE SOLDIER'S FUNERAL.

By the Authoress of "Songs of Grenada and the Alhambra."

Who are these that wind through the mountain pass
With a heavy tramp and slow?
'Tis a soldier's funeral—alas!
In the panoply of woe!
Their comrade from many a battle field
To his "narrow home" they bear;—
And his eagle-glance is in darkness seal'd,
The conqueror Death is there!

2.

A veteran band is marching first,
To the beat of the muffled drums;
With downcast gaze, and arms reversed,
See the long procession comes!
And mournfully borne upon the ear,
With their stately measured tread,
Sounds that far-off dirge—soft, as if they fear'd
To break the rest of the dead.

How sadly those hush'd dim echoes wake
The calm and sleeping air;
Oh! holy the spell those deep notes make,
'Tis the melody of prayer!
Hark! at intervals a passing bell
Mingles with the funeral dirge,
Those rich strains sublimely sink and swell
Like the murmuring ocean surge.

Now, low lies the stalwart warrior now
In his coffin and his shroud,
And saddon'd is many a comrade's brow,
Whose leaders may be proud
To bear the pall on his honour'd bier
To the calm and quiet grave,
For he leaves a name to all true hearts dear,
The name of the "Good and Brave."

A hero in conflict's deadly storm,
Freely waging limb and life,
Ah! powerless now is that manly form
Which gloried in the strife.
On his coffin lying cap, cloak, and sword,
(His trusty friends at need,)
To his last "home home" they attend their lord,
With his loved and faithful steed.

The noble charger, which plunging, rears
As in sable trappings led,
The fatal livery he wears
For the pale unconscious dead!
Oh! he misses his master's gentle hand,
The voice which curb'd his pride,
Must he tamely brook the stern command
Of a stranger by his side?

7.

Shall another guide his bridle-rein?
Must he learn to watch his eye?
Oh! on! for the proud and gallant train
In solemn pomp pass by.
The youngest in years—and service first,
('Tis the chieftain's own behest,)
Oh Death! hast thou not all ranks reversed
We bring thee another guest.

The chapel is gained.—By the man of God
The last holy rites are said;
They lay his corse in the lowly sod,—
Now, peace to the honour'd dead!
And thrice o'er the spot where his relics dwell
A volley his comrades fire,—
'Tis the soldier's requiem—their "wild farewell," *
Ere the mournful band retire.

All is silent now—and the smoke and haze
Are clearing away from sight;
The sun breaks forth,—and his glorious rays
Diffuse their cheering light.
Oh! may we not take this blessed sign
As a token of mercy given!
He is where those rays for ever shine,—
Our brother is in Heaven!

LYDIA.

* "Wild farewell," the practice of firing over the grave is so termed by soldiers.

TO PREVENT FRAUD,
THORN'S POTTED YARMOUTH BLOATERS, for Toast, Biscuits, Sandwiches, and Wine, in Pots, 1s. and 2s. each. The high repute and immense sale of this delicate preparation has induced several would-be tradesmen (who not having an idea of their own) to attempt an imposition by labelling a pot exactly like his, thereby to deceive the public and injure him, (having actually applied to his printer for that purpose;) well knowing they cannot prepare the Fish, the receipt being an old family one, and the secret in the curing of the Herring, by which its rancid qualities are destroyed, and it becomes so delicious a relish. It is easily detected by observing his signature, ALEX. THORN, on the side, and on the top, Proprietor of the celebrated TALLY HO! SAUCE, for Fish, Game, Steaks, Wild Fowl, and all Made Dishes, imparting a zest not otherwise acquired—the most economical now in use: in Bottles, 2s. and 4s. each, warranted in all climates. Wholesale at the Manufactory, Thorn's Oil, Italian, and Foreign Warehouse, 233, High Holborn, also of all wholesale oilmen and druggists; and retail by all respectable oilmen, grocers, and druggists in the United Kingdom.

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY.

As the following letter received from Major-General Sir Henry Wheatley, Keeper of the Privy Purse, testifies:—

Sir,—I am honoured with the King's command to express his Majesty's sense of your polite attention in sending the two bottles of Essence of Ginger. His Majesty has been pleased to direct me to forward you ten pounds in payment for it—Inclosed you will find that amount.—I am, Sir, your's obediently, St. James's Palace, June 30th, 1835. H. WHEATLEY.

To Mr. Decimus Woodhouse.

WOODHOUSE'S ÆTHERIAL ESSENCE of GINGER is particularly recommended to all cold, phlegmatic, weak, and nervous constitutions; it is certain in affording instant relief in Cholera Morbus, Spasms, Cramps, Flatulence, Languor, Hysterics, Heartburn, Loss of Appetite, Sensation of Fulness, Pain and Oppression after Meals; also those Pains of the Stomach and Bowels which arise from Gouty Flatulencies; Digestion, however much impaired, is restored to its pristine state, by the use of this Essence for a short time, if taken in Tea, Coffee, Ale, Beer, Porter, Cider, or Wine; it corrects their Flatulent tendency.

The undernamed, and 268 other Medical men have given certificates of their unqualified approbation of the value of the Essence, as also of its superiority over all other similar preparations. Drs. James Johnson, Physician to his Majesty, A. T. Holroyd, S. Ashwell, R. Rowley, A. Middleton, C. London, D. Davies, Surgeon to their Majesties, J. Pereira, G. Pilcher, F. Salmon, F. Tyrrell, J. H. Curtis, Aurist to his Majesty, C. Millard.

This Essence is prepared only by DECIMUS WOODHOUSE, Operative Chemist Extraordinary to his Majesty, 18, King William-street, New London bridge; and sold by him, wholesale and retail, in bottles 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., 10s. 6d., and 21s. each; and may be had of all Medicine Venders.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Hashes, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, 72, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sams, Howis, Moral, Piccadilly, Valle, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c., &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

FRUIT SEASON.—Each succeeding year proves, more extensively than its predecessor, the advantage of using the Patent Brandy, diluted with water, as a substitute for Beer, or other fermented liquors; a recommendation strongly urged by the principal members of the faculty; and never more important than at the present season, when the natural indulgence in the use of fruit renders the choice of a safe and wholesome beverage an act of great importance. The established purity, and freedom from acid, of the Patent Brandy, expressly and exclusively certified by Chemists of the first eminence, and further substantiated by its constantly increasing sale, (exceeding in the last year that of the preceding year by between twenty and thirty thousand gallons,) warrant J. T. Barre and Co. in drawing public attention to its superior qualities, not only as a beverage, but also with reference to its use in fortifying home-made Wines, in the preparation of Confectionary and Preserves, and for general culinary purposes.

As Distillers, J. T. Barre and Co. cannot send out less than two Gallons of their Patent Brandy; which may be obtained at Eighteen Shillings per Imperial Gallon, of the highest legal strength, at the Distillery, No. 7, Smithfield Bars, leading to St. John Street, which is their only Establishment.

CERTIFICATE Written by His Highn the Prince Johannica Starza Voivod, 78 Years of Age the Efficacy of MORISON'S PILLS.

(Translated from the Moldavian).

To all, whom these presents meet, greeting!

Know all men by these presents, that in the year of our L one thousand eight hundred and thirty-five, on the sixteenth of October, on my arrival beyond the banks of Pruth, I met Professor Doctor Tollhausen, who possessed some of Moris Pills, which Pills I heard highly commended by those who taken them, and derived benefit from their use. Whereas I been for two years suffering under severe bodily ailments, had employed for that period all possible remedial agents wit any success, I applied to the aforesaid Dr. Tollhausen for purpose of taking these Pills, and, although arrived at a high of life, I immediately experienced their wonderful effects; though this medicine was acting as a purgative, yet I was gaining strength, and relief, and health, and found from da day my sight and hearing improved. And I pursued taking boxes of these pills one after another, and did not cease t them, both myself and the whole of my court. But now I been informed, that these pills have been confiscated, and ca account for the motives of the same, save by envy, since far complaining of these pills, every one talks but good of them. order to make the world acquainted with the innocence of medicine, and to vouch the truth of this my statement, I h given this under my hand.

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL, unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, preserving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, endering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and sustaining it in rl under the different varieties of atmosphere.

Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO.,

rfumers to the Royal Family, No. 63, Oxford Street, London.

Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and o. were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to e Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individual who divulged it to them, or whose head would inevitably ve paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties successively nployed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn ths of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three nturies.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed e greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and ost uncivilised countries great value is set upon a fine head of ir. The great care is proverbial that is paid to the cultivation the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, and t is there well known to succeed in outrivalling even the farmed beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during a period of three centuries, and has been found undeviatingly ccessful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, ft, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess (as is done in some inances) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair on cast iron—it will do no such thing; but, if regularly applied, will re-produce the hair where nature ordained its existence, if t from those causes to which baldness is referable; it will promote the growth of the hair generally,

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY, stain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a illiant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a re LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, nsophisticated with the deleterious articles usually employed to e Oils red, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the ir, and although an oily substance, the RIENTAL OIL DOES NOT RENDER THE HAIR GREASY, d is therefore free from the general complaint against every her article in present use for the same purpose, including those thy substances miscalled Bears' Grease, which are neither more or less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil subitted to various manipulations to divest them of the fetid apmal smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform inciple. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dews the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprive it which it soon withers and dies; so the hair, unless properly ourished, becomes weak and gradually drops off; for, minute as ingle hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human ir will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface covered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, d which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tenncy, the hair is destroyed thereby: thus it will be observed that ose persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in fe, which is merely caused by the acid caustic nature of the rspiration settling on the hair and being absorbed, which enrely destroys it; but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will revent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury; nd if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely reoves the scurf, without the assistance of the dandruff combs, an peration so distressing to the heads of children.

Price 3s. 6d., 6s. 9d., and in pint bottles, with glass stoppers, 1s. each.

N.B.—HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL is particularly commended to the notice of Merchants and Shippers Trading to the East and West Indies, being the only article for the hair at will survive a voyage to the East without turning rancid.

SARSAPARILLA.

"Great praise is due to Mr. Hillyard for his very clever and much needed preparation of Sarsaparilla. His mode of preparing it preserves the necessary active qualities, which, according to the old mode, were allowed to evaporate, thus rendering it one of the most sure, as well as simple, remedies in purifying the blood."—United Service Gazette.

"In justice to one of the many preparers of Sarsaparilla, we must give the meed of praise to Hillyard's condensed preparation, knowing some friends of ours who have received much benefit from its use."—Fraser's Literary Chronicle.

FURTHER CONFIRMATION OF THE UNFAILING VIRTUES OF

January 28th 1836.

GENTLEMEN,—I regret that I have not earlier acknowledged to you the great benefit which I have derived from the use of your Balm of Columbia, which, in my own case, I have happily found to possess all the virtues you ascribe to it; I at first, and by mere accident, purchased a Bottle from one of your Agents merely as a trial; and until lately, was unaware of its justly famed and great celebrity, or of your being resident, and having a principal establishment in England, otherwise I should have felt pleasure, and a sense of duty to you and the public in making this acknowledgment before. About four years ago, I found my hair rapidly falling off, not occasioned by any bodily illness, and to such an extent was my head really bald that I was compelled to wear a wig; about three afterwards I began to use your Balm, and after the lapse of nine months, and the application of only three 3s. 6d. bottles, I was enabled to leave off the wig, finding my hair quite restored to its pristine strength, which it has retained ever since.

I am, Gentlemen, yours very obliged,

To Messrs. C. & A. OLDRIDGE, Balm of Columbia Establishment, 1, Wellington Street, Strand, London. BENJAMIN BRIDGER, 31, Little Newport Street, Leicester Square.

OLDRIDGE'S BALM causes Whiskers and Eyebrows to grow prevents the hair from turning grey, and on the first application produces a beautiful curl frees the hair from scurf, and stops it from falling off. Abundance of certificates from gentlemen of the first respectability are shown by the Proprietors C. & A. OLDRIDGE, 1, Wellington Street, Strand, London, where the Balm is sold.—Price 3s. 6d., 6s., and 11s. per bottle.

STIRLING REES' ESSENCE.—Its vast and increasing sale, from the recommendation of the highest Medical characters, as well as those who have experienced its salubrious and beneficial effects, proves its great success and superiority over every other preparation, to being the most safe and effectual remedy every discovered for the Cure of Gonorrhœa, Gleets, Seminal Weakness, Stricture, Fluor Albus, or Whites, Pains in the Loins, Kidneys, Lumbago, Gravel, Irritation of the Bladder, Urethra, and every Disease incident to the Sexual and Urinary Organs, frequently performing a perfect cure in the short space of three or four days. It contains, in a concentrated state, all the efficacious parts of the Cubeb, chemically combined with Sarsaparilla, Buchu, and other choice alteratives, which renders it invaluable to those afflicted with secondary Syphilitic Symptoms, Pains of the Bones, Ulcers, Pimples, Blotches, Scorbutic Eruptions, Glandular Swellings, and all diseases arising from a tainted and impure state of the blood. In cases of Debility, Want of Power, both Local and General, Tabes Dorsalis, Diabetes, Wasting Impotence, and Nervous Depression of Spirits it has been taken with the most decided benefit. A regular perseverance in its use has invariably been found to improve the appetite, assist the digestive powers, and give muscular strength, energy, and vigorous health to the whole system. The most delicate female may take it with perfect safety. It is an excellent resturative after the constitution has been weakened or injured by mercurial or from any other cause.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

The Proprietor being apprised of several unprincipled Medicine Vendors, who, when applied to for this remedy, substitute, under the name of Cubebs, Sarsaparilla, &c., a worthless and injurious article of their own make, feels it is an imperative duty to say, that it is absolutely necessary, before purchasing, to see the name "J. W. Stirling," Whitechapel, is engraved on the Government Stamp affixed outside the wrapper on the bottle, without which it cannot be genuine.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove:—

"SIR,—For many years I suffered by Corns; latterly I felt such excruciating pain, having five on my left foot, that the frequent bathing, paring, and filing of them in no way relieved me. For months I could not wear boots, and for ten or twelve days not even shoes. I tried ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN SOLVENT, of which I find you are the Proprietor: after using it two days, I could wear shoes, in four days, one of the Corns, the most painful, was entirely eradicated. By this time I suffered more in particular, as it was between my toes. I have in a week after, and since, been able to wear boots. Having experienced this benefit in eight Cores in my own person, and having recommended this SOLVENT to many Patients of mine, who all have been cured, I deem it but just to give you this testimony, to use it as you may think proper. I am, Sir, your obedient servant, D. EMDEN, Surgeon Dentist."

1, Southampton-street, Strand, 18th March, 1836."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely inefficacious but mischievous. It is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Sold by J. A. Sharwood, 68, Bishopsgate Without, in Bottles, at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.; and, by appointment, by most Medicine Vendors.

SCROFULA AND SCORBUTIC AFFECTIONS.—ALTERATIVE TONIC POWDERS and PILLS.—A certain specific for the removal of scrofula, glandular, and scorbutic affections, secondary symptoms, eruptions of the skin, pains in the bones, ulcerated sore throat, chronic rheumatism, local and general debility, loss of appetite, depression of spirits, and all diseases arising from an impure state of the blood. Persons in the habit of taking quinine will find these Powders by far the most efficacious tonic. Prepared only by the Proprietor, M. O. WRAY, 118, Holborn Hill; and sold in packages at 4s. 6d., 11s., and 21s. each; and wholesale, by Messrs. Barclay and Sons, 95, Farringdon Street, Butler, 4, Cheapside; Sutton and Co., 10, Bow Church-yard; and retail, by Stradling, Gate of the Royal Exchange; Sanger, 150, Oxford Street; Lowe and Hornblower, 47, Blackfriars Road, London; and all respectable Patent Medicine Vendors in Town and Country.

SARSAPARILLA.—Mr. WRAY, of Holborn-hill, the Proprietor of the ALTERATIVE TONIC POWDERS, having observed constant disappointment attending the exhibition of the pharmaceutical and other preparations of Sarsaparilla, induced him to set on foot, with the assistance of the ablest experimental chemists, an analysis of its properties; the result of which proves that true Sarsaparilla, carefully selected and separated from all impurities, is in substance most effectual, and that the various preparations under the denomination of decoctions, extracts, essences, syrups, &c., hitherto used, can never be depended upon for producing any real or permanent benefit. But, though Sarsaparilla in substance only is to be preferred, yet the action may be materially assisted when combined with auxiliaries. By a trial of many years' continuance, he has found that the Alterative-Tonic Powders he now offers to the Public have justified his most sanguine expectations, and therefore feels himself bound by motives of humanity to confine them no longer to private practice, but to allow the public the full advantage of so valuable a medicine. Persons in the habit of taking quinine will find his powders by far the most efficacious tonic.

TEETH.—Gold is the only material with which decayed teeth can be filled with any permanently beneficial result, the various cements to which so many impossibilities are unblushingly attributed, being amalgams of mercury, with silver, tin, &c., quickly combine with the acids of the mouth, and thus, forming muriates of those metals, turn the teeth black, and ultimately destroy them.*

GREIG THOMSON, Surgeon Dentist, informs the Public that he has succeeded in making a preparation of gold, which, without inflicting the least pain, effectually arrests the progress of decay, and resembles the teeth to point of colour much more than any other invention now in use.

G. T. continues to perform all the operations of Dental Surgery, and to fix natural and artificial teeth upon the most improved principles, combined with the utmost moderation in terms.

* Is it credible that any member of the Medical Profession can recommend these deleterious compositions? or can any reference real or pretended, alter the facts above alluded to?

TROTTER'S ASIATIC TOOTH POWDER, Established upwards of 70 years, so long been a general favourite of the Nobility and Gentry of this and foreign countries, conspicuous for its virtues in cleaning and preserving the Teeth. The Proprietor of this most excellent and invaluable Dentifrice having served as an Officer in his Majesty's Navy the whole of last war, most respectfully solicits the patronage of the Officers of the United Service.—Sold wholesale and by the single box, at the Manufactory, 2, Arundel street, Strand, and by all Perfumers and Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom.

"We, the undersigned, residents in the line of the Commercial-road and the vicinity thereof, having been long aware of the great inconvenience sustained by the public from the improper system that has prevailed in the management of the conveyances between London and Blackwall, and finding every remonstrance with the proprietors to have proved entirely unavailing to the correction of the evils arising from the inferior description of the omnibuses, their irregularity and the low character and frequently gross misconduct of the drivers and conductors, hereby declare our readiness to give our best support to the "Metropolitan Omnibus Association," provided they will place a sufficient number of vehicles adequately to provide for the public accommodation, engaging that they shall be of a respectable description, shall proceed with punctuality, and be driven and conducted by persons of decency and civility of conduct. But we desire to express our hope that some arrangement may be made by the Company with Mr. Robert Lambert, of Blackwall, to prevent interference with his interests as proprietor of the East and West India Dock coaches."

PORTSMOUTH, JULY 29th.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Rear-Admiral the Honourable Sir C. Paget put to sea early on Saturday morning in the Bellerophon, accompanied by Vanguard, Cornwallis, Hercules, and Pembroke. The Hercules, having seamen for the Imogine, went on to Plymouth; the rest of the squadron anchored in Torbay on Sunday, and got to Plymouth on Wednesday. The Russell arrived there the same day. A variety of reports have prevailed as to the sailing qualities of the ships, but no regular trial has yet taken place. The Asia was signalised to return to Spithead, only after taking on board stores for the Mediterranean squadron, she sailed on Tuesday night. The Patridge, tender to the Royal George yacht, is attached to Sir Charles Paget's squadron, and sailed on Thursday to Plymouth with despatches. Her late Commander, Lieut. Deschamps, has exchanged with Lieut. Bisson of the Bonetta. Buffalo, [illegible]ish, made an attempt to get away on Saturday [illegible] called to anchor at St. Helen's, and did not succeed in proceeding until Wednesday. The Griffon has gone to Sheerness to be paid off. Madagascar and Galatea [illegible] on Tuesday. The latter is to take her coals [illegible] Plymouth. She is jury-rigged, and will sail to-morrow, if possible, in charge of Mr. Walker, Assistant [illegible] Superintendant of that yard. An order has been received for six Sergeants and two Drummers of Marines to be in readiness for embarkation for the coast of Spain when a conveyance offers. It is expected they will go in the Beagle, she is to bring round the detachment of Marines for the Inconstant. Friday—Wind S., blowing hard. A boat from the Bonetta was upset this morning coming in from Spithead, and two men drowned. Mr. Paul (Master of Bonetta), the Officer in charge, and two other men, were fortunately picked up. A coasting schooner, the Ann, of Poole, has dragged her anchor, and grounded on Southsea Beach; unless it moderates with the flood tide she will be in jeopardy. Ships in Port, Bonetta; Najader, Capt. Cruusenstjerna, Swedish corvette of 20 guns; Fredrickswarn, Capt. Ericksen, Norwegian brig of 18 guns, at Spithead. Britannia, Inconstant, Pique, Madagascar, Beacon, Emerald and Fonny yachts, Royal George, and Excellent, in Harbour. The Inconstant and Pique have made but small progress. The Free Mart Fair has been more attractive to seamen than entering a man-of-war, and there have been two half-holidays at the Dock-yard; they will get on better next week. The Rodney was at Barcelona on the 4th July, all well. She expected to sail very shortly for Malta.

Woolwich Dock-Yard, July 29th.—(From our own Correspondent).—The Firefly st.-v., Lieut. J. Pearse, has had her long pole masts taken out, to be replaced by main and topmasts, as it is understood she is going out to the East Indies, and is to be sailed most part of the voyage on account of fuel. The Flamer st.-v. has been hauled up under the sheers to have her boilers taken out, as they have been condemned. She was fitted with Morgan's patent wheels, constructed on the principle of the non-retention of the back-water, which desirable object they seemed to be adapted for, as the Flamer reports well of them during her cruise in the West Indies. The Confiance st.-v. has had her wheels taken off. The Rhadamanthus st.-v. is to have her foremast stepped ten feet further aft. The Messenger st.-v., Mr. J. King, will want a great deal of repairing, as she is too weak for the power of her engines. The Lightning st.-v., Lieut. Shambler, will not be ready for some time yet, from want of the completion of her steam gear: she will ship a new funnel next week. The sailors are now painting her as far as they can proceed. Falmouth lighter arrived here on Monday, and left same day with a party of marines for Sheerness. She returned Wednesday, and took on board some stores to take to the westward. She sailed on Thursday. The Firebrand st.-v., Master Allen, came up on Tuesday. The Rosehill of London, timber-brig, has been unloading her cargo of British oak off the yard. Blazer st.-v. is to be taken out of Dock next week. The master of the yacht William and Mary, Mr. Hicks, is on a few days' leave. The Nelson, tender to the yacht, is being fresh painted in the basin. Ships in Port—William and Mary yt., Firebrand st.-v. In Dock—Blazer st.-v. In the Basin—Rhadamanthus, Lightning, Firefly, Confiance, Flamer, and Messenger st.-vs.

Plymouth, 28th July.—The Patridge, tender, is removed from the Royal Adelaide to the Portsmouth station, and attached to the Royal George yt.—Nautilus was taken into dock on Monday to examine her copper.—Hope, pkt., was commissioned on Monday by Lt. Rees, and the Fly by Mr. W. R. Mudge, Master and Pilot—the following officers appointed to her, Com. Russell Elliott, Lt. C. James, Fox Campbell, Surg. Mr. A. Miller, Purser, Mr. Wm. Young.—The Segundo de Julho, Brazilian corvette, of 28 guns, Captain Riparso, arrived here yesterday (Wednesday) direct from Rio. We apprehend she has an officer on board with orders to purchase Naval Stores for use of his Imperial Majesty's Navy.—Bellerophon, with Adm. Paget's flag, Vanguard, Cornwallis, Pembroke, from Portsmouth; Russell, 74, from Lisbon; and Albion, st.-v., arrived here yesterday.—Hermes st. arrived from Malta, via Falmouth, on Monday.—Our Sound has not presented such a warlike appearence for a very long period.—In Hamoaze: Royal Adelaide, Imogine, Fly, Hope, Magnet, Hermes steamer, Rochester lighter.—In the Sound: Bellerophon, Vanguard, Minden, Cornwallis, Pembroke, Hercules, Russell, Nautilus, Sterling, freight-ship, Segundo de Julho, Brazilian corvette.

R.—Adm. the Hon. Sir C. Paget, G.C.H., shifted his flag from the Hercules to the Bellerophon again on the 23d inst., and sailed during the night, with the Vanguard, Pembroke, Cornwallis, and Hercules, in company, on a cruise.

The Buffalo, store ship, with Capt. Hindmarsh and family, the Governor of W. Australia, and Mr. Stevenson, the Colonial Secretary, on board, sailed from St. Helen's on the 28d; she took also a large number of intelligent emigrants, possessed of valuable property, and several surveyors and draughtsmen. See Portsmouth Letter.

The Rapetta, 10, Lieut. Deschamps, is destined for the Cape of Good Hope, with 20,000*l.* in specie on board; she will then be employed on the slave coast.

The Hermes st., Lieut. Blouet, arrived at Falmouth from the Mediterranean on the 25th inst; after having landed the mails and some passengers, she proceeded to Plymouth. She sailed from Leghorn, Zante, and Patras, the 1st July, Malta 9th, Gibraltar 17th, Cadiz 18th. Sir Josias Rowley, with most of his staff, were at Zante. Amongst the number were the Commodore's, Thunderer, and Medea st. The Medea arrived at Gibraltar the 16th July; the Jaseur was also lying there; the Medea was to sail from Cadiz to England a few hours after the Hermes. The Rodney was at Barcelona, and would proceed to Malta. The Tyne was at Barcelona on the 15th inst. The Hind, tender to Caledonia, arrived at Constantinople from Patras on 1st inst.

Some fishermen landed at Portsmouth Dock-yard last week a piece of the outer planking of the Bayne, which they hauled up while fishing near the wreck. The copper and nails were valued by the officers, and the usual salvage awarded to the men.

A Swedish corvette and a Norwegian brig, both filled with a large number of young officers, on a cruise, for the purpose of acquiring experimental knowledge, having arrived at Spithead, the Port Admiral, Sir P. C. Durham, visited them on Saturday last.

The Griffon, whose arrival from the Coast of Africa we reported last week, touched at St. Michael's on the 5th inst. There were at Sierre Leone no less than twenty-three empty slave vessels, which the cruisers had detained under a recent Act of Parliament, but which the mixed Commission at that place would not condemn, as the Commissioners had not received instructions from their several Governments to do so.

Mr. Heneage, in the Sparrowhawk yacht, left Cowes last week for San Sebastian; and Mr. Harvey, in the Iris yacht, has followed for the same interesting scene.

At the Town Hall, Plymouth, on Tuesday, Lieut. W. L. Rees, lately commanding H.M.'s schooner Cockatrice, was brought before the magistrates on a charge of having, on 18th June, feloniously killed John M'Donnell, then an ordinary seaman on board that ship. It appeared that on the day in question, while the Cockatrice was lying off Chatham, a lad named John M'Dunnell, who belonged to the ship, was sent to the mast-head for punishment, from whence he fell, and was killed upon the spot. A coroner's inquest was held on the body, and a verdict of "accidental death" was returned; but subsequently the friends of the lad, who reside at Plymouth, laid an information before the magistrates, in which it was alleged that he had been sent to the mast-head while in a state of intoxication. A full investigation of the charge was entered into on Wednesday and Thursday, which ended in the acquittal of the Lieut., no case whatever being made out against him. At the termination of the proceedings, one of the magistrates, addressing Lieut. Rees, said it was his pleasing duty to relieve him from the distress of mind under which he had evidently been labouring from such a charge. In going so fully into evidence upon the subject, their object had been to clear up everything that could affect his character, that he might leave the Court free from any imputation. They did not believe that he was aware of the boy being intoxicated at the time he ordered him to the mast-head, but they regretted that he had not inquired whether or not he was in a fit state to go there. Lieut. Rees said, his motive for sending the boy there was to keep him from drinking, and the company of women who came on board.

Warrant Officers.—The Gunners, Boatswains, and Carpenters in ordinary, are in future to be borne upon the books of the senior Captain's ship, and a list of each class kept for service is to be kept. They are then to be divided into three classes. 1st class, those who have held warrants for ships of the line; 2d class, 4th and 5th rates; 3d class, 6th rates and sloops. Pay of first class to be that of warrant officers of 2d rates, viz., 91*l.* 5*s.* when in commission, and 76*l.* 6*s.* when out of commission. Pay of 2d class (hereafter to include warrant officers of 6th rates) to be that at present allowed to 4th rates, 71*l.* 5*s.* 2*d.* in commission, and 56*l.* 18*s.* when out of commission. Pay of 3d class to be that of warrant officers of 6th rates and sloops, 61*l.* 5*s.* 4*d.* in commission, and 46*l.* 6*s.* out of commission. Tool money to carpenters as heretofore. Although immediately to be divided into classes, the alteration of pay will not operate until the officer is called into commission service in the class to which he belongs, or until established in the class which is to be effected by reduction of the present lists to a certain number, but where officers hold a higher rate of pay than is assigned by the new arrangement they will be allowed to retain it. Mode of Advancement.—Every death or superannuation from 1st or 2d rates present pay, and every two deaths or superannuation from 3d rates pay, one officer to be advanced from pay of 3d rates, to the pay of a 1st class. Every death or superannuation from 4th rates pay, and for every two deaths or two superannuations from 5th rates pay, one officer from 5th rates pay to the pay of the second class. Warrant officers on 6th rates and sloops pay, to remain on the 3d class pay, until advanced to higher class. Commanders-in-chief, on foreign stations, to retain the power of promoting to death vacancies under their commands. The Lords of the Admiralty also reserve to themselves the power of promoting deserving characters to the 3d class, and of advancing from lower to higher classes meritorious characters. In future, sea time only will be admitted to warrant officers in the calculation of their time for superannuation.

Sir E. Codrington.—The officers who served under Sir E. Codrington in the battle of Navarino, being desirous of showing their sense of his unremitting exertions in their behalf, have subscribed to purchase a piece of plate, in testimony of their admiration of his conduct. It was presented to the Admiral by a deputation from the subscribers.

The Comptroller-General of the Coast Guard, Captain Bowles, has been lately on the Sussex Coast, and proceeded on a tour of inspection.

The Lord Mayor of London and suite have visited the Royal Establishments at Sheerness, having arrived in the Prince George steamer; Vice-Admiral Fleming received his Lordship and suite, attended by all the Naval Officers and Sir James Gordon; and, having inspected the Howe flag-ship, and being saluted, proceeded to Rochester, where a splendid dinner was provided for 140 guests; all the Naval Officers were invited. This was a visit of conservancy to the Thames and Medway, to assert the rights of the City of London in those rivers.

The Isla freight-brig has sailed from Deptford for Gibraltar; also the Bengal Merchant, and Earl Grey convict ships; the Kent freight-ship is lying at the same place for Halifax; also the Eden convict ship, with the St. Vincent and Palinurus, ditto.

Those who remarked the dark appearance of the union flag at Greenwich Hospital, could not have well known the effect of the smoke of the numerous steam-vessels up and down the Thames on every place they pass; nor would a third day pass before the finest colour in paint or flags would undergo complete disfiguration. The Hospital at Greenwich is most liberally supplied; but it would be a waste indeed, to replace every thing affected by the smoke of the steamers; the ladies and gentlemen make sad complaints of their dresses who frequent steam-vessels.

Telegraph.—A new telegraphic system, applicable to nautical purposes, invented by M. Claude Sala, has just been presented as laying claim to the Monthyon prize. It is described as remarkable for its simplicity; for, by the aid of eight signs, it produces, without difficulty, all the words of the vocabulary, and, by means of two lanterns, can carry on a nightly correspondence.

CAVALRY.

4th Drag. Gds.—Under Lieut.-Col. Chatterton, were inspected at Dorchester last week, by Sir Charles Dalbiac, who reported them in a state of efficiency.

3d Lt. Drags.—The squadron in Limerick garrison was laurel on the anniversary of Salamanes, in which signal victory the Regt. bore a distinguished part.

INFANTRY.

Grenadier Gds, 1st Batt.—One wing is to embark at Dublin for Bristol on the 5th, and the other on the 9th Aug.—The Hon. R. Bruce has resigned the Adjutancy, on his promotion as milt. sec. and aide-de-camp to to Major-Gen. Sir E. Blakeney in Deblin.

Coldstream Gds. 1 Batt.—On Thursday morning, at four o'clock, 6 cos. Guards marched from the new infantry barracks, St. John's Wood. One co. from the Magazine barracks, Hydo Park, and 1 co. from the New Palace barracks, St. James's Park, marched for Bristol, there to embark on board a steamer for Dublin. On their arrival they will relieve the 1st batt. Gren. Guards, who will, on their arrival in England, re-occupy the above-mentioned barracks.

1st Foot, 2d Batt.—The freight ship Kent has been engaged for the conveyance from Cork to Canada of the detachment which was left behind on the embarkation of the service cos. in the Maitland tr. This detachment consists of three officers, (Lieut. Gordon, Ens. Neville, and Assist.-Surg. Knox,) and 44 men.

3d Foot.—Lieut. Stewart is in orders for New South Wales.

4th.—Lord F. Fitzclarence, Assist. Adj.-Gen. to the Forces, has returned to Eaton-square, from Winchester, where he inspected the Fusiliers, of which reg. his Lordship was for several years Lieut.-Col. On Wednesday and Thursday the regt., under the command of Col. Farquharson, marched into Windsor. The divisions were met each day on the road by Lord F. Fitzclarence, also by Lords Falkland and Adolphus Fitzclarence. On the arrival of the men at the barracks Lord F. Fitzclarence, with his known liberality, regaled them with bread and cheese and ale; his Lordship also gave a handsome breakfast to the Officers at the Castle Inn. This regt. was quartered at Windsor about 13 years ago, and the gentlemanly deportment of the officers, and well-regulated conduct of the men, has not been forgotten by the inhabitants. The corps will do garrison duty at Windsor for a few weeks, in order that his Majesty may present it with a pair of new colours.

10th—Lieut. Steele has arrived from Bermuda, on leave.

21st—Major Byrne is appointed an aide-de-camp to the Governor-General of India.

24th—1 co. 40 r. and f., from Pigeon House, Dublin, to Ashbourne on 26th till further orders, to relieve escorts, &c.

26th—The detachment at Donersile was withdrawn, and proceeded to Cork 21st and 22d inst.

26th Depot—On Tuesday morning a detachment, consisting of 1 Capt., 2 Subalterns, and 50 men, marched at an early hour from Devonport to Okehamptnn, in consequence of a riot arising out of a prejudiced notion of the recently formed union of parishes under the New Poor Law Act. We hear that the rioters foolishly sought a remedy for their supposed grievances in the burning of a barn and a farm house, but the latter was saved by prompt assistance. They blocked up all the thoroughfares to the town of Okehamptoo, hence it may be said to be in a state of siege.

31st—Ens. Eman is in orders for New South Wales.

37th—Under the command of Maj. Sadleir, embarked at Cork, on the 26th inst., on board of H. M. tr. sh. Athol, for Portsmouth.

40th—At a general Court-Martial, which sat on 24th June in Valetta, private George Cochran, of the 1st batt., was arraigned for having discharged a rifle loaded with a bullet at Serj. Daniel Davern, which passed through his body and severely wounded him, on 22d June, in the barracks at Floriana. The prisoner at once pleaded guilty to the charge, and showed an unusual desire that the proceedings should be speedily terminated. After evidence for the prosecution was heard, he only required half an hour to prepare his defence, but the court subsequently granted him until ten o'clock the next morning, when, being unable to produce any circumstances that could at all palliate the horrid crime he had committed, he was sentenced to be hanged according to the articles of war. The unfortunate Serjeant lingered till the 25th, when he died in great agony. On Monday morning all the troops of the garrison were formed on the glacis of the works of Valetta, before six o'clock, to witness the execution. The wretched man, dressed in a black jacket and pantaloons, walked with great firmness from the provost prison at St. Elmo, and expiated his crime on the scaffold, in presence of an immense concourse of people. The culprit joined in prayer with the military Chaplain, being evidently impressed with the awfulness of his situation, and met his end in a penitent and devout spirit. After the fatal noose was adjusted by the hangman, and the cap was pulled over his face, he prayed alone fervently for many minutes to his Almighty Judge for forgiveness and mercy, and uttered some advice to his comrades, counselling them to take warning by his fate, and to beware of giving way to the impulse of bad thoughts and passions. George Cochran was only 28 years of age, and was, generally speaking, considered a quiet character, until the committal of the rash act which has brought him to an ignominious death.

61st—The co. detached to Charleville on duty, is commanded by Capt. Jones, with Ens. Fenwick, and 2 serjs.

66th Depot—H. M. transh. Athol, which sailed from Plymouth, on 20th inst., with this depot on board, commanded by Capt. Clarke, arrived at Cork Harbour on Sunday last, and the troops disembarked and occupied quarters in Cork barracks.

69th—Depot is to relieve 87th at Chatham, and 67th and 47th from Cork to replace 69th.

72d—Depot at Omagh move on Monday for Mullingar, to arrive on the 8th.

75th—The comp. at Newlownbarry moved to Gorey in aid of civil power, on 21st and 22d.

76th—Capt. Le Poer Trench, has arrived from the West Indies, on leave, and proceeds to Cheltenham.

77th — Lord Hill directed the General Court-Martial, Maj.-Gen. Macdonell, President, which sat at Mullingar last month for trial of Capt Raines, at the prosecution of Capt. Clerke, to re-assemble forthwith and revise their finding. This has been done, and the Officers composing the Court have returned to their stations. We intended this week to have given the evidence on this Court Martial, but have not room.

87th—has been one of the best conducted depots ever stationed at Chatham. It is in high order, and is the pride of the garrison. Its front rank would make grenadiers, and its rear-rank light company-men, for the best regiments in the service. Major Magenis, and his officers may well be proud of their Paddy Careys. Such men are not common in the Guards, and they seem easily the set of men to win or keep an eagle. Sir L. Greaswell is seldom absent from the parade when the guards are given by this magnificent depot.

89th Depot—Three cos. and head-qrs., from Drogheda, to arrive at Omagh on Monday next, and the comp. at Tuam to arrive on Thursday.

91st Depot—moved from Newry to Drogheda 21st to 28th inst., detaching 2 Off., 2 Serj., and 30 r. and f. to Trim.

93d Depot—had scarce landed at Derry from Glasgow, when two cos. were ordered away to Newtown-Limivady, to preserve the peace, and put down Orange processions. The men were exposed to a deluge of rain, and boisterous wind on the march.

94th—Capt. Pipon has left Templemore for Jersey.

Royal Artillery—Col. Forbes has assumed the command of the Artillery in Portsmouth garrison. At the review of the Artillery at Woolwich, on Thursday evening, a corporal fell off one of the limber boxes and was slightly hurt; he is in the hospital doing well. It is expected that Capt. Buroshy will be appointed to the Adjutancy vacant by the promotion of Capt. Willis. During the practice on Tuesday, at the mortar battery, the flag of the staff was cut through by a ball from one of the howitzers. The practice both on Monday and Tuesday was very good. On Wednesday several squads of recruits were formed into column, and under the direction of Capt. and Adj. Best were marched past Col. Adye, to show how far they had advanced in their drill. On the afternoon of the same day there was a master drill in infantry movements, which were very well executed, with the exception of the firing with blank cartridge, which was very indifferent, particularly when the battalion was in square; the firing by companies was somewhat better performed. On Saturday last the Officers of the Artillery and the Guards played a match at cricket on the barrack-field, Woolwich. The Artillery Officers were very successful, as they so far beat the Guardsmen as to have seven men to spare and only three wickets down. Convivialities were kept up in the mess-room until a late hour. The very fine band belonging to the corps being in attendance, and playing some beautiful airs. The battery of Royal Artillery in Limerick garrison, under Capt. Stephens, leaves on 12th Aug. for Athlone, and same day a troop of Horse Artillery, from Dublin, under Capt. Saunders, will occupy their quarters at Limerick. Maj. Blachley's troop Rl. Horse Art. at Athlone will proceed to Dublin next month, also Capt. Haidinge's detn. on being replaced by Capt. Stephens' field battery from Limerick. Capt. Sabine, R. A., aide-de-camp to Maj.-Gen. Sir James Douglas, has left Limerick for Scotland, on two months' leave.

Royal Marines, Woolwich Division—On Monday last Lieuts. Curtis and Rea, with 45 men, embarked at the Dock-yard for Sheerness. The corps went to Woolwich Common for a drill field-day on Tuesday, which they went through with their accustomed precision. Second Lieut. N. Moore joins on the 1st, Major Wright goes on three months' leave of absence from the 1st August.

Lord Hill held a Levee on Thursday at his office in the Horse Guards, which was attended by Lieut.-Gen. Dillon, Lord Leitrim, Maj.-Gen. Ellice, Col. Percival, Col. Hall, Col. Copland, Col. Gibbs, Maj. Cole, Maj. Dillon, Maj. Smith, Capt. Elwes, Capt. Lyster, and some others.

Maj.-Gen. Sir Stamford Whittingham, K.C.B. and K.C.H. is appointed Governor and Com.-in-Chief of the Windward Islands, in succession to Maj.-Gen. Sir Lionel Smith, K.C.B.

THE EUPHRATES EXPEDITION.

India Board, July 28, 1836.

A despatch has been received at this office from Col. Chesney, R.A., in command of the Euphrates expedition, dated Euphrates steamer, Anah, May 28, 1836, of which the following, with its inclosure, are copies—

"Euphrates Steamer, Anah, May 28, 1836.

"Sir—It is with feelings of the deepest regret that do myself the honour of informing you that the Tigris steamer was totally lost during a hurricane of describable violence, which, after the short struge of about eight minutes, sent a fine vessel to the ttom in five * fathoms water, and deprived his jesty of 15 valuable men, with five natives in dition.

"My reports up to the 17th inst., at Deir, will have formed you that all was going on as successfully as e most sanguine could possibly desire. We found e Arabs well disposed, and quite ready to form dots for us of wood, charcoal, bitumen, and lignite al—all met in abundance, and tried with complete success. In addition to these marked advantages, e survey has been carried five hundred and nine iles down the Great River, which seemed in all respects favourable; in short, all was continued prosrity up to the afternoon of the 21st inst., when it leased God to send the calamitous event of which it now my duty to give a feeble sketch.

"A little after one, P.M., on that melancholy day, e flat boats being a little a-head, and the Tigris leading the Euphrates, a storm appeared, bringing with it, igh in the air, clouds of sand from the north-west uarter. At this moment we were passing over the ocks of Is Geria (deeply covered); and immediately fter we made a signal for the Euphrates to choose a erth and make fast, which was done more as a matter precaution, on account of the difficulty of seeing our ay through the sand, than from apprehension that e squall would be so terrific. The Tigris was imediately directed towards the bank, against which e struck without injury, but with so much violence to recoil a distance of about eight yards, leaving two en on the bank, who had jumped out to make fast. he wind then suddenly veered round, drove her bow f, and thus rendered it quite impossible to secure the essel to the bank, along which she was blown rapidly the heavy gusts, her head falling off into the stream she passed close by the Euphrates, which vessel had en backed opportunely to avoid the concussion. The ngines were working at full power, and every endeaour made to turn the vessel's bow to the bank. One nchor was let go, but the heel of the vessel made it mpossible to get the other out, and she was then early broad side to the wind, with the engines almost owerless, and the waves, rising to four or five feet, rcing their way in at the windows. Lieut. Cockurn, the Messrs. Staunton, and some of the men, ade ineffectual attempts to keep out the water, for e fate of the vessel was already decided; and the re part of the deck being under water, Lieut. Lynch me to report that the Tigris was sinking; and the ord was immediately passed for all to save themlves. At this very instant a momentary gleam of ght faintly showed the bank at the apparent distance eight or ten yards, and, as there seemed every obability that the stern would touch it before she ent down, Lieut. Lynch encouraged the people to main steady until they reached the land. All were deck at this critical moment, some clinging to the pes of the awning, the paddle-boards, and funnel; t the majority were close to the tiller, and all beaving with the most exemplary obedience, until the essel went down all at once, and probably within lf a minute after we had seen the bank for an stant.

"Lieut. Lynch, who was at my elbow, dived out nderneath the starboard ridge rope, at the moment hen there was about four feet water on the deck, nd I had the good fortune to get clear in the same ay, through the larboard side, and also to take a rection which brought me to the land, without aving seen any thing whatever to guide me through arkness worse than that of night. When it cleared little I found around me Lieut. Lynch and Mr. Eden oth greatly exhausted), Mr. Thompson, the Messrs. aunton, and several of the men. The hurricane was eady abating rapidly, and as the distance from the essel to the shore was very short, we indulged the ope that the rest of our brave companions had eached the bank lower down. For an instant I saw e keel of the Tigris uppermost, near the stern. She nt down bow foremost, and, having struck the ottom in that position, she probably turned round the bow as a pivot, and thus showed part of her el for an instant at the other extremity; but her ddle-beams, floats, and parts of the sides were already broken up and actually floated ashore, so speedy and terrific had been the work of destruction. From the moment of striking the bank until the Tigris went down it scarcely exceeded eight minutes, whilst the operation of sinking itself did not consume more than three; indeed, the gale was so very violent that I doubt whether the most powerful vessel, such as a frigate, could have resisted it, unless she were already secured to the bank; and for this there was in our case little or no time, as it was barely possible, in the position of our consort, to make fast and save the vessel.

"I had little, or rather no, hope that the Euphrates could have escaped, but the intrepid skill of Lieut. Cleveland and Mr. Charlwood enabled them to get out two anchors in the very nick of time; and by the united means of two hawsers, and the engines working at full power, the vessel maintained her position at the bank until the storm abated, as the enclosed letter (26th May) from Captain Estcourt will explain more fully; and as it required all the powers of a fifty-horse engine, in the case of the Euphrates, to keep her hawsers from snapping; I infer, that the twenty horses of the Tigris would not have been sufficient to enable her to keep the position at the bank, even if the officers had succeeded in securing her along side of it.

"Lieut. Lynch and Mr. Eden continued cool and collected until the last moment; nor were any efforts wanting that skill or presence of mind could suggest to save the vessel in the first instance, and the lives in the second, when the former had failed; nor could anything be more exemplary than their conduct, and that of all on board; scarcely a word was spoken, not a murmur was heard, and death was met with that exemplary degree of intrepidity and resignation which have been displayed by every individual throughout the arduous and trying service in which we have been engaged since January 1835.

"Having already given a faithful account of the short but eventful period of about twelve minutes, occupied by the beginning, the progress, and termination of the hurricane, I will conclude the painful part of my task by referring you to the inclosed return of the names of the valuable men who have been lost to his Majesty and their country for [illegible]r. Very different was the result when a similar but [illegible] a violent gale sent my little vessel to the bottom of this river in 1831, for I had not then the misery of deploring the loss of a single life, and my little schooner was afloat and continuing the descent in less than twelve hours; whereas, all our efforts as yet have failed even to find the remains of the vessel, not a ripple or the slightest trace of the unfortunate Tigris marks the spot where she went down; but our search has not yet terminated, and if she should be found without having been dashed to pieces, I shall take measures to recover her with the assistance of the diving bell and other means, especially as there are many veluable instruments on board, in addition to the hull and machinery, and particularly as the Arabs here are all well disposed.

"I am happy to say that the survivors of the expedition remain as much unshaken as ever in their confidence regarding the final success of this undertaking, as well as the manifest advantages, facilities, and cheapness of this line of communication. The hurricane has been, it is true, a most trying and calamitous event; but, I believe, it is regarded by all, even at this early day, as having no more to do with the navigation of the Euphrates, in other respects, than the loss of a packet in the Irish Channel, which might retard, but could not put an end to the intercourse between England and Ireland.

"We are, therefore, continuing our descent and survey to Bussorah, hoping not only to bring up the mail from India within the specified time, but also, if it pleases God to spare us, to demonstrate the speed, economy, and commercial advantages of the river Euphrates, provided the decision of Ministers shall be, in the true spirit of Englishmen, to give it a fair trial, rather than abandon the original purpose in consequence of an unforeseen and, as it proved, an unavoidable calamity. I have honour to be, &c.

"F. R. CHESNEY,
"Colonel commanding the expedition.

"The Rt. Hon. Sir J. Cam Hobhouse, Bart., President of the Board of Controul.

The letter of Capt. Estcourt, and the returns of the officers and men lost:—

* The last depth sounded; and we have since found three and a half fathoms on one side of the spot, and five on the other.

Annan, on the Euphrates, May 29, 1836.

THE lamentable event which has befallen the Euphrates expedition, in the midst of its prosperity, renders it desirable that the truth should be as widely spread as possible, that, melancholy as the facts are, reports should not increase their sadness. The expedition, with the two vessels, the Euphrates and Tigris, was descending the river most prosperously. Fuel had become, from Beles, most abundant, consisting of wood, a bituminous coal, and charcoal. The state of the river was so favourable, that the Tigris, being the smallest vessel, was in the habit of leading, and, having a native pilot on board, there was no difficulty of finding the deep channel. The Arabs were friendly; they engaged to provide depots of fuel, and entreated our protection.

On Saturday, 21st inst., we had brought up at midnight to a bank for fuel, and after the people had dined we cast off, meaning to steam to Annan, then distant about 80 miles. Scarcely, however, had we commenced our voyage, when a cloud of dust was seen to rise high into the air, on the right bank, threatening a squall of no ordinary violence. Preparations were immediately made to meet it, by furling the awnings, &c. Having passed over a reef of rocks, at this season far under the water, the signal was made from the Tigris, leading as usual, and having Col. Chesney on board, to choose a berth and make fast. Scarcely had we answered when the squall began. The Tigris was rounding to make fast, the Euphrates following. As we neared the left bank, I saw that the Tigris had failed to bring up—her head was falling outwards. The Euphrates was now obliged to back her paddles to give room—an operation full of danger, lest she should be unable to gather way upon herself again against the current and the violence of the gale. However, her power is great, and again working the engines with all force, she came to the bank with some violence; but by the skilful management of Lieut. Cleveland, and the activity of Mr. Charlewood, and a most willing crew, a hawser end small anchor were got on shore; then a chain cable and larger anchor; then a second chain cable and another anchor. All the time the paddles were kept working with their utmost power. Still, however, such was the violence of the hurricane, that the vessel drove, but, fortunately, it did not last above 15 minutes, at the end of which time our danger was over and the vessel was safe.

But what had become of our consort? I had seen her cross our bows, driving down the stream, and unable to bring her head to the gale. The thick dust which then succeeded excluded her from my sight; and from that moment I have never seen her since. In the midst of the hurricane, Mr. Fitzjames reported to me that he had seen her upset to leeward about three quarters of a mile, and instantly after that she went down. A party was sent off along shore to render what assistance they could, and another went by boat. Some of the officers—namely, Col. Chesney, Lieut. Lynch, Mr. Eden, Dr. Staunton, Mr. Staunton, and Mr. Thompson, came walking towards us, much exhausted. They had swam and dived ashore. Some seamen and natives also followed them; but 15 Europeans, of whom three were officers—namely, Lieut. Cockburn, Royal Artillery; Mr. Lynch, a passenger, and brother to Lieut. Lynch; and Mr. Sarded, an interpreter, were lost, besides five natives.

The hull of the vessel has never been found, notwithstanding all our efforts. She filled, and turned bottom up. All sounding has been in vain. Some bodies have floated even so low down as this place, and have been buried.

We have since continued our voyage thus far with our former success. The officers of the Tigris saved will return to England; but the expedition continues its course with the fairest prospects. I am, &c.,

J. B. BUCKNALL ESTCOURT,
Captain, 43d Light Infantry.

Extract of a Letter.—The Tigris on 21st May was near Nuhs, in the Euphrates, when a violent tempest came on, and the atmosphere was clouded almost to darkness. The few efforts time would allow to put the vessel in condition to weather the gale were unavailing, and the steamer in a few minutes foundered. The commander and Lieut. Lynch (relatives) went down together, but in their struggles for life while in the water, the commander states, in his letter to his friends received yesterday, he shook the Lieutenant off and was saved. He adds, that on recovering himself he found that 20 of his brave crew had perished. A committee of officers had, as usual, sat to investigate the matter, and they had reported in favour of the skill, intrepidity, and judgment of the commander under the trying circumstances in which he had been placed.

The following very affecting extract is from a letter written by Lieutenant Lynch, the Commander of the Tigris st.:—

"Euphrates St., off Town of Anah, in the River Euphrates, May 27, 1836.

"Poor Robert is no more! He went down by my side, on the 21st of this month, in a dreadful storm, that drove my vessel to the bottom in a few minutes, as we were running along, proud in leading the way over the unknown stream, and confident in our vessel and the band around us. All was blighted in a few minutes; even yet I can only look back with stupor to the dreadful event. Little did we think death was hovering so near. I saw the storm coming, and prepared for it, but preparations were of no avail; it dashed us before it, amidst a cloud of sand, dark as midnight; and, cleft to fragments by the racking lightning and echoing with the thunder that appeared to crash all around us, man's puny hand was powerless, the blast was irresistible, and the darkness passed away to leave a sinking wreck. We sunk together—thrice was I dragged down by some sinking sailor, and when I rose unencumbered from the last deadly struggle, nearly exhausted, I looked around in vain for Robert. A few minutes dashed me, clinging to the passing fragments, to the bank, where I climbed, not to find him; oh! we had parted for ever—he was never seen more. I cannot go on. Suffice it to say, though I have lost all, the storm could not leave any stain on our name. The committee of officers appointed as usual in such circumstances gave me, with eagerness, in their report to his Majesty's Government, full credit for judgment to meet and intrepidity to face danger, and avert it as became an officer: and those who remain to mourn for their lost comrades are as eager to soothe my loss, by testifying their belief that they were led through the danger by an officer whom the appearance of death did not divert from his efforts to save them. Twenty of my fine crew went down with Robert; few, comparatively, were saved—not a third of the whole crew, which was above thirty-five in all; and when I was dashed to the shore I had hardly breath to return thanks for my safety to that Power by whose hand alone I could have been saved. Adieu."

THE NATIVE LOVER'S SONG.

How can I fail to love thee?
The sun that saw us wed,
Still from his throne above me
Its warming beams doth shed;
The stars that wove the chain
That hath together bound us,
Still in the skies remain,
And pour their light around us.

How can I fail to love thee,
Sweet flower of beauty bright?
O! may the sun above me
Appear without his light,
And stars lose all their beams,
When love for thee shall part,
How dear th' idea seems!—
From this devoted heart.

How can I fail to love thee!
Beneath the stars and sun,
Can I a traitor prove me,
And where for refuge run?
No—like their light, whose flow
Ceases or slackens never,
My love for thee shall glow
Thus in my heart for ever.

SANDHURST COLLEGE AND WOOLWICH ACADEMY.

[We have only room for a brief extract from a very able article, by our clever friend Ensign O'Donoghue, in the forth-coming number of Fraser's Magazine].

We have two national institutions for the instruction of lads destined to command in our armies,—one with a magnificent building, where but a limited portion of scientific knowledge is imparted,—the other where, in a most prison-like looking abode, an admirable course of instruction is pursued. It seems as if those who established them, went upon the well-digested principle of making a large hole in the cellar for the cat to go through, and a small one for the convenience of the kitten. What an excellent, real college might be formed by joining Woolwich and Sandhurst together; and how his Majesty's army could be improved, were its Officers taken exclusively from it. Neither much difficulty nor expense would be incurred in forming one great polytechnic school. It should, however, be established in the neighbourhood of some great garrison and arsenal, where access would be had to view the various operations going forward, by which alone many parts of military science can be properly learned. Here students should qualify themselves for the different services,—those possessed of the highest attainments to have their choice, of engineers, artillery, cavalry, or the line, according to the vacancies then existing, and to receive commissions without purchase; those who could afford to pay for them to be allowed to purchase in the line and cavalry, after having gone through a certain course of study, short of that required for a commission, gratis; and those whose progress in study, whether through idleness or incapacity, was unequal to the time employed, to be sent back to their friends. And to make it worthy a great and generous nation, the sons of Officers who have died in the service should be educated and provided for at the public expense, even should the rest of the entire establishment be defrayed by the subscriptions of living Officers and private gentlemen.

Correspondence addressed to the Editor.

STATE OF THE INDIAN ARMY.

SIR,—Permit me, through the medium of your Journal, to offer a few observations on the extracts you have published* from a letter addressed by a "Late Judge Advocate" to the Court of Directors relative to the Indian Army. The suggestion that that Army should be governed by one code of laws as closely assimilated as practicable to those in use in H.M.'s Forces, is unexceptionable, and will doubtless receive the approbation of all military men. I coincide, likewise, in his almost proverbial thesis that periods of peace and inactivity are always productive of a greater number of Courts-Martial than the busy time of war. But in the face of this admission it would have been more creditable to his candour, and more just to the Army of which he is a member, had he prosecuted his researches a little beyond the limits of the retrospect he has chosen to take, ere he affirmed the increase of General Courts-Martial has been so extensive as his statement implies. The "Late Judge Advocate" being a Madras officer, I shall confine my remarks principally to that Presidency; and I would ask him whether he has in his possession a synopsis of Madras Courts-Martial for the last 25 or 30 years, terminating about 1830, drawn up by Capt. Keighley, Judge Advocate General, for the information of Sir G. T. Walker when Commander-in-Chief, in consequence of the reports then prevalent relative to the alarming progressive increase of General Courts-Martial, divided into periods of a given number of years, and clearly demonstrating that the alleged discrepancy in the number of Courts-Martial at the various periods—considered, of course, in connexion with the relative numerical strength of the Army, and the more extended jurisdiction of Courts in later years—had no other existence but in the imagination of the inculcators of the report; always, however, excepting the period embracing the years of the Rangoon war, when the paucity was most remarkable, which period being observed, is the precise time selected by the "late Judge Advocate" to contrast with the succeeding years, and establish the correctness of his hypothesis. Such a paper I have perused, and though I cannot charge my memory with its details, I have a distinct recollection of its general tendency; and the remark of the "late Judge Advocate," that 1830 is the latest date to which he possesses the calculation, would seem to identify his statement with this very document. Adventitious circumstances may occasion an increase or a decrease in the number in particular years, but I cannot admit they have, generally speaking, augmented in the ratio it is the fashion to assume, for I attribute much of the clamour to the immemorial "fashion" of representing the passing time as more replete in the crime and immorality than the good old days of yore; yet if you refer to the writers in those halcyon days you will find precisely similar strictures on the present, the like pleasing reminiscences respecting the past, and the same gloomy forebodings for the future. And, Sir, when we reflect that in the troops serving in Great Britain ALONE there have been in the last two years and a half, independent of all other sentences, no less than 588 cases of corporal punishment, notwithstanding the circular letter restricting that punishment to certain offences specified, I do not apprehend we are justly chargeable with having had a disproportionate number of Courts-Martial, though the rank of the prisoners may have given greater notoriety to the proceedings. The fact of less power being entrusted to our minor Courts may occasion a larger proportion of General Courts; but if offences are committed and prisoners tried, the description of tribunal before which they are arraigned cannot be of very essential importance. Assuming, however, the view of the writer to be correct, that General Courts-Martial have increased to the extent predicated, I much doubt whether his remedy of one confirming authority, aided by a single professional Judge Advocate, would have the desired effect.

First—The duties would be too onerous for any one man to perform with satisfaction to himself or justice to his subordinates. No Commander-in-Chief of all India could consistently with a due discharge of the other multifarious duties of his office and in Council, bestow that attention on Courts-Martial to which they are unquestionably entitled, even supposing the intention is to confine it to the commissioned ranks in the two minor Presidencies, though the writer's precise meaning is somewhat problematical. In the three Presidencies there are, King's and Company's 216 regiments, besides Horse Artillery, Engineers' Departments, Local Horse, Invalid Corps, Warrant Officers, Staff Serjeants, and a host of camp followers. How then is it possible that one man could supervise the whole law proceedings of this immense force, and at the same time give his attention to the whole internal economy of the Empire, or portion of it, and assist in the deliberations of the Supreme Council? The inevitable result would be the delegation of his authority to the professional Judge Advocate, who would thus exercise "an arbitrary irresponsible authority," deciding upon the usages of war without any practical knowledge of that service, or the subject upon which he had to deliver his opinion.

Secondly—The delay which must necessarily occur in the transit of the proceedings to and from head-quarters could not fail to have a pernicious effect, by retarding the cause of justice, and, in the event of reference upon any points during the sitting of the Court, the tardiness of the post would render the proceedings at a distant station almost interminable.

Thirdly—The assertion that the "very general officer" who ordered the trial being the confirming officer is "equally opposed to the spirit of law and justice," is the most strange doctrine ever propounded by any one who has been a Judge Advocate, and in urging the propriety of adopting the King's articles of war. A "late Judge Advocate" ought to have known that by those articles in every Court-Martial, regimental, garrison, or otherwise, the convening is also the confirming officer; he ought to have been aware that no Commanding Officer directing the assembly of a Court Martial, without having previously ascertained that there was sufficient matter to entitle the charge to serious deliberation, would subject himself to the severe animadversion of his superiors. And he ought to have reflected that any argument militating against vesting local Commanders-in-Chief with authority to confirm the sentence of Courts Martial assembled under their orders, would operate with equal force against the confirming officers in all minor Courts; consequently, in advocating the adoption of H.M.'s articles of war, he was recommending the introduction or continuance of a system, one of the vital principles of which was "equally opposed to the spirit of law and justice, and liable to much glaring abuse in such far distant possessions." Neither, Sir, can I allow that this transfer of power to the Commander-in-Chief in all India can, from the analogy of H. M.'s service, be deemed to have any efficiency in diminishing the frequency of recurrence to General Courts-Martial for a comparison of the relative numbers in the two services of the Madras side would not assuredly be disadvantageous to the Coast Army; and Sir Henry Fane's recent orders on this subject apply to the King's troops equally with those of the Company. With regard to the supervision of minor Courts by Divisional Judge Advocates, I must dissent from the writer's conclusion when he describes this system as a primary cause of many pernicious consequences. Uniformity in the proceedings of these Courts all must agree is highly desirable; the slovenly manner in which they were often conducted, the inadequate and even illegal punishments awarded by them, and their taking cognisance of offences not within their jurisdiction, alike proclaimed the necessity of some remedy, and that applied has infallibly corrected many of these defects. That the line may have been too strictly drawn, and too rigidly followed—that from the nature of patronage in India, in selecting officers for the service due regard may not have been paid to the cautionary "ne puero gladium,"—and that inconsiderate zeal has frequently occasioned comments on the proceedings of a frivolous and vexatious nature—I will readily concede; but to adopt the language of an officer of the soundest judgment, "it was, in its original principle, a most excellent arrangement, and calculated to do much good." And when we refer to the state of military law in the Bombay Army, and with H. M.'s troops serving with the Court Army, amongst whom no such scrutinising method of supervision obtained, and note that with the former, in five years, more than four times the number of lashes were awarded in the cavalry regiments than at Madras, and observe the G. O.'s of the latter teeming with reports of Courts-Martial, I confess I am not a convert to the opinion that this system should be repudiated, or assigned as a principal cause of the alleged increase of General Courts-Martial; on the contrary, I maintain the benefits resulting from it far more than counterbalance the ills.

Lastly—In adverience to the recommendation that the Judge Advocate General should be a legal gentleman, I have yet to learn the wisdom, policy, or utility, of substituting a lawyer for a soldier; and I sincerely trust the day is far distant when this functionary shall be appointed, as he is in England, rather for his political creed than his merits acquirements. All the requisites in a Judge Advocate are a clear head, honourable principles, and sufficient study and application to be conversant with the principles of common law, and the general rules of the law of evidence. And rest assured, these qualifications, guided by a sound practical acquaintance with the usages and customs of the service, will give greater contentment than the most learned decision of a mere theorist, as every purely legal officer must be. If one thing is to be more deprecated than another, it is the introduction of any measure calculated to render Courts-Martial mere Courts of Law. There is already too general a disposition to consider them as arenas for the display of knowledge and the indulgence of personal invective—too great an aptitude to attend rather to legal proprieties than to the dictates of that high sense of honour which ought to pervade the breasts of all connected with them; and placing a professional mace at the head of the department will not tend to check the growing evil, or restore that exalted tone of military feeling which is gradually dwindling away.

TRISTRAM WINDING UP HIS OPINION AND REMARKS ON THE UTILITY, IMPORTANCE, AND ADVANTAGES, OF LLOYD'S REGISTER OF BRITISH AND FOREIGN SHIPPING.

Sir,—More than 800 British Ships and Vessels having foundered, or been wrecked, with full 4,000 seamen on board, in the year 1833, it became the imperative duty of the under-writers and merchants to unite for the protection of their common interest, and to offer to check, in the opinion of the maritime nations, the national disgrace to which England was fast approaching, in sanctioning unseaworthy and inefficiently equipped merchant fleets to be navigated as floating-traps for human life and property.

In the absence of legislative interference in the construction and equipment of our mercantile Navy, I beg to submit that merchants, passengers, and seamen, are much indebted to "Lloyd's Register of British and Foreign Shipping," for ensuring them a safe and dry conveyance for themselves, their effects, and property, across the seas to the most distant parts, in ships which are warranted, after the most careful and impartial survey, to be perfectly sound and well equipped; in fact, qualified in strength and efficiency to undergo a long voyage, and to encounter a gale and a heavy sea.

The opponents of this Institution contend that its register is "useless as a book of reference," because numbers of shipowners will never submit, for divers reasons and causes (best known to themselves), to have their ships surveyed, classed, and registered by a self-constituted society, as the bye-laws and regulations of which must ever be considered arbitrary, partial, and unfair; and, as it is said, "there is a great many ships owned by the committee who framed, and yet continue to manage this book, which are not registered therein."

Admitting this to be fact, and that there really may be as good-conditioned shipping which have not been surveyed, classed, and registered, as those whose good qualities stand pre-eminent on "Lloyd's Register;" yet, how are the seaworthy to be selected from the unseaworthy, unless there is a public Register, or certificates of the survey, classification, and qualities of the seaworthy to refer to? Who would place any dependence upon the qualifications of a ship upon the mere ipse dixit of an interested shipowner or shipmaster? What is most singular in the argument of those opponents to "Lloyd's New Register" is, that whilst they endeavour most ungenerously and unnecessarily to depreciate its system, yet they candidly admit the time is come when all British shipping, for the honour of the nation, the interest of the public, and for the sake of humanity, should be surveyed, and if found defective, repaired, or those of slight construction doubled, then classed and registered by the authority of the Legislature; that there should be a "Marine Board" established in London, under the control of Government, and its whole establishment of commissioners, clerks, secretaries, registers, and surveyors, both in London and the out-ports, to be paid by the public, in order to work a regeneration in the construction, repairing, mantling, storing, victualling, and disciplining the mercantile Navy! This much desired regeneration has been in active progress for these last two years. The Merchant Seaman's Bill, the Seamen's Registration Bill, the Tonnage Bill, the improving system of apprenticeship, the encouragement to seamen to enter the Royal Navy from "good usage," increased prize money and pensions for servitude and wounds; thereby ensuring better treatment to seamen in the merchant service; the appointments of Government agents to superintend the victualling and equipment of the emigrant ships, and the embarkation of the emigrants themselves, and above all, the establishment of this great national boon, "Lloyd's Register of British and Foreign Shipping," and that "Marine and Commercial Board," the "Shipowners' Society," in London, which has managing committees, a secretary, clerks, and surveyors, at the out-ports (paid by the society, and not by the public), must essentially tend to prove and convince that regeneration and improvement are beneficially working their way throughout the merchant Navy.

This acknowledged improvement in the efficiency and qualification of a vast number of our merchant ships, belonging to the most wealthy, liberal, and respectable class of shipowners, must also tend to prove the manifold and important advantages of "Lloyd's Register of British and Foreign Shipping," to the united credit and interest of the nation, the mercantile community, and shipping in general, of this kingdom: all of which I humbly and respectfully submit to the due consideration of the select committee in Parliament, now sitting on Mr. Buckingham's motion, "to inquire into the causes of the number of shipwrecks, with a view to ascertain whether such improvements might not be made in the construction, equipment, and navigation of merchant shipping, to diminish the annual loss of life and property at sea."

The greatest ease and comfort to the mind and health of the seamen is a good ship; good seamen will then seek and be found in all classed and registered ships which have undergone repair and survey. The greatest confidence is always placed in a well-manned and regulated ship. The owners of ships classed and registered in this Institution will then command the choice of seamen, may enter the skilful, healthy, and orderly, and reject the unskilful, weak, and undeserving. The greatest dependence is also placed upon a well-constructed or soundly repaired ship, particularly after supervision or survey by experienced Surveyors; for the first and uppermost thought and consideration of the navigator, passenger, or skipper, is security to his person, health, and property, in trusting either to the sport of the wind and sea. Where is the most likely probability of finding that security from the customary dangers of the seas? in a surveyed, classed, and registered ship, guaranteed seaworthy in hull, and efficient in spars, sails, anchors, cables, hawsers, boats, and stores; or, in an old vessel, which, for want of survey, may be leaky at sea, dry-rotten, nail-sick, or otherwise defective or inefficient in her general equipments. Shipowners, keeping their ships in the highest state of efficiency, in hulls, equipments, and crews, at a very considerable expense, may justly expect the patronage and protection of Government; the encouragement and support of the public; in fact, such shipping, wherever found, will be certain of the monopoly of passage, and the carrying trade the more so, where Government is concerned in the chartering of ships for the conveyance of stores, troops, or convicts; and patrons of emigration, or guardians of parishes, after the publication of the names of those vessels so surveyed, classed, and registered by this society, would be considered wanting in humanity and foresight were they to hire any other for the transport of British emigrants from their native land. Let, then, every navigator, passenger, or freighter, before he either trusts his health, convenience, life, or property, in any ship or vessel, in any part of the world, first demand of the master thereof a sight of her certificate of survey, classification, qualities, and registry; and if nearly this exhibited, he may safely and confidently venture his LIFE and his ALL to* her care and safeguard:—

"Lloyd's Register of British and Foreign Shipping.

"No. "London, 1836.

"Office, No. 2, White Lion Court, Cornhill.

"This is to certify, that the ship Neptune, of Dublin, Tom Bowline, master, 400 tons, bound to New South Wales, has been surveyed by the Surveyors to this society, and is reported to be in good condition, in hull, spars, anchors, cables, boats, and stores, for her present intended voyage, and has been classed.

"Charge, 10*s.* "Witness my hand,

" , Chairman

" , Secretary. of the committee."

Public and individual support and patronage of this humane and beneficial Institution, at once a boon to the nation and subject, will infinitely diminish the present annual loss of private property, valued at ONE MILLION sterling! The national calamity in the sacrifice of the lives of TWO THOUSAND Seamen, compel those avaricious and self-interested shipowners, who anticipate profit, riches, and fortunes, in navigating ships and vessels, which are too often COFFINS for their inmates, DESTROYERS and WRECKERS of their cargoes, from wilfully sinning in the face of the world, against Providence and human nature!

Sir,—Observing in your paper of this week that the Diagrams, descriptive of the trials of sailing between the Vernon, Barham, and Revenge, are attributed to me, I beg to inform you that they were the work of Captain Sir W. Elliott of the Revenge, and that my report was unaccompanied by diagrams; you will, therefore, perceive the propriety of correcting the mistake in your next number.

A SPECIMEN OF ROYAL ARTILLERY DISCIPLINE AT WOOLWICH.

Sir,—About two-and-twenty years ago, a young Second Lieutenant of Artillery, being the officer on duty for his battalion, had, in the course of his mutilities, duly disturbed the sick in hospital, and was waiting the arrival of the Captain of the day to make his report, viz., "That the sick had no complaints." This report, though in diametrical opposition to the cause of their being in hospital, perfectly satisfactory; and when we consider that their visits are intended as a check upon the Surgeon's, before whose medical opinions all military interference is prostrated, we shall see the whole fabric is consistently put together, with as much absurdity as is common at the Seat of Science, that is to say, with as much as possible.

I should explain, for the information of those who have never been orderly officers. It is essential that this officer visit the sick in hospital at a quarter before nine o'clock; he is preceded by an orderly non-commissioned officer, who tramps heavily in his front, and opens the door of each ward, crying out in true corporal accent, "Ten-shun!" upon which the sick rise up who are not in bed, and draw from their heads their whitey-brown woollen night-caps, and await the question from the disturbing officer of "Any complaints here?" To which some one of the convalescents, who has just discussed a scanty meal, replies, "None, Sir;" whilst a poor yellow bed-ridden wretch in one of the corners rolls his glassy eye upon the noisy inquirer, in a vain effort of acknowledgment for a broken repose.

Well, then, our hero had done all this part of his duty as conscientiously as it is done to this day, and was waiting the arrival of the Captain to make his report; when, lo! a cat came trotting by; boy-like, he threw a stone at the animal, and two trusty tormentors, Crib and Venture, that unbidden seldom left their master's heels, at full speed dashed after pussy—pussy, like Charles, was saved in an oak. A man in a dirty dress, a sort of kitchen-gardener and cow-keeper (in those days an orderly), came up to the officer, and said, "If you were a drummer-boy, you would be flogged for that." The officer, somewhat astonished, said, "Who are you?" "I am the Surgeon-General's orderly man:" (he might have said one of them). Our hero replied, "Then you, a soldier, dare to speak so impertinently to an officer—I shall confine you." The man was then made a prisoner of in the barrack guard-room, and a crime sent in against him. The Surgeon-General during waited on by the officer, but not being at home, was written to, and the usual regrets stated, that imperative duty had obliged our hero to confine one of his servants. A Regimental Court-Martial at least was expected, and already his evidence was arranged, as the facts had happened, to state to the Court. But judge of his surprise, Mr. Editor, when an hour afterwards, he heard the General Commanding had released the prisoner, because he was in the Surgeon-General's employ, whose cows would be put to exceeding inconvenience if, like them, he were not considered within the pale of Military law.

Advised by some older officers, he wrote respectfully to the General, begging the man might be again placed in confinement, and the circumstance inquired into. This was refused; but our hero was paraded in the General's office and had a lecture served out to him upon the enormity of hunting the Surgeon-General's cat (for such pussy proved to be), and then confining his servant. At the same time our hero was told, that if he was not content with the before-mentioned General's decision, that the circumstance should be reported to the Commandant for his, the next time he came to the office (another worn out old gentleman); and one of the Staff obligingly whispered to our hero that he had better be content with the justice he had obtained! or the Commandant might treat him less kindly. Nothing daunted, the officer urged that the business might be laid before the higher authorities, which he was invited to do at his peril. "The next time the Commandant came to the office," his deaf ears were assailed with what he should say on the subject to the young officer. When surrounded by the Staff, and backed up by old "Salts and Senna," our hero was sent for, and told in the most solemn manner, that it was very wrong indeed to throw a stone at the Surgeon-General's cat, and his servant only did right in protecting his master's property.

Duly impressed with an exalted idea of the justice and discipline of these should-be "cradled creatures," our hero made a very improper speech†, which was suffered to pass unnoticed, lest the cause which must have come out might be made known, or that the Army might avail themselves of the mysteries of the scientific monopoly—the Woolwich philosophers of those days deemed it prudent to keep as much as possible to themselves.

WHILE lately employed in examining numerous documents and returns, for the purpose of drawing up the statements and framing the tables which we have laid before the public respecting the service and relief of His Majesty's regiments in India and the Colonies, we have been forcibly struck by the vast difference in the number and nature of the crimes committed in regimenta serving in India and the other dominions of the crown, and particularly by the very extraordinary disproportion between the offences committed during the early and latter years of a regiment's service in India. We have no wish to make invidious comparisons between regiments or the Presidencies in which they are compelled to serve, but from among many cases we shall merely state one, which will convince every impartial reader, that to long and hopeless service in a tropical clime we must attribute the ruinous condition of, formerly, the best disciplined and best conducted regiments. "Nemo repente fuit turpissimus."

The —— regiment has been in India many years, and, if a better system be adopted, may soon be expected to return. This regiment, on landing in India, was composed of the fine old soldiers of the Peninsular Army, and was one of those into which volunteers never entered until 1829. During the first four years of its service in India, not even one individual of it came before a Civil Court of any description, or before a General Court-Martial, and in that period thirteen successive months passed without even a regimental Court-Martial having been held. But in the fourth year even of its Indian service, signs of deterioration were observable, and in the fifth year large bodies of volunteers, from the regiments ordered home, entered its ranks. Since that year crime has fearfully and rapidly increased, and the —— regiment is no longer one distinguished for high, moral, and physical condition. Now this regiment has been commanded by the same officer during the whole of its service in India, with the exception of three or four months, and the change it has, in common with others, undergone, cannot be attributed to a change of system or of government, but to the united effects of Indian service, and the influx of a mass of men on whom protracted service in that country was marked by debauchery and debility. What is true of this particular regiment, is, in degree, equally true of all serving in the East Indies. All, sooner or later, lose their European character, and need a home-recovation in health, morals, and military discipline. What other than a demoralised state can be expected to result from a banishment of twenty years to a country of Pagan population, far from the civilising and correcting influences of a Christian community, and unrestrained by the opinions of men of similar institutions, customs, and manners?

The evil effects of such a climate, people, and morality, as India possesses, on our soldiery need not be more fully stated. The evil is obvious, and admitted by all. Let us, however, briefly sketch the history of a regiment in India. It usually lands in that country in high health and order, but ere a few months have passed it loses by the rapidly terminating diseases of fever, dysentery, and cholera, a considerable number of officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates. To this early loss, incidental to the first year of service in a tropical climate, is to be added, that arising in subsequent years from the slower but equally certain attacks of liver complaints, &c., which soon leave the regiment with few of those who landed with it from Europe. Thus is a corps early deprived of those who were instructed in their duties at home, while their places are supplied from the ineffectives of a long-neglected Half-pay List, and by the dregs of corps ordered home after twenty years similarly destructive service. Thus is evil perpetuated by accumulation of evil, and a corps, already declining from the nature of its service, fast hurried into a hopeless state of lax discipline, loose moral principle, and irremediable physical debility. After twenty years, the last ten of which at least (in consequence of that long service being required of corps and subsequent volunteering) have been clouded by gross excess and deep crime, the regiment is ordered to England, probably without one individual who had with it embarked for India.

If we want an European, not an Asiatic Force, alone in India, we must effect an earlier relief, and then the volunteers would become ere long a better class of men; for then better men, not the dregs of our people, would enlist in the first instance. It is the utter hopelessness of the soldier's lot in India which drives him into excess, and ultimately into crime of the deepest dye. The soldier of peace and of war is a different man. In war, we will easily obtain men who will enlist for the love of arms, and the hope of rising by them to fame and honours. In peace, we must hold out some better inducement than banishment to India for twenty years (banishment worse than many convicts undergo) to lead men to adopt a calling in which there is daily and hourly harassing and heart-breaking duties to perform, too often useless, and frequently trivial and silly. In fine, measures must be soon adopted to improve the condition of our soldiery, or all hope of ultimately doing away with corporal punishment must be abandoned; for who will be found to command convicts (and such may our soldiers well be called when banished for twenty years) without the use, as well as the terror, of the lash? We leave this for the consideration of those who can remedy the evil.

In giving insertion last week to the letter addressed to the General Commanding-in-Chief, we were compelled to postpone till the present the roster which accompanied it; a document which clearly demonstrates that justice, immediate justice, can be done to our Colonial Army. Believing, as we conscientiously do, that there is not in the British service any officer who is more anxiously alive to the interests and comforts of the Army than Lord Hill, we are certain that the various statements we have earnestly submitted during the last three months, pointing out the grievous injury of protracted service in the East and West Indies, will have that gallant Nobleman's close attention; and, that for the future we shall not have pet corps relieved from Mediterranean service, whilst others are doomed to twenty years exile in a tropical climate.

Proposed Roster of Infantry Regiments for the relief of those in India and the Colonies, so as to reduce the service in India to 15 years, and elsewhere to 10 years nearly, without sending those which have last served in the East or West Indies back to either, after remaining only four years in the United Kingdom.

Let it be observed, that the 19th and 36th will, in 1840, be available for the relief of the 73rd and 24th, from the Mediterranean and America, and the 24th and 45th may be sent to healthy stations also, by relieving regiments at them, which can be sent to complete their foreign service from the Cape and Mediterranean, &c.

The above roster does not take into account the 3 and 45th, which may be considered under relief by 17th and 4th from New South Wales, though not li to reach England in 1836. In like manner, the 36th 19th are unnoticed, as being ordered from the Indies. By adhering to the above roster, in 184 service in India will be reduced to 15 years, without material increase of service elsewhere.

* The 12th may appear to be sent out before its turn, but is not the case, as the regiments for New South Wales re nearly a year at Chatham.

Our readers must have been prepared for some me to hear contradictory reports respecting the ualities of the ships in Sir Charles Paget's quadron, which, after putting into Torbay to nable the Bellerophon to set up her rigging, bob-ays, &c., which had stretched considerably, ar-ved in Plymouth Sound on Wednesday last, the ercules having been sent on before to make good me defects in her rigging. The ships passed own Channel in the order of sailing, and at one me the sail was reduced, by signal from the Ad-iral, to treble-reefed topsails. No trial had ken place, neither had the trim of the different ips been ascertained. It is much to be regretted nt the Asia did not accompany the squadron, as me criterion of the capabilities of the ships might ave been formed from competition with her. The quadron will make good their deficiencies, correct ny defects in their rigging, &c., at Plymouth, d then proceed to the westward on a cruise of x weeks' duration. We trust we shall be enabled lay before our readers authentic intelligence f the result of the various trials which will take lace on all points of sailing. We are without ny direct intelligence from the squadron, but it reported in town that in light winds the Belle-ophon appears to have the advantage over the ther ships, whilst in strong breezes the Vanguard isplays a decided superiority in all respects, but ore particularly in her extraordinary stability, eeling only four degrees, when the other ships ere obliged to ship their cell ports, and that the Bellerophon is inferior to the rest of the squadron s regards this essential point. However, it is mpossible to form any opinion from what has itherto occurred; and as the partisans of all arties either invent reports, or colour those in xistence to suit their wishes, it would be folly repeat the various stories we have heard. They nd to show, however, that the trial about to ake place excites no small interest, and all we an say is, let the best ship be declared so, as soon s it can be proved.

A most unprecedented question was put by a Member of the House of Commons (Mr. Maclean) o the Secretary of the Admiralty in his place in Parliament on Tuesday night, which we think it ecessary to make a few observations upon, par-iculnrly as there appears a meddling desire on he part of certain Members (generally the worst nformed on professional matters) to interfere, not nly with the discipline, but the Military move-nents of the Navy and Army.

Our readers need scarcely be informed of the existence of a treaty, to which Great Britain, France, Portugal, and Spain, are the contracting parties, guaranteeing to the Queen of the latter country assistance, in the shape of arms, men, and money, should such be deemed necessary; and application having been made for Naval assistance, our Government, acting upon the faith and in the spirit of the treaty, ordered a squadron to co-operate with the Spanish Generals. This squadron was placed under the command of Commodore Lord John Hay, who, finding the inconvenience of continually landing his seamen, and also that the draught of water of his large ships rendered them frequently unavailable, applied for a reinforcement of steam-vessels and Marines, as the best means of affording the co-operation required. Several hundred Marines, and three or four armed steamers, were accordingly ordered upon this service; and it will be recollected that these Marines form an integral part of the force of the squadron, are borne either as part of the crews or supernumeraries on the ships' books, are under the immediate authority of the British Commodore, and to all intents and purposes a portion of the Naval force. It is true that they are in greater numbers than it is usual to employ in ships; but the reason for this is, that they are the best suited to the service in hand; and the fact of employing Marines in aid of a constituted and acknowledged Government, when required by the authorities so to do, is nothing new. It is not long since the Forts on the Tagus were garrisoned by the Marines of the squadron; and our Seamen and Marines have been repeatedly landed to suppress riots, which might otherwise have ended in rebellion and revolution, at Rio Janeiro, and in different parts of South America, even where no treaty to that effect existed. We will say nothing of General Evans and his Legion, because, serving the Queen of Spain, he must be considered to all intents and purposes a Spanish General; but it so happens, that the line of the Coast has been entrusted to his division of the Queen's troops, and with him our Naval force has been directed to co-operate.

Such is the plain state of the facts; yet, in the face of these, an honourable Member of the House puts a question seeking to draw from official authority the number of men employed—in other words, the British Force available upon the Coast of Spain.

We have said this is an unprecedented proceeding, and we repeat that, if such questions have been hitherto put in Parliament, the information has never been granted; for the plain reason that, although in such cases as the present it is of little consequence what is known of the force or intentions of the squadron, it might hereafter be attended with embarrassment under cases easy to contemplate; and therefore the Secretary of the Admiralty was fully justified (as indeed the general feeling of the House admitted) in refusing the information. What view the honourable Member had in seeking to obtain an official acknowledgment of a fact of which he might easily have satisfied himself out of the Newspapers of the day it becomes us not to speculate on. We eschew politics, and must protest against party spirit, now so rife, being made available to the future detriment and injury of our sailors and soldiers when employed upon perilous service. It would be a strange proceeding and a bad precedent to quote hereafter, that official information had, in any case, been granted of the force of a Fleet or Army:—the next question would be its destination, and so on, until the enemy were, by this means, fully informed of its intentions.

Much controversy has been thrown away as to our actual position with Spain, we mean whether we can be considered at war or peace with that nation. If to hold the usual diplomatic relations with the acknowledged authorities, exercising the Government, and in possession of all the resources, the Colonies and nine-tenths of the territory of a kingdom, may be considered a sign of unity, then are we at peace with Spain; but assuredly our squadron would capture or destroy any munition of war belonging to Don Carlos, employed, or to be employed, against the Queen. The position of matters in this respect is not unlike that of Charles Stuart, when he raised an Army in the Highlands, and, supported by the High Church and ultra Tory party of this kingdom, advanced as far as Preston; but had any ally of England at that time aided the existing Government with men or money, it would have been ridiculous to have called such an act making war upon this country. When Don Carlos reaches Madrid, and is constituted monarch of Spain by the estates of that kingdom, and has power to make his authority respected over the whole, or the great majority, of the nation, will be the time to discuss the question of peace or war with that personage. In the mean time we know that our seamen and marines will continue to do the duty they are ordered upon, in execution of the plighted faith of the nation to existing treaties, without stopping to inquire by what party in the state these treaties were entered into, or whether they have not been subsequently acknowledged and ratified by all parties.

Major Angelo inspects the garrison of Chatham and depots at Maidstone on Monday next, in the sword exercise. This gentleman earns his money in an easy way: last year he appeared on parade, armed with an old umbrella, for the purpose of instructing the Officers in a new mode of saluting. The said umbrella was the sole weapon with which he demonstrated the graceful curve to Sir Leonard Greenwell and his highly amused pupils.

Narrow Escape of the Duke of Rutland and the Marquis of Granby.—Off the coast of Norway the magnificent yacht belonging to the Duke of Portland, in a full gale of wind, nearly foundered.—The Duke of Rutland was in his berth, when he awoke and found the bedclothes drenched with water. His Grace threw himself out, and found the cabin floor deluged: ascending the deck, after alarming his son, he was the first person to communicate the circumstance to the man at the helm. All hands were ordered up, and they worked at the pumps all night, even the Duke and the Marquis, in their shirt sleeves only. By the constant exertions of the Captain and crew the vessel was brought home without touching at any port. This event happened about a fortnight ago, and their escape, as the Captain said, was miraculous. The Duke of Rutland arrived in town on Wednesday night.

The number of travellers that passed through Calais last week again increased. On Saturday it amounted to 1142; and the London packet, which usually brings between 100 and 150, had not come in. A great number of horses and carriages were also landed.

On Thursday, in the Prerogative Court, Sir H. Jenner gave sentence in the long pending case of "Armstrong and Armstrong against Armstrong." The case originated in a paper propounded by the widow and sole executrix of the late Gen. Armstrong, which paper was opposed by the brother and sister of the deceased, as the result of conspiracy, &c. The learned judge considered the charges of conspiracy, fraud, and perjury, perfectly groundless, and pronounced for the will, and condemned the parties who had opposed the will in the costs of the proceedings. The party opposing the will gave notice of appeal.

Antwerp, July 21.—There was a report on 'Change at Amsterdam, where it was much credited, that the eldest son of the Prince of Orange was to marry a daughter of the Emperor Nicholas, and his second son the Princess Victoria, pre-emptive heiress to the English crown. It was said that both marriages will shortly take place.

Newcastle Election.—The election of a Member of Parliament to serve for this borough in the place of the late Sir M. W. Ridley, took place on Tuesday, and after a hard-fought battle, terminated in the triumph of the Conservative. The candidates were Capt. Blackett and Mr. Hodgson. The poll commenced at 8 o'clock and terminated at 4, when the result was—For Mr. Hodgson (Conservative), 1,576; for Capt. Blackett 1,528.

The British Auxiliary Legion.—(From a Correspondent.)—St. Sebastian, July 21.—General Evans still continues very unwell, and extremely weak. The question whether officers and men have a right to quit the service on the completion of their year seems still in abeyance. The 1st Lancers have been asked, on two successive parades (the one commanded by Col. Kinloch, the other by Lieut.-Col. Wakefield), whether any were disposed to leave the service, and, if so, they were desired to give in their names, and state their reasons why they wished to quit. Upwards of 100 (112 I am informed) have availed themselves of the circumstance, and have declared their intention to serve no longer. Their horses, arms, and accoutrements have, of course, been taken from them, and those men are now in barracks, apart from the regiment, waiting, I presume, the first opportunity to be shipped to England. Several of the officers have also resigned; in fact, the regiment is reduced to a skeleton of what it was. Col. Kinloch starts for Vittoria in the course of a day or two, to examine into the state of the 2d. Lieut.-Col. Wakefield is appointed to the command of the 1st Lancers.

Attack on Fuenterabia.—(From a Correspondent of our Monthly Contemporary).—On Sunday evening, 10th inst., the corps of Cantabria, consisting of the British Legion and old Jauregui's Brigade, broke up from its position on the Urumea, retired in a most scientific order from both flanks in rear of the centre, and crossing the harbour of Passages in boats and rafts, proceeded along the top of the mountain ridge, which overlooks the sea on one side and the plains of Oyarzun on the other, and arrived, early in the morning of the 11th, on the projecting pinnacle which commands such a splendid view of the Bidassoa, Fuenterabia, Irun, and the whole of that magnificient country on both sides of that river, so celebrated in fabulous and modern annals. Garrisons had been left in the several fortified points covering Passages and St. Sebastian, and a considerable reserve remained behind to protect the rear and send succours in any direction. The steamers took on board provisions and artillery, the gun-boats were all put in requisition, and with the exception of some little delay in passing the horses over the harbour, all was right, and nothing occurred of sufficient consequence to interrupt the successful termination of the expedition. Two 21-pounder howitzers and four 6 pounders, with ammunition complete, were embarked in chasse-marées, in order to be landed near Fuenterabia, and the train of artillery, horses and mules, with mountain guns, followed the Army. A rocket troop was attached, and afterwards rendered signal service, under the command of Lieut. Barkhouse.

The Phœnix and Salamander, the Reina Gobernadora and the Reina Isabel, the gun-boats, chasse-marées, artillery and rockets, all arrived at the concerted moment, and began pouring their tremendous fire into the town. The troops, rushing down from the mountains, after a little foolish popping and skirmishing, got impatient, and drove the enemy clean away, taking possession of the bridge which communicates with Irun; and having a splendid position with their left on the Bidassoa, their right on the mountains and the hermitage of Guadaloupe, whilst along their front ran a deep ravine with a river and marsh, over which the causeway runs to Irun. Silence most awful prevailed in the apparently devoted place, and was only broken by the explosions of the shells and rockets, which, like minute guns, seemed to announce its fall, and which filled the air with red dust, and cast a lurid gloom over the scene. Breaches were perceived in several places, especially along the sea wall, which had been patched up with temporary walls; and the crash of roofs and buildings announced an easy victory to the impatient shoulders.

What did Evans now think of? Did he communicate with the shipping, or consolidate his right, and connect it with the reserve on the mountain? or did he look to the sea as his line of communication, and amidst the shouts and hurras of his troops enter the town, sword in hand, and put himself beyond all chance of interruption? He did neither one nor the other: he neither forced over the bridge, and established a tête de pont in the houses towards Irun,—nor, failing of that, did he even cut away the planks, and keep himself on the defensive; he neither landed his artillery, nor communicated with the ships,—which, thus left in suspense, till kept up their tremendous fire on the town. Evans did none of all this; but he seemed undecided what to do. He consulted with his adviser and Quartermaster-General, Reid—who, whatever may be the reputation he brought out as an engineer officer, has certainly not added to it in Spain—and it was resolved in this famous council that "the place" was too strong; that their position was not safe; that they had the sea in their rear, and mountains on their right; that the enemy might be reinforced next day!—in short, Sir, it was resolved "to retire,"—yes, Sir, to retire.

The British nation has to learn, that these two imitators of the daring Phaeton had, like him, got themselves into a fiery chariot, and could not guide the horses,—they had embarked on a sea of difficulties which appalled their vacillating minds,—they had taken the command of an army on which Spain and Europe are looking to see on which side the balance will turn,—the two Generals, Sir, ordered 7000 men to retreat before 2000,—and as they had heard of "a golden bridge for a flying enemy," they left a wooden one for him to advance on,—and 7000 victorious troops retreated before 2000 disorderly mountaineers.

The enemy, astonished at first did not think of pursuing: but when they overcame their astonishment—when they found their fire unanswered, and the position gradually abandoned, and saw the first of the retiring columns winding up the hill—then, indeed, they advanced, in small numbers at first, as if afraid of an ambush, but presently in greater crowds, and with their wonted activity they pursued and harassed our rear. The gates of Fuenterabia were opened again, and the 300 or 400 victims who had awaited their fate in silence, now rushed out with shouts that rent the air, and the enemy, collecting all the force he could, united in a furious attack on our commanding position. Three times they rushed on in crowds, and as many times they were repulsed with loss,—our shells and rockets swept the steep ascent, and volleys of musketry mowed them down. Tired at last, and dismayed, they left us at peace on our airy height. Eight killed, and four hundred wounded, as we learned next day, proclaimed the acharnement with which they attacked, and coolness with which our men repelled them, whilst the shells and rockets must have done their part in the slaughter. And so we slept peaceably on the fresh heather, after having withdrawn still further back; and the navy and the artillery on board were left to act at their own discretion, and return to continue the attack as they thought fit. And Evans and Reid slept on the heath; and when they arose in the morning, they found they had lost about 100 men, in all; and they continued their retreat; and the gods favoured the troops so far as to cover them with a cloud, and a very thick fog—ay, a fog, Sir,—and when they got back to St. Sebastian, the people looked black: and the Carlists claimed a victory; and Evans said—"He had only made a reconnoissance!"

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, 25th July.—Sir A. L. Hay moved th second reading of the Trinity Harbour Bill, which w opposed by the Lord Advocate and Mr. Pringle, an supported by Mr. Wilks. Troubridge could not undertake, without notic to give an answer to that question. Mr. Maclea asked whether the Hon. Member would have any o jection tu say whether any communication had been received from Lord John Hay? Sir E. Troubridge. —Certainly, communications have been received from Lord John Hay.—Lord J. Russell moved the order of the day for the adjourned debate on the Established Church Bill, and stated it was his intention, with respect to the Bill relating to the Established Church, and the divisions of sees, to move the third reading that night; but with respect to the Ecclesiastical Duties and Revenues Bill, which related to the Deans and Chapters, there had been so much opposition raised that, at the present advanced period of the session, he did not feel confident that he should successfully carry it; and he therefore postponed its consideration till another session. He thought that there could be no objection to the Bill relating to residence and pluralities, and he hoped it would be passed during the present session. Mr. Hume considered it right to record his opinion on the subject, and to allow others to do the same. He should therefore divide the House upon it—ayes, 175; noes, 44. The Bill then passed.—The Poole Corporation Bill went through a committee, and the several clauses were agreed to, after a considerable opposition on the part of Mr. Praed and Mr. H. Mr. C. Wood objected to the first part of the return, but to the other he was willing to consent.—The House then went into committee on the Charitable Trustees Bill, when Mr. Praed moved, as an amendment to clause 3, that freemen should be allowed to vote at the election of trustees in corporate towns jointly with the burgesses. After some discussion the amendment was rejected by a majority of 17. The remaining clauses were then gone through, and several amendments made.—The adjourned debate on the County Elections Polls Bill was then resumed. A strong opposition was made to the Bill, and a succession of amendments were moved from the opposition benches; all of which, though pressed to divisions, were rejected. Ultimately the report was agreed to, and the Bill was ordered to be engrossed.

Wednesday, 27th July.—Sir J. C. Hobhouse presented a petition from Bombay in favour of steam communication from India. The Hon. Member took that opportunity of stating that despatches had been received that day, announcing the distressing intelligence of the loss of the Tigris steamer, one of the vessels that was sent out on the Euphrates expedition under Colonel Chesney, and twenty lives had been lost. The disaster occurred in a hurricane which took place on 21st May, and in twelve minutes after it happened not a vestige of her was to be seen, such was the destruction that ensued. The particulars and the names of those who were lost should be laid before the public as soon as possible. The despatches stated that the large steamer, the Euphrates, was proceeding in the discoveries with every prospect of success.—In answer to a question from Mr. Robinson, the Chancellor of the Exchequer stated that it was not his intention to make any alteration in the duty on marine insurances during the present session.—Messengers from the Lords returned the Prisoners' Counsel Bill, with amendments. Mr. Ewart remarked that the most material part of the measure—that which allowed the prisoner in cases of treason, felony, &c., to have the last word—had been entirely cut out by the House of Lords. He contended that the essence of the measure was thus destroyed, and moved that the amendment be rejected. Mr. C. Buller and Mr. Hardy supported the Bill as amended by the Lords; and Sir F. Pollock, Mr. Poulter, and Mr. O'Connell declared that the law, as proposed to be altered, would be worse than it stood at present. Mr. Parker and Mr. Strutt thought that some opportunity ought to be taken of arranging the differences between the two Houses in regard to the measure; and Lord John Russell, being of a similar opinion, moved that the amendment be sent to a select committee, with a view to an arrangement, which was agreed to.

Thursday, 28th July.—Sir A. L. Hay brought up the report on the Trinity Harbour Bill, which recommended that the Bill should be withdrawn, on account of some informality, and moved for leave to bring in another Bill. After some discussion the motion was carried by a majority of 8.—The Poor-law Amendment Bill was postponed until next session, in consequence of the quantity of public business before the House.—The Poole Corporation Bill was read a third time and passed.—The House went into committee on the Greek Loan Act, when Lord Palmerston moved "That his Majesty be authorized to guarantee one portion of the last instalment of the loan to be contracted for by the King of Greece, in pursuance of the convention relating thereto; and that provision be made out of the consolidated fund of Great Britain and Ireland, for the payment and interest of the sinking fund." Mr. Robinson moved as an amendment, "That it is the opinion of this committee that the treaty of 1832 not having been fulfilled on the part of Greece, is virtually cancelled; and that it is not expedient to guarantee any portion of the third instalment, without the concurrence of all the parties to the treaty." A long discussion ensued, after which the House divided—for the motion, 81; for the amendment, 40.—The report of the Charitable Trustees Bill was received, and some new clauses were added. After considerable discussion the Bill was ordered to be read a third time on Friday.

Friday, 29th July.—The Trinity (North Leith) Harbour Bill, of which the second reading was moved by Sir A. L. Hay, was finally withdrawn, after a great deal of discussion.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer said that the documents connected with the Spanish claims had been submitted to the law officers of the Crown for their opinion.—The County Elections Polls Bill created some discussion, and was read a third time, on a division, by a majority of 93 to 54.—The Court of Session (Scotland) Bill and the Charitable Trustees Bill were read a third time and passed, after the House had divided on a motion by Col. Sibthorp that the latter be postponed for six months.—Lord J. Russell deferred the Registration of Voters Bill till Monday, and explained the nature of the amendment, which he proposed to introduce. The Revising Barristers are to be ten in number, instead of eight; and a chief is to be appointed. Sir T. Erskine is fixed upon. The first appointments are to be made by the Bill, and the subsequent nominations by the Lord Chancellor.

Foreign Intelligence.

France.—Programme of the Fêtes of July.—16 dowers of 3,000f. will be allotted in favour of the sons and daughters of the combatants of July, 1830, June, 1832, and April, 1834. The marriage contracts of the young couples will be signed on 26th, at one, by the Minister of the Interior. On the morning of 27th the marriages of the young women who have received dowers will be celebrated at the mayory, and at the parish church of each arrondissement. Distributions of money and provisions will be made to the poor at their own houses, in the 12 arrondissements of Paris. On the platform of the Pont-Neuf three large masts will be raised, bearing banners of the national colours, which will be veiled in crape during the celebration of the funeral ceremonies.—Thursday, July 28.—Salutes of artillery will be fired at the Hôtel des Invalides and the Hôtel de Ville, at 6 in the morning and 6 in the evening. Funeral ceremonies, in honour of the citizens who were killed in 1830, in defence of the laws and of liberty, will be celebrated at 10, in the edifices consecrated to the different forms of worship. The sepulchres of the Louvre, of the Rue Froidmanteau, of the Champ de Mars, and of the Marché des Innocens, will be decorated with funeral attributes, and illuminated at night. A funeral service will also be celebrated at noon in the church of the Hôtel des Invalides, in memory of the victims of the attempt of 28th July, 1835. —Friday, July 29.—Salutes of artillery as before. The Triumphal Arc de l'Etoile, raised in honour of the French armies, will be surrounded with a decoration composed of triumphal columns and masts, surmounted by banners and flags. The sculptures of the arch will be uncovered. At 2, military airs will be performed at the foot of the monument by the bands of the regiments in garrison at Paris. A medal will be struck to consecrate the completion of the Arc de l'Etoile; it will bear these words:—A la Gloire des Armées Françaises. Commencé par Napoleon; achevé par Louis Philippe Premier. In the Grand Carré of the Champs Elysées, 2 large theatres will give representations of military spectacles from 2 o'clock in the afternoon till dark. In the Salle Ronde, near the Grand Carré, an orchestra of music will perform concerts. A mât-de-cocagne will be raised in the middle of the Grand Carré. Four orchestras for dancing will be placed there. At the Barrière du Trône there will be two theatres, four orchestras for dancing, and a mât-de-cocagne. At nine in the evening fireworks will be let off from the Pont de la Concorde, and at the Barrière du Trône. At nightfall, the Arc de l'Etoile, and a decoration raised in front of the Hôtel de Ville, will be illuminated with gas. The circular area round the Arc de l'Etoile, the avenue of the Champs Elysées, and all public edifices, will be illuminated in different manners.

Louis Philippe has abandoned his intention of holding the review. It is understood that he will not quit the Tuileries. Government has received very unfavourable accounts respecting the army, a spirit of insubordination or disaffection is prevalent.

The National is almost entirely filled with particulars of the last moments of its late editor, M. Carrel, and with the account of his funeral, which was attended by Chateaubriand, and a great number of persons of distinction, whose line of politics was not very distant from those of M. Carrel. Several addresses were delivered over his grave. M. Carrel died of a wound received in a duel with M. Emile de Girardin. He was a political writer of great power, and one of the few whose exertions brought about the revolution of 1830, who never benefited by it.

A second edition of the Constitutionnel of Wednesday contains the following.—The most brilliant victory hitherto obtained in Africa has been gained in the entire defeat of Abdel Kader, by the forces under General Bugeaud. Abdel Kader was wounded, his horse killed under him, a great number of prisoners taken, many of whom have been sent to France in the Chimere, and 500 heads of Arabs were brought in by the victorious Douaires.

Spain.—The Carlists assert that Gomez has entered Orense. General Bernelle entered Estella by force on the 20th, but retired from it upon Lerin and Larrage the following day. The Carlists consider this as a defeat. General Bernelle could have occupied it, but for the sake of making a diversion in favour of Cordova, who was himself to have made an attempt upon Onate. But Cordova never stirred. In the mean time the Carlist Commander-in-Chief, Villareal, is said to have made a rapid march into the valley of Meem and surprised Tello with the reserve, which body, defeated by Gomez, was annihilated on the present occasion.

THE ORDNANCE.

It is said to be in contemplation to place the Ordnance Corps under the Commander-in-Chief, and the Ordnance Finance under the Secretary at War. The Naval Ordnance equipment would then probably come under the Admiralty, and the Ordnance Store Branch would become the general Commissariat of the Army, whereby double establishment would be avoided at many foreign stations, and unnecessary accumulations of stores would be more effectually prevented under the superintendence of a person not directly interested in keeping up a larger establishment than was really necessary. The Ordnance Store Branch at home admits also of further arrangements on this head, although much has been lately done in getting rid of unnecessary accumulations of stores. There should be an annual sale at every station, including Woolwich, of all surplus stores beyond the quantity ordered to be kept. It would be more economical in most instances to give them away than to pay for their care, losses from decay, construction and repair of unnecessary store-houses, &c. It is supposed that the general depot of guns will remain at Woolwich, in charge of the Royal Artillery, and that the manufacture of small arms and gunpowder will continue under one superintendence; but that all other ordnance, stores, gun-carriages, &c. required by the Navy will be manufactured or provided by the Admiralty.

The Ordnance Corps will probably be gradually relieved from the disadvantages they labour under at present, in comparison with the rest of the Army, and the jealousies and mystifications between the services will be got rid of the nearer they approach to each other. The sacrifices that have hitherto been required by the Ordnance will be appreciated when it is known that the only compensations are a few inconsiderable civil appointments at Woolwich, depending on the nature of the service for Artillery officers the greater part of which are necessary, and the produce of a few acres of glacis to Engineer officers. It will become known that the science of gunnery, though useful and curious to the mathematician, is only useful to Artillery officers when reduced to rules and principles for practice, which any person with the education of a gentleman may easily acquire; and that what is called the science of fortification has been discovered by practice alone, and is laid down by fixed principles and rules not difficult to be learned; but that it is as necessary for the Artillery and Engineer officer to be engaged in actual warfare in order to understand and appreciate properly the respective values of the rules and principles he has learned, as it is for the infantry or cavalry officer, and that the knowledge and practice of one of these branches of the Service is perfectly compatible with the knowledge and practice of another.

Hitherto every thing has been done to keep the Ordnance Services distinct and apart from the rest of the Army, and to suffer no leaven of what has been brand-with the name of scientific corps to enter their ranks, or to participate in the duties or advantages of the higher grades of the Military service. The following are submitted as the principal causes of dissatisfaction in the Ordnance corps:—

The manner of promotion stamps them at once as inferior to the rest of the Army in everything excepting in the qualifications of the Officers and men; for it is degrading to a corps to see their Officers distinguish themselves, as many of the Artillery and Engineers did during the late wars, without a corresponding acknowledgement by substantial promotion. It is true that Brevet rank was awarded to the upper ranks of the Ordnance corps in such cases; but in the Army hundreds of instances necessarily occurred either of direct promotion, or of facilities for purchase procured by the interest and representations of superior Officers who had been well seconded. For a Subaltern of the Ordnance corps no means of reward exists, not even promotion by Brevet; and although several general Officers exerted themselves in individual cases, yet the result was—they were declared to be scientific—nothing could be done, although in the hour of danger and exertion nothing would perhaps have been done without them; half such interest would have procured promotion for an Officer of any corps not proscribed as scientific, but these were found to be without the pale of reward.

2. It is degrading to the Ordnance corps to drag through their different ranks without distinction of place, those who have had opportunities of doing good services, those who have done well, and those who have done ill, as if all were equally undeserving in comparison with the rest of the Army.

3. It is degrading to the Ordnance corps that officers should not be allowed to retire on their full pay after a certain length of service, as in the armies of the Continent; or that they should not be allowed the equivalent of selling their commissions, as in the rest of the Army.

4. It is degrading to the Ordnance corps that they should not supply a proportion of General officers on the Staff, or in command of brigades, divisions, &c.

5. It is degrading to the Ordnance corps that a badge of honour, professedly military—the Grand Cross of the Bath—should not have been awarded to any one individual in those corps, at the end of a successful war, in which it is well-known and acknowledged by the Service that those corps suffered great losses, and bore a distinguished part.

6. It is degrading to the Ordnance corps to be recruited with officers, whose education has been paid for by the public, when the education of officers generally is paid for by their families. This has been partially remedied, but the distinction still exists. A greater sum is paid by the Cadets educated at Sandhurst for the Army, than by those educated at Woolwich for the Ordnance corps, to whom the difference is made up by the Government. And it is as great an inconsistency that many officers are admitted into the Army without any any education at all, as far as the Government knows; they are educated at no public military school, nor are they required to pass any examination.

With reference to the foregoing disadvantages, the following remarks and remedies are submitted:—

It is suggested, that the same system of promotion should take place as in the Army, with some modification. Promotion should be by purchase, as in the Line, and Ordnance officers should be allowed to purchase into the Line, and these should be eligible to purchase back again. This would give the same guarantee to the country which is thought necessary in the Army, that, generally speaking, the superior officers are concerted with the substantial interests of the country. It would bring Officers to the upper ranks of the Ordnance corps, before they are too old to be of service. It would supply the Line with some officers instructed and practised in the duties of the artillery and engineers, and it would do away with all the causes of dissatisfaction enumerated in paragraphs 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5. This arrangement would create other causes of dissatisfaction, but these would be in common with the rest of the Army, and are defended on the score of policy. The present state of promotion in the Ordnance corps admits of no defence; and the worst principle on which promotion in any Army can be founded, is that which, setting all qualification at defiance, neglects character and divides merit, as in the case of the Ordnance corps at the present moment. If the individuals composing such a corps have anything to lose, or any nearly related to those that have, they become a corps of raisonneurs at the injustice and indignities done to them; if they have nothing to lose, and are not connected with those that have, as a corps they would become dangerous to any government that should so ill-use them.

There should be one academy for all services, and that should be at Sandhurst, as being more isolated from a large town than Woolwich academy; and no Officer should be admitted into any Military service without an examination depending on the nature of the service sought.

It is anxiously expected, that in remodelling the promotion of the Army, as adverted to by Lord Howick, in the House of Commons this Session, a similarity of promotion will pervade all corps. Any difference will act injuriously to one corps or to another. In these times, and in this free country, it must be good policy, in the promotion of Officers of all corps, to allow due weight to a combination of character, connexions, and property. It might be proved to demonstration that the exclusive adoption of any one of these qualifications in the promotion of Officers, as a general rule, would be dangerous, although particular instances would of course occur that required exceptions.—United Service Journal.

ROYAL NAVAL SCHOOL.

The Inhabitants of the parish of Greenwich have been called upon in the leading article of the West Kent Guardian of the 16th inst., before another week passes, to memorialize against the erection upon the waste of the parish of what it is pleased to call the Naval Proprietary School, for the purposes of private speculation, at present held at Camberwell, and to oblige it to look elsewhere for a site they will have to pay for.

Now, what the Guardian is pleased to term "a proprietary school for the purposes of private speculation," is denominated the Royal Naval School, Patron, his most gracious Majesty (who subscribes 100*l.* annually). The Princes of the Blood Royal, the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Lord High Chancellor, are amongst its Vice-Patrons, and more than one hundred and sixty noblemen and gentlemen are its liberal supporters by subscriptions of sums from 10*l.* to 500*l.*, besides many others of smaller amount, not one of whom are deriving any private or personal advantage from it whatsoever.

The first article in the rules and regulations states "that the primary object of the Royal Naval School is to enable the less affluent Naval and Marine Officers of not lower than ward-room rank, being subscribers to the institution, to give their children a sound general education, combined with moral and religious instruction, at the least possible expense, consistent with the further object of bestowing the same education gratuitously, or at a very reduced charge, on a limited number of the sons of such Officers, in necessitous circumstances, giving a preference to the orphans of those who may have fallen in their country's service."

Can this, then, with justice, be called a speculation for private purposes? What are the inhabitants of Greenwich called upon to do? Why, nothing more nor less than drive out of the parish the children and orphans of the defenders of their country, who only desire to occupy a small portion of the waste of the royal manor. And what do they offer in return, any just compensation for the herbage? A handsome building, an instant outlay of 10,000*l.*, a permanent expenditure of not less than 6,000*l.* per annum, a probable increase of respectable inhabitants, by the parents of the children and their friends settling in the neighbourhood, and an addition to the means of meeting the Poor-Rates.

The Guardian also states that a rumour existed that his Majesty had granted an acre of the Wilderness of the Park for a building for the school. The parties who have put the Guardian forward well know that it was more than a rumour—that such was really the case, and they likewise well know the means that were used to prevent its conformation. They are now afraid that their object will be defeated, and, ashamed of their conduct, they are endeavouring to put the parish forward as a body to do that which, in the former instance, they were able to do by a single individual.

But should such a memorial be offered for signature to the inhabitants of Greenwich, doubtless it will be under the powerful influence of their names attached, if so, they must not look beyond the first half-dozen signatures for the voluntary champions of the rights of the parish, but we are much mistaken if it will not contain, also, the names of those as stated in the Guardian, who have not paid their herbage for years.—Greenwich Gazette.

[We must reserve till next week, some remarks we have to offer on this subject. Ed.]

THE 14TH LIGHT DRAGOONS.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL PERRONNET THOMPSON IN REPLY TO COLONEL BROTHERTON*.

(From the United Service Journal.)

Mr. Editor,—If Colonel Brotherton will do me the favour to read over again my evidence before the Committee of Military Inquiry, I think I can point out passages which show that I gave the 14th Dragoons as an instance of a corps commanded by a very spirited officer, where nevertheless the power of maintaining discipline before the enemy was weakened through the inapplicability of corporal punishment in such circumstances, and the absence of a general system by the authorities at the head of the British Army for repressing faults in the soldier by other means. At the end of my letter I sh beg permission to add a few extracts from the evidenc in which the parts which particularly lead to this co clusion are marked by italics.

On the remaining points in Col. Brotherton's lef I answer principally because I suppose it is expected me, and under a protest against any part being constru as opposed to the sentiments which every man ought feel towards his old commanding officer.

The circumstance alluded to in my evidence, I fin from a correspondence not in my possession at the ti of examination, took place the day after the rencontre two squadrons of the 14th Dragoons, under Maj. Mill (not Miller, as printed in the Gazette), with about t same force of the 5th Chasseurs; and consequently ( reference to the Supplement to London Gazette, 2 April, 1814) on the 15th March, 1814. Col. (then Maj Brotherton was taken prisoner near Hasparren on t 12th Dec., 1813—(see London Gazette Ext., 30th De 1813),—and did not rejoin till after the peace. It plai ly, therefore, was not his intention to represent what denominated "the impression at the time," as describ on his personal knowledge. I consequently feel t more certain he will accept my assurance that no su thing as losing my way occurred to me, either on that any other occasion that I know of. It is nothing b what might happen to any officer in spite of his best e ertions, as it might happen to him to fall at a revie but if it never did happen to him, he appears justified having a strong conviction of the fact.

It is certain that I had been not quite a year and half in the 14th Dragoons; of which about seven mont in the Peninsula. But I had been upwards of eig years in the Army, having begun in the 95th or Ri Reg. in January, 1806, and been with it at Buen Ayres; not altogether a bad school for knowing whet a man, astride of a horse or not, did his duty on patro Since that I had been Governor at Sierra Leone; place where a man has sometimes exercise in finding b way. I had, besides, been some years at sea; possesse as much mathematics as goes to make a seventh wrangl at Cambridge; and between the two was more at hom in every thing relating to finding the way in the dark b means of map, compass, or stars, than falls to the lot average Dragoons. I further knew the French an Spanish languages; a thing of considerable value und the circumstances. But without standing upon chance the result not contradicted is, that I returned from mission of some risk with full success, and brought the whole of my detachment, except such as had ridde away and left the Infantry behind.

I cannot positively say that I was selected for this du and sent out of my turn; but I know that such things d happen. I particularly recollect one occasion, where brigade order came to send an officer on a particular ser vice, and I was sent out of my turn; and though I ca not be positive it was on this occasion, there are som coincidences which make me think it very likely. Firs the party in question being of two descriptions of troop makes it pretty clear it was by brigade order. Secondly I remember Major Milles jocularly repeating the term of the order, which were to send "an intelligent officer," which agrees with the two squadrons being together under his command the day before. I was not in Majo Milles's own squadron, but the other; and our being i company with Maj. Milles's squadron was not a thing of every-day occurrence. Thirdly, I remember saying to some of the officers who complained of my being sen out of turn, that I supposed it was only in consequence of my knowledge of languages, which agrees with the case in question. The place the patrole was sent to I find from the correspondence to have been Carrereau.

The fact is, that if my respected Commander had not been snatched from us by a fate which I am sure we regretted next only to himself, he would have known that the Subaltern from the Infantry who asked him as a favour to be admitted to his parties before the enemy, but who, in consequence of the misfortune alluded to, can only boast of having had one scamper with him on the track of the enemy the day, I believe, we passed the Neville,—turned out a decent bargain, and was employed on at least an average number of Subaltern's commands, with at all events considerable luck on his side, as having never lost either man or horse. Some of the officers and men who were present may perhaps remember that I was latterly almost taken away from regimental duty, through being employed as a kind of adjunct to the staff of Sir H. Fane, who would possibly recollect me by the circumstance of my having a roving commission to obtain for him Cassini's maps of the departments, in which I at last succeeded.

On the whole I have no doubt that, if Col. Brotherton had only been with us, he would have said I was a good-ish Subaltern of Light Dragoons; and I am sure no man grieved more than I did at the loss of a military pastor and master whom everybody knew to be one of the crack Cavalry officers in the Peninsula, and against whom nobody ever alleged a fault, except being rather more forward on some occasions than the interest the service had in his conservation would have prompted.

T. Pʼerronet Thompson, Lt.-Col. Unat.

P.S.—Exts. from Evidence before Military Commission: "I recollect, in the 14th Dragoons, having occasion to make a complaint against soldiers who had committed what I consider a military crime. I was ordered in the Peninsular war, with, I think, eight Dragoons, and about sixteen Spanish Infantry—I believe it was in the neighbourhood of St. Sever—to ascertain whether a division of French Cavalry was at a certain point six or seven miles off. I contrived to arrive there near nightfall, and ascertained that they had gone about four hours. As I returned, the Spaniards got very frightened, and begged the Dragoons would not leave them. I ordered different individuals of the Dragoons to move in advance of the detachment, my fear being that we might fall in with a body of the enemy; and if we had timely notice of it we might retire by some cross-road, or, in case of extremity, disperse. As fast as I sent a Dragoon out of sight, he trotted off and made the best of his way to camp. Not one man stayed with me but the Corporal. The Spaniards, the Corporal, and I, arrived safely in the English outposts. I immediately complained to the Colonel, who did not punish the men; and all he did was to apply a strong expression to them; but the men were never punished. That struck me as a proof of the inapplicability of Corporal Punishment before the enemy: for I feel certain that if these men had committed anything like a similar irregularity in a barrack-yard in England, they would have been very severely punished."—p. 235.

"4673. Who commanded the reg. in the case you have referred to?—Col. Harvey, a very spirited officer. On my return, when I told him what these men had done, he said, emphatically, 'G—d damn them,' and that was all. I felt with him, that perhaps that was all which, under the existing state of things, could be done."

Literary Notices.

Rattlin, the Reefer. Edited by the author of "Peter Simple." 3 vols. R. Bentley.

We hardly know whether to call this a book of veritable confessions, or a work of fiction. It is written, like the Gil Blas class of novels, in the form of an autobiography, and the hero, a supposed legitimate child, whose parents keep in the back ground, narrates his life from the days of his infancy, when under the care of a foster-mother, to the recovery of his rank as the lawful son of a baronet. The intermediate career of Rattlin at school and in the navy, presents incidents of a most powerful and striking kind, accompanied by reflections, which prove that the mind of the author is one of unusual vigour; and the style is everywhere so earnest as to lead us to entertain the doubt we have expressed, whether the book does not indeed develop a true story. Rattlin is deserted from his birth,—not as regards the provision of money for his early nurture and education,—but in respect of that more precious care, the love of parents, the sweet companionship of brothers and sisters, or the solace of friends. Of all these the poor youth is destitute; he is doomed to be a passive agent in the hands of mercenary strangers, and his passionate yearnings to ascertain his origin are destined to be everywhere met by cold repulsion and rebuke. The iron enters into his soul. The details connected with his life at school are exceedingly affecting; he is the defenceless object of the master's tyranny, and of his schoolfellows' scorn; condemned, when the other boys repair to the delights of home during the holydays, to linger solitary in the irksome academy, longing for a return to scholastic labour, as the only relief to his melancholy and seclusion. In due time he is consigned to the Navy, and here, though his lot continues to be insult and oppression, the growing spirit of the man enables him to bear up against his misfortune, and he gradually rises into consequence. That the sea scenes are full of truth, vigour, and humour, will be evident, from the circumstance of Captain Marryat having consented to edit the work, which is worthy even of his pen.

An Account of the War in Portugal between Don Pedro and Don Miguel. By Admiral Charles Napier. 2 vols. T. and W. Boone.

"I am not accustomed to write histories or prefaces," observes Admiral Napier, "therefore the less I say the better." His unassuming narrative will, however, be very generally read notwithstanding the numerous publications, mostly ephemeral, on the Portuguese fraternal warfare. The Admiral's object has been to give an impartial account of the whole war, "praising or blaming where it is due without favour or affection," and he has executed his task like a straightforward seaman. His work will create a fresh interest in events which, before reading, we thought impossible. Our limits confine us to notices of a few of our countrymen who were prominent in the Portuguese struggle. We will begin with Sir John Doyle.

"About this time Sir John Milley Doyle made his appearance, with a suite of twenty gentlemen; what were his views and prospects, or how these gentlemen were to be employed, it was difficult to say. Already were there officers more than sufficient for the few remaining British troops. The gallant officer probably expected the command of the army, and had taken the precaution to bring out his état-major; but the Emperor having assumed that command himself, Sir John was obliged to put up with the appointment of orderly officers."

In juxta position here is a compliment to another party.

"Colonel Bacon, a few cavalry officers, and one hundred horses, now arrived from England, and a regiment was formed, called the Queen's Lancers; they consisted of four squadrons, composed of French, English, German, and Portuguese, and it is astonishing with what celerity that active officer brought them into an efficient state."

And elsewhere, in allusion to the Chartres cavalry, which had always been considered the right arm of Don Miguel's army, Admiral Napier says,

"That they could not stand the impetuosity of Bacon, who was always at the head of his men, and, in more than one instance, with one or two officers, rode into the middle of the enemy's cavalry."

"We have numerous instances recorded of the extreme baseness as well as imbecility of leading characters in Don Pedro's ministry. Officers were displaced without any cause being assigned, and valuable services continually disregarded.

"On the 8th of November, the French regiment and the second battalion of Portuguese in Hodges' brigade were removed from under his orders, and he was reduced to the command of his own regiment. To put up with this was impossible, and he decided on sending in his resignation to the Emperor, which was accepted. This was followed by resigning the order of the Tower and Sword, which had been conferred on him for his conduct at the battle of Ponte Ferreira. On Hodges' resignation, Sir John Doyle was appointed to command the British, and they were ordered to occupy the post they formerly did in the proximity of the enemy. This appointment so disgusted Major Shaw and several other officers that they sent in their resignations, which were not accepted; but Sir John was removed from the command, which he only held forty-eight hours. During that time he had been liberal in promises; and after Hodges embarked for England, four hundred of the British got under arms, marched to the Emperor's quarters, and demanded their pay, which was promised as usual."

The narrative of the measures of the impotent Portuguese ministry to deprive Sartorius of the command of the squadron, and confer it for the time being on Capt. Crosbie, strikingly exemplifies the prudence and honourable feeling of that brave and talented Admiral, and it is worthy of note as also exhibiting the Quixotic proceedings of another.

"Sir John Doyle was the bearer of the decree, accompanied by Captain Crosbie, to whom he was to deliver up the squadron; and Captain Bressane Lleto was charged with the settlement of their accounts. In the event of the Admiral declining to give up the command, he was instructed to arrest him, for which purpose he was provided with a party of caçadores. . . Will posterity believe that, in a town besieged by a powerful force, without means either to pay or provision an army, a squadron in a state of mutiny, on the brink of starvation, unprovided with anchors, cables, stores, or clothing,—I say, will posterity believe that a set of men, calling themselves statesmen, would be found capable of such unparalleled folly? The decree was signed by the Baron da Sa, but I have reason to believe that he, as well as the Marquis of Loulé, was overruled in the cabinet by Freire, Carvalho, and Candido Xavier. . . It was not before the 23d that Sir John Doyle arrived at Vigo. The Admiral was in some degree prepared for his reception, and, indeed, had read the decree in the Chronicle, which was the first intimation he had of being superseded. . . An officer was sent from the flag-ship to make inquiry who the passengers were, and returned with a request that a boat might be sent from the flag-ship to convey the gallant officer on board, with his despatches and instructions. This was of course complied with as far as Sir John Doyle was concerned; but Captain Crosbie was put under arrest, and Captain Bressane, and two officers who accompanied him, were ordered to remain. Sir John, in full uniform, and decorated with his various orders, now appeared on the Rainha's quarter-deck, and offered his hand to the Admiral, which, however, he declined until informed of the nature of his mission, and requested it might be communicated to him on the quarter-deck. The General produced the Carta Regia, and, not being an expert diplomatist, also produced his instructions, which the Admiral read; rather against the ambassador's will, and, as he might have expected, he was placed under arrest, and deprived of his sword. He attempted to address the officers and ship's company, and to assure them that all promises made to them should be fulfilled, but was stopped by the Admiral. Captain Goble and the other Captains soon came on board and retired with the Admiral to his cabin, leaving Sir John on deck, under custody of a Lieutenant of Marines. In half-an-hour the diplomatist was summoned to the cabin, and then Captain Goble communicated to him that the crews of the different ships had determined that neither the Admiral nor Captains should quit their respective ships until they were entirely settled with; and, in fact, the Don Pedro's ship's company, who were now becoming mutinous, had drawn up resolutions to that effect. . . The Admiral required Sir John to pledge his honour that he had no money or other public documents, which he did. A boat was sent for Captain Bressane, who declined coming on board the Rainha with either money or documents, as his instructions were to settle the accounts of the squadron only when it was delivered to Captain Crosbie. Another boat was sent to bring him on board. On appearing on the Rainha's deck, he protested against their proceedings, but delivered the money and papers. Sir John and Captain Bressane now returned, under escort, to the vessel which brought them to Vigo. Several letters passed between the Admiral and Sir John, which it is unnecessary here to publish. They were shortly after released, and permitted to return to Oporto, to make their report to the ministers. . . . When the services Admiral Sartorius had rendered to the cause are considered, together with his preserving the squadron under the most trying circumstances, and under every deprivation, it is not to be wondered at that the officers should feel indignant at this treatment. They now came to certain resolutions relative to their future proceedings, which were forwarded to Oporto. The ministers, seeing the danger their folly had brought on the Queen's cause, restored Sartorius, and complied with the demands of the squadron."

We cannot omit some passages in respect to the gallant Napier.

"Nearly twenty years had elapsed since I had seen an enemy: the sight of flags, the noise of guns, the sound of drums and bugles, soon awoke me to a recollection of the scenes of early life, and conveyed a sensation which will be well understood by those accustomed to the hustle of war and camps."

And again, when in sight of the enemy's fleet.

"At eight o'clock on the morning of the 3d of July, the officers of the watch reported two sail, then three, then four, and so on till they counted nine. I was surprised, and, as Sir Richard Strachan said, delighted, but the delight was accompanied by a disagreeable sort of feeling, just resembling the sensation of your heart coming up into your mouth, and requiring a tolerable grip to keep it down."

Of the action of 5th July, named "Cape St. Vincent," Admiral Napier has given a clear and graphic account, but we have not room for it. The gallant officer may with truth assert, that at no time was a Naval action fought with such disparity of force, and in no Naval action was there ever so severe a loss in so short a time; and in reply to detractors who, from party spirit, have stupidly asserted that the fleet was bought, he says,—

"I answer that they were, but with the same coin that Earl St. Vincent bought the Spanish fleet, viz. British powder, British shot, and British steel, wielded by the hands of British officers and seamen, with the disadvantages of a long peace, an ill-found and ill-disciplined squadron, and many of the officers totally unacquainted with naval habits and discipline. I must also do justice to the Portuguese officers and men who were in the fleet, all of whom behaved most courageously."

A Saunter in Belgium in the Summer of 1835, with Traits, Historical and Descriptive. By George St. George. F. C. Westley.

Our author, with his knapsack on his shoulder, made a pedestrian saunter or summer pilgrimage in Belgium, and he tells us that his motive in producing this volume was "to rescue, as far as was in his power, a country and a people from the undeserved odium and industrious vilification which has been heaped on them so unsparingly of late by most modern travellers among them." We are as little acquainted with the existence of this "vilification" as, after reading this volume, we are sensible of Mr. St. George's "rescue." His ramble on foot fully enabled him to mix with the common people of the country, and though his volume is nearly free from political sentiments, it contains matter far preferable; agreeable sketches and amusing historic anecdotes, which, with some good engravings, will render the publication a very agreeable companion for tourists.

The other day a tailor brought a friend of mine a coat that fitted very badly. He complained; but the tailor looked incredulously at him, and said, "I beg pardon, Sir, but the coat must fit, for the measures right, and we always cuts out on a jometry principle." — Reign of Humbug.

Corporal Punishment.—We take the following from our monthly contemporary:—"Sir Octavius Carey, Colonels Evans, and Thomson, and Majors Fancourt and Beauclerk, are the officers, supported by the talented Mr. Hume, who have entered the lists on the subject of corporal punishment with the most distinguished, the most reputed, and most experienced officers of the British Army. Colonel Evans has, by a singular fatality, lately furnished in his actions the complete refutation of his theories; for whatever he thought proper to argue against flogging in the House of Commons, Captain Dickson's evidence proves that he has made it his practice in Spain, not merely to flog his men, but to pass over the troublesome forms of Court-Martial, and inflict, summarily and without trial, what he maintained so stoutly was punishment altogether needless in the British Army, restricted as it is by every guard and formality that could be devised by good sense and humanity for protecting from its infliction any soldier but such as were of the most hardened and irreclaimable description. It is unfortunate that Colonel Thomson and Majors Fancourt and Beauclerk should not be seized with a fit of glory and join the Legion for a few months, to see how they could carry into effect their new notions of discipline under the same circumstances as Colonel Evans, whether their united wisdom would enable them to find out some contrivance for bearing out their popular declamations."

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL, unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, preserving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, rendering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and sustaining it in curl under the different varieties of atmosphere.

Prepered by Messrs. HANNAY and CO.,
Perfumers to the Royal Family, No. 63, Oxford Street, London.

Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and Co. were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to the Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individual who divulged it to them, or whose head would inevitably have paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties successively employed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn oaths of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three centuries.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed the greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and most uncivilised countries great value is set upon a fine head of hair. The great care is proverbial that is paid to the cultivation of the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, and art is there well known to succeed in outrivalling even the far-famed beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during the period of three centuries, and has been found undeviatingly successful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, soft, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess (as is done in some instances) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair upon cast iron—it will do no such thing; but, if regularly applied, it will re-produce the hair where nature ordained its existence, if lost from those causes to which baldness is referable; it will promote the growth of the hair generally,

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY,

sustain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a brilliant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a pure LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, unsophisticated with the deleterious articles usually employed to dye Oils red, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the hair, and although an oily substance, the

and is therefore free from the general complaint against every other article in present use for the same purpose, including those filthy substances miscalled Bears' Grease, which are neither more nor less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil submitted to various manipulations to divest them of the fetid animal smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform principle. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dews of the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprive it of which it soon withers and dies; so the hair, unless properly nourished, becomes weak and gradually drops off: for, minute as a single hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human hair will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface covered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, and which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tendency, the hair is destroyed thereby: thus it will be observed that those persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in life, which is merely caused by the acid caustic nature of the perspiration settling on the hair and being absorbed, which entirely destroys it; but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will prevent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury; and if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely removes the scurf, without the assistance of the dandruff comb, an operation so distressing to the heads of children.

Price 3s. 6d., 6s. 6d., and in pint bottles, with glass stoppers, 12s. each.

N.B.—HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL is particularly recommended to the notice of Merchants and Shippers Trading to the East and West Indies, being the only article for the hair that will survive a voyage to the East without turning rancid.

TESTIMONIALS.

From JOSEPH HENRY GREEN, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London.

"I have made trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba. (Signed) "JOSEPH HENRY GREEN,
"46, Lincoln's Inn Fields, April 15, 1835."

From BRANSBY COOPER, Esq., F.R.S., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c. &c.

"Mr. Bransby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony of the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases with perfect success. "New-street, Spring Gardens, April 13, 1835."

From WILLIAM HENTSCH, Esq., No. 3, Furnival's Inn, Holborn, late House Surgeon to the Free Hospital, Greville street, Hatton Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I know of; the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly,
"April 15, 1835." (Signed) "WILLIAM HENTSCH.

IMPORTANT DISCOVERY IN MEDICINE.

LEFAY'S GRAND POMMADE.—This extraordinary Preparation cures, by two or three external applications, Tic Douloureux, Gout, Rheumatism, Lumbago, and Sciatica, and all painful Affections of the Nerves, giving instantaneous relief in the most severe paroxysms. It has been extensively employed in the public and private practice of several French physicians, who have declared that in no case have they found it to fail in curing those formidable and tormenting maladies. Since its introduction into England, it has in every case fully maintained the high character its continental success has obtained for it on the Continent. Patients, who had for years drawn on a miserable existence, and many who had lost the use of their limbs by rheumatism and paralysis, have, by a few applications, been restored to health, strength, and comfort, after electricity, galvanism, hysterine, veratrine, morphia, colchicum, and all the usual remedies had been found useless. Its astonishing and almost miraculous effects have also been experienced in the cure of nervous and rheumatic pains of the head and face, paralytic affections, contracted and stiff joints, glandular swellings, pains of the chest and bones, chronic rheumatism, palpitation of the heart, difficult respiration, &c. It requires no restraint from business or pleasure. It does not cause any eruption, and may be applied to the most beautiful skin without fear of injury.

Sold, by the appointment of Jean Lefay, the Inventor, by his sole Agent, Stirling, Chemist, No. 86, High-street, Whitechapel, who will answer any inquiries if by letter, post paid; respecting it, and also show letters received from numerous patients who have benefitted by its application. It can be sent to any part of the world, upon enclosing a remittance, and any part of London carriage free. Sold in Pots at 4s. 6d. each.

NOTICE.—As there is a spurious imitation, it is requisite to see that the name "J. W. Stirling," is engraved on the Government Stamp, outside the wrapper, without which security it cannot be genuine.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—Mr. HOWARD, Surgeon Dentist, 52, Fleet-street, continues to supply DEFICIENCIES of the TEETH, on his improved principle, at the same moderate terms, whether arising from neglect, diseases of the gums, or age (from a single Tooth to a complete set), without extracting the roots, or giving any pain, and in every case restoring perfect articulation and mastication. An inspection of Mr. Howard's method will immediately convince those at all acquainted with the subject of its superiority.

Tender and decayed Teeth cured and effectually preserved from farther decay.—At home from ten till five.

TO TRAVELLERS, Merchants, Captains, Shippers, and Families.—WRAY'S CHALYBEATE GERMAN SEIDLITZ POWDERS, prepared by M. O. WRAY, Chemist, &c., 118, Holborn Hill, and sold in boxes (containing powders for 12 glasses) at 2s. each. The various effects produced by the operation of Seidlitz Powders, depend entirely on the different modes of preparation. The Chalybeate German Seidlitz Powders now recommended by the proprietor are brought to that state of perfection by which the most uniform results will be experienced, and, in conjunction with their pre-eminence over all other aperient medicines, the proprietor flatters himself the low price at which they are now prepared (being less than one half usually charged by druggists for the common Seidlitz Powders) will secure to them a decided preference. Where also may be had, Ginger Beer Powders, 6d. per dozen; three dozen, 1s. 3d. Soda Water ditto, 5d. per dozen, three dozen, 1s. Coneman Seidlitz, 1s. per dozen; three dozen, 2s. 6d. Lemonade ditto, 6d. per dozen; three dozen, 1s. 3d. N.B. Be careful to have the "Chalybeate German Seidlitz Powders," prepared by M. O. Wray, 118, Holborn-hill, as no others are genuine.

NORTON'S truly valuable CAMOMILE PILLS, for INDIGESTION, &c.—These Pills are a pure extract of Camomile Flowers, prepared by a peculiar process, by which all the medicinal properties of rather more than one ounce of the flowers, are concentrated into four moderate sized Pills; they are mild in operation, and have proved wonderfully successful in removing every symptom of indigestion, sick headache, loss of appetite, giddiness, heartburn, costiveness, eruptions on the skin, and all complaints arising from a disordered state of the digestive organs; they require no alteration of diet, and the operation will be found so beneficial in giving tone to the stomach, regulating the bowels, and in promoting a healthy habit, as fully to convince all who take them of their great utility.

Persons who have suffered from Indigestion for several years have by their use in a few weeks perfectly recovered, which is a convincing proof, that in the smallest compass, is contained the largest quantity of the tonic principle of so peculiar a nature, as to pervade the whole system, through which it diffuses health and strength.

Sold wholesale by Barclay and Sons; T. Butler; E. Edwards; F. Newberry and Sons; W. Sutton and Co., and A. Willoughby and Co. (late H. Griffiny Windus), 61, Bishopsgate-street Without, London, and retail by nearly all respectable Medicine Venders.

Be particular to ask for "NORTON'S PILLS," for in consequence of their great success some unprincipled persons have prepared a spurious imitation.

TEETH.—Gold is the only material which decayed teeth can be filled with any permanently beneficial result: the various cements to which so many impossibilities are unblushingly attributed, being amalgams of mercury, with silver, tin, &c., quickly combine with the acid of the mouth, and thus, forming muriates of those metals, turn the teeth black, and ultimately destroy them.*

GREIG THOMSON, Surgeon Dentist, informs the Public that he has succeeded in making a preparation of gold, which, without inflicting the least pain, effectually arrests the progress of decay, and resembles the teeth in point of colour much more than any other invention now in use.

G. T. continues to perform all the operations of Dental Surgery, and to fix natural and artificial teeth upon the most improved principles, combined with the utmost moderation of terms.

* Is it credible that any member of the Medical Profession can recommend these deleterious compositions; or can any reference real or pretended, alter the facts above alluded to?

WHOLESOME SUMMER BEVERAGE —There is nothing of more importance at the present season than the choice of a Beverage. The leading Members of the Medical Profession, aware of the necessity for great caution in this respect, having strongly recommended weak Brandy and Water in lieu of the general class of fermentable liquors, J. BETTS and Co., notified by this recommendation, and the constantly increasing sale of the PATENT BRANDY (exceeding, in the last year, that of the preceding year by between twenty and thirty thousand Gallons), may, with great propriety, dwell upon its peculiar adaptation to the season; not only as a safe and agreeable beverage, but also with reference to its importance in the manufacture of Home made Wines, in the preparation of Confectionary and Preserved Fruits, and for general Culinary purposes. For all which objects it is peculiarly adapted by its extreme purity and freedom from acid which has been established by the analysis and Certificates of many of the most eminent Chemists.

As Distillers, J. T. Betts and Co. cannot send out less than Two Gallons of their Patent Brandy; which may be obtained at Eighteen Shillings per Imperial Gallon, of the highest proof strength, at the Distillery, No. 7, Smithfield Bars, leading to St. John Street, which is their only Establishment.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Broils, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sons, Hawls, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgoss and Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Laxenby, Dublin;—and by respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or other Sauce.

CAPT. WILDEY'S Substitute for Horse-
hair, Flock, Wool, and other substances now used for Bedding, the COCOA-NUT FIBRE.—The introduction of this most valuable material into this country, from its superiority over all other articles hitherto known, will render its general adoption a great national benefit. Among the prominent advantages attending the use of the Coco-Nut Fibre are that it is a powerful anti-contagionist, that vermin will not harbour in it, neither will it ferment, become decomposed, engender animalculæ, and further that it can be purchased at a much cheaper rate than horse-hair. Several Poor Law Unions and other public Institutions have already introduced its use into their establishments, whose favourable testimonials can be referred to. The prepared Cocoa-Nut Fibre, with samples of Mattresses, Pillows, Couches, &c., stuffed with it, may be inspected at No. 3, Agar-street, Strand, where orders for the raw material will be received. Coach-makers, Upholsterers, &c. &c. supplied on the usual terms of business.

THE VEGETABLE SYRUP
DE VELNOS.—At this period of the year, when, from th increased heat in the atmosphere, inflammation of the blood is more frequent occurrence, the use of a medicine which cools without debilitating the system, must be evident and advan tageous, if not indispensable. Of such a nature and property t experience of more than half a century has proved that the Veg table Syrup is unquestionably possessed. It is of peculiar ef cacy in correcting, purifying, and sweetening the blood; ar those who are afflicted with Scrofula, Scurvy, Scorbutic Eru tions, and many of those melancholy diseases arising from t impurity of the blood and juices, should, especially at this se son, enter without delay upon a regular course of the Vegetab Syrup. The effect of this medicine in promoting insensible pe spiration, is such as not to interrupt either business or pleasur it operates on the animal juices, and requires only the commo restraint of moderation in diet. It is dissolved in the chyle of t stomach, is conveyed by the circulating fluids, and corrects the tendencies to all those diseases which originate in vitiate blood. It is a safe, though a powerful, substitute for mercur and removes those evils which an unsuccessful use of that mine ral occasions.
The Syrup is prepared by Mrs. Cauham, No. 52, Berners street, Oxford-street, and sold by her, and, with her authorit by all respectable Medicine Venders in town and country.—Se Mrs. Canham's recently published Treatise on Scrofula, Scurv Consumption, and Diseases of the Blood and Liver. ...—Committal for Murder.—The person named Ed...ard Murray, whom we mentioned last week as having ...ceived serious injury from James Elliott, a soldier in ...is regt., having died of his wounds, an Inquest was ...eld upon the body on Friday, before John Hargreaves, ...sq., Coroner, and a respectable Jury. The facts, as ...e before narrated them, were given in evidence, the ...eclaration in articulo mortis was received, and a ...ost mortem examination of the body having taken place, ...he officiating Surgeon gave his opinion as to the causes ...f death. After a very patient and minute inquiry, the ...ury delivered a verdict of Wilful Murder against Elliott, ...and the Coroner issued his warrant of committal. A ...letter was then read from the Commanding Officer of ...the Detachment, stationed at Blackburn, which intl...mated the wish of the soldiers to make manifest to the ...inhabitants their feelings of deep regret for the death of ...Murray, and the circumstances by which it was occa...sioned. To compensate the father for the loss of his ...son was beyond the reach of human power; still, to ...mark their feelings of sympathy towards the friends and ...family of the deceased, a voluntary and unanimous con...tribution of a day's pay had been collected, which, when ...the expences of the funeral had been defrayed, it was their wish that the surplus should be applied to the benefit of his family. The unfortunate event was viewed by the soldiers of the regt. throughout with feelings of a similar nature, and 25*l.* had been contributed at Bolton and the other stations, to be appropriated to the best advantage of the parents and relations of the deceased. The Jury intimated their high gratification of the generous sentiments thus displayed, and remarked that the death of Murray could be viewed only as the individual act of Elliott, and not at all connected with the character of the regiment. The Coroner also expressed his approbation of the course which the regiment had pursued. Murray was buried at the Roman Catholic Chapel on Sunday, and was attended to his grave by the whole of the soldiery. Elliott was taken by Mr. Perris to Lancaster on Saturday. We understand that he exceedingly regrets that his violence should have occasioned the death of an individual towards whom he had previously entertained not the slightest ill-will, and that he states, he acted under the impression that Murray was a deserter, and that he had a right to resort to force for his apprehension. The amount remitted to the family of Murray, we hear, is 32*l.* 16*s.*—Blackburn Standard.

53d—Hd.-qrs. arrived at Corfu from Malta on 24th June, on board the Prince Regent tr.; the Parmelia, with the remainder of the same corps, was daily expected, having been relieved by the 59th from Gibraltar.

59th—has arrived at Malta from Gibraltar, on board the Prince Regent and Parmelia trs., having been relieved by the 52d.

65th Depot—is next for Ireland.

50th Depot—1 comp. from Cork to Bandon on 1st inst.

67th Depot—The comp. at Skibbereen moved to Cork, and embarked on board the Athol for Portsmouth on 26th ult., and sailed on 28th. Lieutenants Brannan and Snow have arrived from the Service comps. in the West Indies.

ROYAL ARTILLERY, Head Quarters—had excellent practice at the high and low angle from the mortar battery, with both round shot and shells, on Monday and Tuesday. On Wednesday, ten companies were formed for exercise in Infantry evolutions, under the command of Lieut.-Cols. Lacy and Power. The firing by cos. was very good, so was the file firing in square, but the volley of the front rank was only so-so. The movements were executed with great steadiness. Capt. Wilson's co., 1st batt., were ordered out on the Common on Wednesday morning, to be inspected by the Commandant in their proficiency in Field-battery exercise, as they were to be dismissed therefrom on Friday, having completed their 12 months. They were in heavy marching order, and went through the inspection in brilliant style; in fact, they have some time been considered a crack battery. The stable inspection took place in the afternoon, the whole of which was highly approved of by Sir J. M'Lean. Capt. Wilson leaves Woolwich on Friday for the Cape of Good Hope, having exchanged with another Officer. Capt. Otain is for foreign service. Maj.-Gen. Millar, Director-General of the Field Train, and Lieut.-Col. Jones, D.A.A.-Gen., are on leave. Lieut. Rivers Lake will shortly join Woolwich from recruiting at Bath. REVIEW ON WORMWOOD SCRUBS.—On Thursday morning the 1st Regt. of Life Guards, and the Royal Horse Guards (Blue), marched about nine o'clock from Knightsbridge and the Regent's Park Barracks to Wormwood Scrubs, where they were reviewed by the Commander of the Forces. The men wore their full dresses, with their cuirasses, and the fine bands of both regiments were attired in their splendid state dresses. At eleven o'clock his Lordship, accompanied by Generals Sir J. C. Dalbiac, Sir W. Gordon, &c., and a numerous staff, entered the ground, when the manœuvres immediately commenced. While skirmishing one of the Life Guards was thrown from his horse, which galloped several times round the lines before it could be caught. He was immediately attended by the surgeons of both regiments, and we are happy to say that although considerably injured no bones were broken. He was sent back to the barracks. The troops, who were commanded by Col. Lygon, left the Scrubs about one o'clock.

DISEMBODIED MILITIA.—According to a return recently made there are retained under the 10 Geo. 4, c. 10, on permanent pay in Great Britain, 80 Adjutants, as many Sub.-Majors, 1243 Serjeants, 61 Drum-Majors, and 469 Drummers. PORTSMOUTH, Aug. 5.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Galatea, fitted as a coal depot for the West Indies, went to Plymouth on Sunday to be loaded. She was in charge of Mr. Walker, Assist. Mast. Attend. of that dock-yard, and a party of riggers. Alligator is to be fitted for a similar service, and to be stationed at Alexandria. She is in this harbour. Bonetta, Lieut. Desebampe, sailed on Monday for the Cape of Good Hope station; she had specie on government account, and several supernumerary officers for the squadron. The Captain, Commander, Lieutenants, &c., in charge of the ships in ordinary at this port, were placed in commission on Monday, and Capt. Searle, C.B., hoisted his pendant on board the Victory; she is now in the basin fitting for the reception of the officers, and the Prince only considered as the hulk. Instructions as to the duties and pay of the officers are expected shortly; in the interim Capt. Searle is under the orders of the Port Admiral, and available to serve on Courts-Martial, surveys, examination of Midshipmen, &c. The Warrant Officers of the fleet will be appointed to ships according to service and capacity. Several have been sent to the Cape and Mediterranean station, as supar., and to fill up the vacancies as they occur; 5 or 6 are going to the W. Indies in Madagascar. Scylla, 16, Com. Robb, came from Sheerness on Monday; she brought the Inconstant's detachment of Marines, and the following day sailed to join the squadron under C. Paget. The Scylla is to go to the West Indies after the experimental cruise is over. Najader (Swedish corvette) and Fredericksvarn (Norwegian brig) have sailed on a cruise. Beacon has been hauled out of the basin, and Victory taken in. The following East India ships have been at Spithead during the week to embark their passengers: Windsor and Robert Small, for Calcutta; Triumph, Lord Hungerford, and Georgiana, for Bombay; Lady Flora, for Madras. Ships in Port—Lady Flora, Triumph, and Georgiana. E. I. ships at Spithead: Britannia, Inconstant, Victory, Madagascar, Pique, Royal George yacht, Excellent, Beacon, in harbour. Pique and Inconstant are fitting in the basin, they have their lower rigging up; Pique has pointed her mizen-topmast, and put part of her tanks on board; her spars are alongside. The Inconstant is not quite so forward, as her Marines did not join until Tuesday. The Buffalo was driven back to St. Helen's twice since last Saturday, but on Tuesday she got away with a steady S.E. wind, and is now, no doubt, clear of the Channel.

WOOLWICH Dock-Yard, August 5th.—(From our own Correspondent).—On Saturday last the Echo st.-v. arrived from the City Canal, and has been taken into the basin, brought under the sheers, and had a new funnel shipped. The Confiance st.-v. has taken in new boilers, and is getting her wheels on by men belonging to Messrs. Sesforth. The Firefly st.-v., Lieut. J. Pearse, has had her masts fitted, and is getting rigging up, while her engines are being got in readiness by the Yard Engineers, who will afterwards finish the Lightning st.-v., Lieut. Shambler, which would be ready for service in a few days if she had the Engineers at work. But the Civilians still hold out against the extension of the working hours without increase of pay. The Firebrand st.-v., Mr. J. Allen, has been under orders to receive the Duke of Cumberland, who was expected here on Tuesday. A melancholy occurrence took place on Monday, John Atkinson, one of the Police, dropped down in an apopletic fit (the second) while on duty, and expired in a few minutes though prompt assistance was afforded by the Yard Surgeon, Mr. Dunn. Lieut. Pearse (the Director of Police) ordered the body to be conveyed to the Marine Hospital, but, in consequence of a recent order, they refused to receive it, and it was accordingly conveyed to a public-house near the yard, where it was covered with a union-jack, and an inquest returned the usual verdict on Wednesday. The next point was as to the man's being buried, as there has not been a casualty in the Force for two years and seven months; and, by the unremitting exertions of Lieut. Pearce, an order was given for the funeral at the public expense, as the man died while on duty. Lieut. Pearse has thus established a precedent which is highly satisfactory to this valuable force. The Capt.-Superintendent has ordered that two Divisions and an Inspector shall follow the body of the deceased to the grave on Saturday; he has left a wife and infant destitute. Arrangements are in progress for the mast-makers to be confined entirely to that employment, in lieu of their being taken indiscriminately from the shipwrights as heretofore. The Messenger st.-v. is having some beams put in her midships to strengthen her. The Rhadamanthus st.-v. is being brought forward with all possible despatch, and had the bulwarks lowered to be clear of the range of her two guns, fore and aft. Blazer st.-v. will be taken out of dock next spring-tides. Ships in Port—William and Mary yacht, Capt. Sir S. Warren, C.B., K.C.H., Firebrand Admy. st.-yt., Mr. John Allen. In Basin—Blazer st.-v., Lightning Admy. st.-yt., Lieut. Shambler, Firefly st.-v., Lieut. J. Pearse, Echo, Confiance, Flamer, Rhadamanthus, st.-vs., and Messenger st.-v., Mr. John King.

MILFORD HAVEN, August 3rd—(From our own Correspondent).—The two little light vessels built here by Mr. Roberts, under contract from the Post-Master General, for the purpose of being placed on points leading to the new packet station at Hobbs' Point, as beacons to warn the steam-packets, plying between this and Waterford, of these shallows, were launched on Friday. Another step has thus been taken towards the removal of the establishment to that place. The plague having again appeared in the neighbourhood of Alexandria, our quarantine station has been afresh brought into requisition. Three or four vessels arrived at it during the week, but none of any importance. A visit from the Lords of the Admiralty is shortly expected at Pembroke-yard. After this annual inspection of their Lordships, considerable changes in the character of revision are anticipated at the different Naval arsenals. The high salaries now afforded some individuals, to the disadvantage of others, it is said will be reduced. Such reduction, if not brought into operation with those at present in office, will at least so far effect them as to stop the rapid rise of 10*l.* per annum to which they are now subject. The low salaries will at the same time be improved, and thus a degree of equalisation be accomplished, making merit the only means of promotion. On Thursday last the Castlemartin Yeomanry Cavalry were called out for the usual eight days training in the neighbourhood of Pembroke. This corps consists of three troops, two of which (those belonging to the hundred of Castlemartin) are well attended, but the third (that raised in the neighbourhood of Haverfordwest) is not possessed of a similar esprit de corps. Between twenty and thirty of them only, under charge of a Subaltern Officer, met their brother-swordsmen on the day of assembling. They are to be inspected today by Colonel Waters, the Officer appointed for the purpose. The Binc of Colberg Strey, Master, from Dantzic, is discharging timber, deals, &c. at Pembroke-yard from that port. The Mulgrave is hourly expected at our quarantine station. The Gibraltar will then be removed to Pembroke-yard, and there taken to pieces.

PLYMOUTH, 4th Aug.—"The Malabar, 74, Capt. Sir W. A. Montagoe, K.C.H., arrived here on Sunday, from Lisbon and Cadiz. We hear that the sentence of the Corporal of Marines on board her, who had been condemned to death by a Court-Martial, for stabbing an officer, has been commuted to 14 years transportation." The San Josef was commissioned on Monday. The ordinary will be in future under the command of the Admiral Commander-in-Chief. Russell, 74, came into harbour on Tuesday, to have a new main-mast. In Hamoaze—Royal Adelaide, San Josef, Imogine, Fly, Comus, Alban, Magnet, Hope, Sheldrake, Diligence. In the Sound—Hercules, Malabar, Braxillan, corvette. The Childers arrived at Tarragona, 5th July, and relieved the Clio. The Clio was off Gibraltar on the 15th July, from which place she was to take the mail to Barcelona, and most probably would be stationed there for some time.

Mr. T. C. Jones, Surgeon of Pembroke-yard, now on public leave, has had an extension of absence granted him.

Sir G. Cockburn has succeeded in having Priest, the leader in the attack upon the British ship Clio, at Para seized and brought off to the West Indies for trial. The vessel was plundered, and the crew (except two individuals) massacred. Upon learning the fact, Sir G. Cockburn despatched some vessels of war to Para, and contrived to get possession of Priest, who had planned the attack on the Clio, and was the principal agent in executing the atrocities that attended it. The authority of the Brazilian government has been completely restored at Pars, and perfect security for British subjects is now re-established in that province. Para, situate at the mouth of the Amazon, forms an inlet of incalculable advantage for British commerce to the continent of South America.

Mr. Brown, Mast. Attend. at Woolwich dock-yard, has been superannuated upon 300*l.* per ann., and is succeeded by Mr. Teignmouth; Mr. Loutbean succeeds Mr. Payn (superannuated) as First Master Attendant at Chatham. Mr. Walker is re-appointed to the situation as Second Mast. Attend. at Plymouth, with the increased pay. Mr. Gaze, First Mast. Attend. at Sheerness, has received a new appointment to that office under the new regulation, but retaining his former salary, with the understanding that his period of service will be only calculated up to the present time for superannuation.

The half-pay of the Pursers R.N., with the additional shilling commenced from 1st July.

The Lord Lieutenant of Ireland has knighted Commander H. E. Atkinson, of the Coast Guard, as a mark of respect for his attention on the occasion of steering his Excellency and lady, in a six-oared barge, up and down the Blackwater River (on their visit to Youghall) one of the most intricate and dangerous rivers in Ireland.

The Zebra, 18, left Hobart Town on 4th March, for Otaheite; the Winchester, 52, was at Bombay on 24th March; the Raleigh, 18, had been there, and the Jupiter, 38, was expected on 22d of that month. A rich native, Aga Mahommed Kabiar Sherezee, gave a splendid entertainment to the Admiral and Governor; 840 persons sat down to supper.

Capt. Drinkwater is to have the command of the Conway on that ship being commissioned, at this port.—Hampshire Telegraph.

The lieutenantship of Malta is to be bestowed upon Vice Admiral Fleeming, the Commander-in-Chief at Sheerness, who will be succeeded in that command by Vice Admiral Sir Edward Codrington. The successor of Sir Josias Rowley, in the Mediterranean command, will be the Honourable Sir Charles Paget.—Hampshire Telegraph.—[When our readers are informed that Sir Charles Paget has his flag at the mizen, and that the Mediterranean command is that of a Vice Admiral, they may appreciate the value of our contemporary's information. It has been long rumoured that Vice Admiral Fleeming is intended for the Government of Malta, which office he will probably assume when his term of service at Sheerness expires. Should the Mediterranean fleet be increased Sir Charles Paget will probably be second in command on that station, but it is rather premature as yet to fix upon the successor to Vice Admiral Fleeming, whose term has more than twelve months to run.—ED.]

The Earl of Minto entertained Sir John Franklin, the new Lieut. Governor of Van Diemen's Land, and a select party at dinner at the Admiralty, previously to the departure of the gallant Officer to assume the Government of that colony. At the end of the present month the Noble Earl will proceed on an official tour of inspection to the Dockyards of the Kingdom.

The Hind cutter sailed from Constantinople on 12th July, and will re-join the fleet; it came here last week with Maj. Cameron and Capt. Woodfall, who are proceeding with Mr. M'Neil to Persia, where they are to take service in the Schah's army under Sir Henry Bethune.

Glasgow steamer, with 150 recruits and 16 officers of the British Legion, sailed from Portsmouth for St. Sebastian, on Sunday.

Imogine, Captain Bruce, at Plymouth, is under sailing orders for South America. Captain Tait and Commander Smart, K.H., to join the Dublin will go out in her.

H.M.S. Bellerophon, Rear-Admiral Paget, with the Pembroke, Cornwallis, Vanguard, and Minden, sailed from Plymouth Sound on Saturday on a cruise, but the latter put back again soon after, having carried away her main cross-trees. The first four were seen the same afternoon from the hills above Falmouth, steering to the westward. The Asia had not joined.

The Kent has sailed from Deptford for Halifax; the Lord Eldon is fitting as a freight ship, destination unknown; as yet the St. Vincent, Pelorus, and Eden, convict ships, remain fitting at Deptford.

There was a splendid Regetta at Greenwich on Monday

1st instant, and on the following evening the winner of the Blue placed his hard and well-earned boat, value 23*l.*, on a car drawn by two horses, covered with laurel and other ever-greens, and in the boat a band playing "Rule Britannia, and followed by six other cars, similarly decorated, and having passed through the various streets, were admitted into Greenwich Hospital, where they paid their respects to the Governor, &c. The winner was a poor deserving waterman, with a wife and six children entirely dependant on his exertions for their support; and, notwithstanding the fresh wind during the day, a few good sousings took place, but no other accident occurred.

By advices from the Sandwich Islands we learn that the Jonah, Captain Roger, while lying to windward off one of the islands, was attacked by the serang, a Bengalee, who, with an axe, murdered the Captain, Mate, two white and two coloured seamen. He then attacked the second officer, who had a severe struggle with him, and both fell exhausted; the supercargo coming up from below, and seeing the state of things, shut the serang.

East India Intelligence.

It is rumoured that the Hydrabad command is likely to be bestowed upon the Adjutant-General of the Madras Army; we can hardly think this, as the emoluments of that situation are a very inadequate recompense for the long and honourable services of that gallant officer.—Courier.

One of the Midshipmen of the Duke of Argyll, named Davis, was missed on the 3d March, about 12 o'clock. When last seen he was attempting to catch blubber over the stern with a boat-hook, and is supposed to have fallen overboard. He probably struck his head against some part of the ship, was stunned, and could make no noise to attract attention.—Madras Conservative.

John Sullivan, Esq. was on the 1st of March sworn a member of the Council for Madras, pursuant to the orders of the Court of Directors.

Melancholy accounts have been received of the death of Capt. Sinclair, of H. M. 55th. This unfortunate officer committed suicide by hanging himself, on the road from Bellary to Madras to stand his trial on certain charges, the nature of which we are at present unacquainted with.—Madras Herald.

We have heard it rumoured that intelligence has been received by government, that Superintending Surgeons are to be allowed to retire on the pay of Lieut.-Colonels immediately on their promotion, instead of serving two years in that grade as formerly; also that the three additional annual retirements from the Medical Fund have been sanctioned.

Foreign Intelligence.

France.—The Moniteur of Wednesday contains a Royal Ordinance, announcing the promotion of Major-Gen. Bugeaud to the rank of Lieut.-General, as a reward for the victory recently obtained by him in Africa. Marshal Maison's report to the King, recommending this promotion, states that Major-General Bugeaud has passed through 30 years of effective duty, and has served in 13 campaigns.

The triumphal arch lately inaugurated had not proved a source of triumph to all the military. Captains and Generals pour in complaints that their names have been omitted in the inscription, which is, nevertheless, very comprehensive. A committee has been appointed to satisfy these candidates after fame.

This week new rumours, unfavourable to the reputation of the Army for fidelity, have been in circulation; and with these it is said the Buonaparte family are more or less associated. In the print-shops portraits are exhibited of the late consort of Jerome Buonaparte, ex-King of Westphalia, and of her son and daughter; and beneath that of her Majesty are these impressive words: "Died, in exile, 20th Nov. 1835!" under that of her son's, this significant inscription: "Prince Napoleon Jerome de Montfort, nephew of the Emperor, born in exile!" A similar one is appended to the portrait of the Princess, his sister.

Spain.—The accounts from the north of Spain concur in stating that Gomez, after quitting Santiago, went, not in the direction of Orense, as the Moniteur led every one to suppose, but towards the sea-port of Ferrol, on the northern coast of Galicia. On the 24th Gomez was, it is said, at Mondonnedo, on his way back to Biscay. It is probable, therefore, that the force lately sent from St. Sebastian to Santander was destined to meet him on his return to that province. Gomez is represented to have lost from 200 to 300 of his men by desertion.

A proclamation has been issued, forbidding more than two persons in arms to appear together in the streets of Madrid, unless when upon service. Should this order be contravened, those doing so are threatened with instant arrest, "no matter what uniform they may wear."

The Revista announces that General Cordova left Vittoria finally for Miranda, on 20th, with his staff. Numerous carts of corn took the same direction, which led people to believe that the army was retiring behind the Ebro.

Portugal.—On the 14th July, at two o'clock in the afternoon, the roof of the Treasury, situate in the Rocio Square, Lisbon, was discovered to be on fire, and notwithstanding every possible exertion was used to extinguish the flames, they raged with so much fury that at 8 P. M. this beautiful spacious building was completely destroyed. It was so far fortunate that it occurred at the time all the employés were at their stations, together with the President, M. de Silva Carvalho, who immediately gave directions (and who personally assisted) for the removal of the papers, books, and money. Of the latter there was but little at the Treasury, money is kept in the Bank; this was soon done, and just in time to save all from the devouring element. Nothing of importance has been lost; consequently the Government have only to lament the loss of a commodious public department.

Hanover.—The Duke of Cambridge gave a déjeu dansant on the 26th ult. in honour of the birthday of t Duchess. The fete was opened by a quadrille of ci Officers on horseback. In the evening there were gra illuminations and fireworks.

Theatres.

Queen's.—This theatre commenced de novo on Mo day, with a piece called Reformation, and from the ertions of the management we really begin to think "t the work of reformation has begun." The entertai ments consisted of two new vaudevilles, one evidentl translation from the French, and two old, but not welcome, burlettas, all of which appeared to afford highest satisfaction. In the second and third pieces M Waylett made her appearance after too long an absen from the London boards, which we regret to hear been partly owing to severe indisposition. Mrs. Wayl is considerably thinner, and looks exceedingly delica but her voice is as rich, clear, and fresh as we ever member to have heard it. The exquisite style in wh she warbled several of her favourite ballads must pronounced unrivalled; it was the very perfection of art of ballad singing. She was rapturously encored all her songs. Her acting of the part of Constance, False and Constant, is also entitled to praise, for it w natural and humorous. Mr. T. Green who is a gr favourite here, and deservedly so, played Sir G. Dar well, in his usual, easy and gentlemanlike style. W the Irish Major of Benson Hill was were greatly pleased it is one of the best things he has done, and his exertio were highly relished by the audience. We can recom mend our readers to visit this comfortable theatre if th wish for an evening's real amusement.

Lyceum.—On Monday, after an absence of three yea Mr. Hackett, the American comedian, made his fi bow upon these boards. The part chosen was that Colonel Wildfire in the farce of The Kentuckian. T Colonel, in whom are blended fine animal spirits w vast good humour and great generosity, but withal enormous braggart, was in the happiest manner hit and to the very life pourtrayed, by Mr. Hackett, w seems as if he could in reality "jump higher, squat low dive deeper, keep longer under, and come up drier," any other of the impossible things he spoke about. performance was throughout received with great app bation, and the piece was given out for repetition w unmixed applause. Mrs. F. Matthews, it is fair to a did great justice to the part of Mrs. Luminary, s Messrs. F. Bennett, Homming, and Bland, also did utmost for their respective characters.

THE CAFFRE WAR.

[We give this day, in our correspondence, a let addressed to us from a highly talented and accomplish traveller (we add, with pride and pleasure, a Friend), reference to this Campaign: and we are at the se time induced to take a momentary glance at the volu nous paper just distributed by the House of Comm relative to the Caffre war and the death of Hintza.]

In No. 8 despatch from Sir. B. D'Urban to the Earl Aberdeen, dated Grahamstown, June 19, 1835, Benjamin, gives a general view of the war, and of circumstances which led to it. He states that he ascertained that

"Hintza (the chief of the country between the Kye a the Bashee, and of the left bank of the latter river, and p eminent chief of Caffreland), had been, if not the origi contriver and instigator of the combination among the chi of the savage tribes in western Caffreland against colony, very early referred to and consulted by them there that he afforded them his countenance and advice; receiv into his territory the plundered herds and effects s thither from the colony; permitted, if not directed, many his own tribe to join in the invasion; and that consequen the border tribes, in all their measures, relied upon his s port and upon the ultimate refuge of his country, in case their failure. This certainty, afterwards still more am confirmed, had rendered it obviously at once just and nec sary that my operations should embrace the country Hintza as their concluding stage."

After detailing the leading operations of the war, Benjamin proceeds to state the reasons why it had come not only expedient but absolutely and indispensa necessary and unavoidable to extend the colonial bord

"The source of the greatest misfortunes to the colon he says, "has ever been the insecurity of its frontier; of this the two last extensions to the Fish River in 18 and to the Keishkamma and Chemla in 1819, are rema able and uncontrovertible evidences. Both of these li are involved in tangled jungles, impervious woody ravi and, in fact, made by nature for the preparatory lurk place of the savage before he springs upon his prey, for his retreat and concealment when he has secured Hence a constant series of hostile inroads and a vexati system of cattle stealing; and "now this last barbar and bloody inroad which has filled the cup of distress to overflowing, has spread such universal consternation, that I may securely pledge my word to your Lordship that unless a safe boundary be extended beyond the present frontier districts of Albany and Somerset, they will be altogether deserted."

Sir Benjamin observes of the new territory, the whole of which he had visited during the late operations, "that in addition to an invaluable acquisition of beautiful and fertile territory, it secures a compact and easily defended barrier district of the most perfect description." And he adds—

"I felt it my imperative and conscientious duty to his Majesty, and to the colony confided to my care, to carry into effect this extension; and in this measure, alike dictated by policy, security, and justice, let it not be said that it is unduly harsh or severe to the savages expelled; for be it remembered, these had all deeply and without provocation dipped their hands in English blood; that they had involved whole districts in ruin and devastation, and that they had lost the country in question by the operations of a war which they had themselves so wantonly provoked. And here it may not be irrelevant to cite the opinion of a most benevolent and humane clergyman, Mr. Shrewsbury, chief of the Wesleyan mission in the colony, long resident among the Caffres, and experienced as well in their character as in colonial frontier history. It will be found in the Enclosure, No. 14, and although its author is a man of peace and of religion, a teacher of the Gospel, and, as all who know him will vouch, in every regard a most pious and exemplary Christian minister, I think my measures are not quite so severe as those which he in his conscience considers necessary, and openly recommends. To this I also add the opinion of the Caffre character generally given by another humane and very excellent clergyman, Mr. Boyce, long resident in Caffreland, to whom I referred the Colonial Office for information when he visited England early in 1834."

Alluding afterwards to the subject of extension of territory, Sir Benjamin observes—

"As I have reason to believe that the important measure of extension will be assailed by Dr. Philip, and of course by the London Mission, on the ground of injustice in itself, and very probably (since it is a party peculiarly liable to exaggeration in statement, where an object or theory is to be supported) of severity in its execution, I think it may be right to inclose an address (which otherwise I should not have done) which I have received from the whole body of the Wesleyan Mission here, seven in number, all well versed in the subject by long residence in Caffreland, and all intimately acquainted with the passing events of the period. . . . . That opinion, as your Lordship will perceive, states 'their conviction of the wantonness, cruelty, and ingratitude of the Caffre aggression, of the consequent justice of the course which it has been my indispensable duty to avenge, and that this duty has been discharged in accordance with the principles of mercy.'"

The Enclosures Nos. 14 and 15 will be the subject of much comment.

"All the authority of Britain and the Colonial Government cannot eventually save them from the common lot of all native tribes bordering on European colonies if they provoke the animosity of the colonists; that everything assists in destroying the good understanding which at present exists between the Caffres and the colonists, their natural protectors against the barbarous and powerful tribes beyond them, then it will appear that no punishment can be too severe which has for its object the prevention of strife, and which would ultimately lead to the loss of the independence and property of the Caffre tribes, and prepare the way for their final extinction."

As the death of the principal of the Caffre chief, Hintza, forms a prominent topic in the despatch of Lord Glenelg, we shall quote the following passage relating to it from enclosure 18, in No. 3 despatch from H. G. Smith, Colonel in chief of the staff, who was sent with a military force to escort Hintza (who was a hostage) on a visit to his territories to enable him to persuade his people to deliver up 25,000 cattle and 500 horses, agreeably to treaty.

"Upon nearing the top of a steep ascent, the country was perfectly open, and a considerable tongue of land running parallel with the rugged bed of the Kabaka, upon a gradual descent of about two miles, to a turn of the river, whereon were several Caffre huts. I was looking back to observe the march of the troops, when I heard a cry of 'Look, Colonel!' I saw Hintza had set off at full speed, and was thirty yards a-head of every one. I spurred my horse with violence, and coming close up with him, called to him; he urged his horse the more, which could best mine; I drew a pistol, it snapped; I drew another, it also snapped; I was then some time galloping after him, when I spurred my horse along side of him, and struck him on the head with the butt-end of a pistol; he redoubled his efforts to escape, and his horse was three-lengths a-head of mine. I had dropped one pistol, I threw the other after him, and struck him again on the head. Having thus raced about a mile, we were within half a mile of the Caffre huts; I found my hopes was closing with him; I had no means whatever of assailing him, while he was provided with his assagais; I therefore resolved to attempt to pull him off his horse, and I seized the athletic chief by the throat, and, twisting my hand in his karosse, I dragged him from his seat, and hurled him to the earth; he instantly sprung on his legs, and sent an assagai at me, running off towards the rugged bed of the Kebaka. My horse was most unruly, and I could not pull him up till I reached the Caffre huts. Thus unhorsing the chief, and his waiting to throw an assagai at me, brought Mr. George Southey, of the Corps of Guides, up; and at about 200 yards distance he twice called to Hintza, in Caffre, to stop, or he would shoot him. He ran on. Mr. Southey fired, and only slightly struck him in the leg; again calling to him to stop without effect, he fired and shot him through the back: he fell headlong forwards, but springing up and running forwards, closely pursued by my aide-de-camp, Lieutenant Balfour, precipitated himself down a kloof into the Kebaka, and posting himself in a narrow niche of the rock, defied any attempt to secure him; when, still refusing to surrender, and raising an assagai, Mr. George Southey fired and shot him through the head. Thus terminated the career of the Chief Hintza, whose treachery, perfidy, and want of faith, made him worthy of the nation of atrocious and indomitable savages over whom he was the acknowledged chieftain."

We come now to No. 5, the despatch from Lord Glenelg to Governor Sir B. D'Urban. It commences with a few compliments of course, and then proceeds:—

"With the most ample details of all your military operations, you have not combined any clear and comprehensive explanation of the causes which provoked the irruption of the Caffres into the colony."

His Lordship then states the result of his own inquiries:—

"I am constrained to admit, that in the conduct which was pursued towards the Caffre nation by the colonists and the public authorities of the colony, through a long series of years, and which the short period of your administration could not have enabled you to correct, the Caffres had an ample justification of the war into which they rushed with such fatal imprudence at the close of the year."

Lord Glenelg then states the justification—

"The Caffres had to resent, and endeavoured justly though impotently to avenge, a series of encroachments upon them, which had terminated in the assumption by Great Britain, first of the dominion, and then of the exclusive possession, of all the country between the Great Fish River and the Keishkamma. To effect this object we commenced by ascribing to the chieftain Gaika an authority which he did not possess, and then proceeded to punish him and his tribe because he failed to exercise that imaginary power for our benefit. We held him responsible for the acts of his and our own common enemy, and exacted from him and his people a forfeiture of their lands as a penalty for the retaliation made by the chief Slambie, after the invasion of his country by Gaika and ourselves. We forced on our ally a treaty which, according to the usages of the Caffre nation, he had no authority to conclude, and, proceeding on that treaty, we ejected the other Caffre chiefs, who were no parties to it, from their country. The compact thus made was on our side repeatedly infringed. Of the country of which the dominion was acquired, in order that it might be placed as a barrier between the two nations, and which, with that avowed object, had been especially devoted to be thenceforward a neutral and uncultivated waste, extensive tracts were speedily occupied, partly by British and partly by Hottentot settlements. The Caffres, imitating our example, endeavoured to resume the possession of some part of their lost country. They were at times driven back at the point of the bayonet, and either shot or flogged if captured to the westward of the Keishkamma. At other times, their residence within that frontier was permitted, if not encouraged. But, as often as the fluctuating policy of the Colonial Government led to the disapproval of this indulgence, they were again driven back in large bodies into their remaining lands, with all the rigour of military execution against their persons and property. Harassed by this long series of aggressions, and the victims of successive changes in the opinions and conduct of the local authorities, the immediate motives of their invasion in December, 1834, would seem not very difficult to be discovered."

And his Lordship comes to the conclusion that "they had a perfect right to hazard the experiment, however hopeless, of extorting by force that redress which they could not expect otherwise to obtain."

Lord Glenelg reproves the Governor for terming the Caffres, in his proclamation, "irreclaimable savages," and proceeds to show that this character does not fairly apply to them. He condemns in the strongest terms the language of the Wesleyan missionaries, and contrasts them with the missionaries of the London and Glasgow Societies, and enters minutely into the case of Hintza:—

"He was slain," says his Lordship, "when he had no longer the means of resistance; but covered with wounds, and vainly attempting to conceal his person in the water, into which he had plunged as a refuge from his pursuers. Why the last wound was inflicted, and why this unhappy man, regarded with an attachment almost idolatrous by his people, was not seized by the numerous armed men who had reached his place of concealment, has never yet been explained. It is stated to me on evidence which it is impossible to receive without serious attention, that Hintza repeatedly cried for mercy; that the Hottentots present granted the boon, and abstained from killing him; that this office was then undertaken by Mr. Southey; and that then the dead body of the fallen chief was basely and inhumanly mutilated. I express no opinion on this subject, but adverse to it because the honour of the British name demands that the case should undergo a full investigation, which it is my purpose to institute."

Lord Glenelg informs Sir Benjamin that "the claim of sovereignty over the new province, bounded by the Keishkamma and the Kye, must be renounced. It rests upon a conquest resulting from a war in which, as far as I am at present enabled to judge, the original justice is on the side of the conquered, not of the victorious party." He "cannot admit that the British sovereignty over the country between the Fish River and the Keishkamma rests on any solid foundation of international law or justice; yet the relinquishment of that dominion is surrounded by difficulties so many and inextricable as entirely to forbid such a surrender." His Lordship says, that the proposed new frontier is less accessible from the interior, it embraces a larger area, and demands a longer line of defences, and the new line of defences would bring us into contact with new tribes of uncivilised men. "The surest of all defences, or rather the only sure defence, is to be found in a wise system of border policy. Without this the strongest frontier that nature or art can supply is miserably weak, and with it the Keishkamma is as secure as the Kye." He urges the diffusion among the frontier tribes of the blessings of education and Christian knowledge. "Colonies which it is attempted to maintain in the neighbourhood of savage tribes on any other principles must either be destroyed by that vicinity, or be upheld at a cost utterly disproportionate to their real value." His Lordship alludes to the enormous expense of the operations, and observes that the loss of money would be the least of the causes of the regret at the continuation of those hostilities." It is a melancholy and humiliating, but an indisputable truth, that the contiguity of the subjects of the nations of Christendom with uncivilised tribes has invariably produced the wretchedness and decay, and not seldom the utter extermination, of the weaker party.

THE FADED FLOWER.

Unnatural he, who pluck'd thee from thy stalk,
Poor faded flow'ret; on his careless way;
Inhaled awhile thy odours on his walk,
Then onward pass'd, and left thee to decay.
Ah! melancholy emblem! had I seen
Thy modest beauties dew'd with evening's gem,
I had not rudely cropp'd thy parent stem.
But left thee, blushing, 'mid the enliven'd green.
And now I bend me o'er thy wither'd bloom,
And drop the tear—as Fancy, at my side,
Deep-sighing, points the fair frail Abra's tomb—
"Like thine, sad flower, was that poor wanderer's pride!
Oh! lost to love and truth, whose selfish joy Tasted her vernal sweets, but tasted to destroy."

Literary Notices.

Berkeley Castle, or Historical Romance. By the Hon. Grantley F. Berkeley, M.P. 3 vols. R. Bentley.

This is as it ought to be. The noble race of Berkeley have for centuries held possession of one of the finest baronial residences of England; a place around which crowd more grand and memorable associations than attach to any other of the time-honoured seats of our old patricians. Nothing can be better than that the traditions of so renowned a demain should be illustrated by a descendant of that family, which, in former times, maintained their right to the possession of their broad lands at the point of the sword, against the unjust pretensions of some of the proudest of the then aristocracy. The present romance consists of the history of one Master Herbert Reardon, a retainer of Sir Maurice Berkeley, brother of the Earl of that name, in the reign of Henry the Sixth. Throughout the whole story there is an air of chivalrous grandeur, relieved by woodland sketches and humourous incidents, which transport the reader into the very heart of the olden time. Maurice himself is a spirited and noble personation, and the character of the Earl forms a magnificent figure in the back-ground of the picture. The story is admirably contrived, especially as regards the fate of the heroine, Isabel, about whom hangs a mystery which the most sagacious reader cannot solve until he arrives at the catastrophe. This is the very triumph of "story-telling," and we congratulate Mr. Grantley Berkeley on the manner wherein he has achieved it. The following scene will afford a specimen of the animated style of the story: it is descriptive of a stag-hunt, and of the danger which accrued therefrom to the heroine of the story. In this passage Sir Maurice then first introduced) makes a gallant and picturesque ppearance.

" We both stopped in admiration of the scene, Isabel re-arding the immediate view, and the extreme beauty which offered, while my mind ran back for hundreds of years to l the stories that had ever been told me of that place, hich I now beheld for the first time. The tales of its andaur, the sieges it had sustained, the festive scenes hich had taken place within its walls, when kings were s bidden guests; its ghost stories, and the history of the itch, in the time of Edward the Confessor; with the ore recent imprisonment and death of Edward the Second, hen the shrieks of the agonized king were heard even by e inhabitants of the town—all rushed upon my recollec-on, coupled with the knightly prowess of the succeeding nds who had inherited it in one unbroken male line since e Conquest, and overwhelmed my brain with a wilder-ss of ideas, in which the present and the future held but tle share. At length my mind was recalled to more im-ediate considerations, by the sweet voice of my cousin, ying she thought she heard the distant shouts of men. I tooped for a moment, but not hearing anything worthy of tice, again abandoned myself to the retrospection awak-ed by the scene; when, calling Isabel to my side, who as at that moment gazing on the Severn, pointing to the tle, I cried—' There—there, dear girl, why should I not e day take service with the owners of those baronial halls; d why should I not emulate them in feats of arms, which ace the successful soldier so far above the common herd of ankind; and why not succeed in bringing the eyes of the est and good upon me, by some sudden act that should estall the plodding course of time? What withholds me m offering my service now? Hitherto I have only held thy lfroy's rein when the roughness of the road hath caused her stumble, or climbed some tree to take and tame a bird to ease thee; there lies a nobler game, and have not I the ans to chase it—what should keep me back?' Isabel, who, do her justice, always liked to be the first object in my estima-e, resorted to the method she always employed when she shed to check what she was pleased to term my romantic lly, and playfully mimicking my words—' What should ep thee back? Why, dear Herbert, as yet you are not of age to take a part in the stirring scenes which haunt your magination: you are but a boy.' . . At the moment st these words had stung me to the quick, and I was me-itating a sharp rejoinder, the sudden note of a horn came ull upon my ear, accompanied by the shouts of men in our mmediate vicinity. All at once a rushing, bursting sound, nof animals pursuing and pursued, came up from the haw-horn brake beneath us; and, in one moment, crashing rough the thicket, and breaking into view—charging for e very spot on which we stood, with a great gaze-hound either side, in the act of catching at his head, came a ble stag, his eyes glaring with fury and distress, his aggy throat yet reeking from the soil he had taken on his y, and his branching antlers lowered in a vain attempt to ound the dogs, who kept too closely in beneath his shoul-rs for that effort to avail him. . . Isabel's mare be-me petrified with fear, when, without an effort to move m the place where she stood, the animal received the w antlers of the deer full in her flank, and was borne by force of the blow sidelong to the ground, at the very tant that the dogs seized and pulled down their game. abel, her horse, deer and all, rolled on the earth together. . . A glance served me to see that my cousin was as untouched by the horns of the stag, but still he strug-d with his assailants in fearful proximity, and his des-rate efforts to regain his freedom, from the wounded state the dogs, did not seem unlikely to be attended with suc-s, when the consequences might be fatal, as Isabel, stead of lying still, was also struggling to rise—indeed, e was forced to do so to avoid the heels of her frantic rse. Under these circumstances I saw but my cousin; nger to myself never once entered my head; drawing a fe, therefore, which chanced to be about me, I rushed among the furious animals, and stabbed the deer several es in the throat, as to produce a copious flow of blood. this moment all further danger was put an end to by the werful grasp of a man, who placing his foot upon one of e antlers of the deer with sufficient force to drive it into e earth, drew forth a couteau de chasse, and at a blow prived him of existence. I arose from among them, eathless and covered with blood, for the force with which had seized the deer had thrown me down, and at the me time I saw Isabel disentangled, lifted up from her fallen eed, and supported in the arms of the tall and handsome an who had so opportunely arrived to her assistance. he time which it took me to catch my breath again afforded so an opportunity to mark the stranger's appearance. bout thirty years of age, he was dressed either for the nase or war, though unencumbered with the heavier parts f his armour. His head was uncovered, either in the exer-on necessary to the death of the deer, or by the boughs of he trees through which he must have forced his way to ain the spot where we stood, and a profusion of dark rown hair fell in clustering curls upon his shoulders; while a short thick moustache set closely on his upper lip, nod set off his very handsome and expressive features, flushed with recent exertion, and appearing to the best advantage. . . Ere I could join in the anxious inquiries he was making as to my cousin, we were surrounded by many other men, who seemed to be retainers, save one among them, whose stately appearance, added to the profound respect with which he was treated by the rest, immediately rivetted my attention. He was mounted on a powerful white horse, and bore on his hand a large hooded falcon; his figure tall and athletic; keen grey eyes, with eye-brows that almost met, and a silvery tinge on his otherwise coal black hair, which, with the impression made by time upon his cheek, bespoke him past the age of forty. His high and haughty brow, though certainly handsome, seemed with almost an unpleasant expression of severe domination—induced, perhaps, from the constant habit of feudal command, rather than from any peculiarity of feature given him by nature. . . Too much abashed by his presence to take any immediate share in the conversation that ensued, I stood looking on, and patting the head of one of the great deer-hounds, whom I heard them call Harold, and who seemed to adopt me as a comrade that had shared in the recent exploit, by occasionally licking the blood from my hands and dress. After some explanation had passed between Isabel and him who had slain the deer, the latter turned and accosted me thus—' Ho, boy, and who art thou? By my faith, a right good lad, whose strength and weapon, had they been equal to his heart, would have rendered my arrival somewhat too late!' . . Flattered and encouraged by being thus addressed, I told him my name, and pointing to Isabel, who, resting on the root of the oak under which this scene had happened, leant against its knotted trunk, still languid from the terror she had undergone, and looking the most lovely of all creation, I said that she was my cousin. . . ' A fairer one thou couldst not have; and thou hadst been worse than vile hadst thou not made in to her rescue. Say, boy, wilt thou be my page?' . . At this moment the more august personage on the white horse rode closely up, when, bending to his saddle-bow, and raising his hand gracefully in salutation of Isabel, he broke in with—' Ney, Maurice, thou hadst better keep that question for another time; I heard his name, and I know his parents, and thou wouldst show more reason in framing some method for forwarding his sister, as I conclude she is, to her own home. The horse she came on (looking round on poor Bessy, who lay in the agonies of death) scarce will rise again, and my castle may perhaps be deemed inconvenient, as distant still farther from her family; to whom, nevertheless, if she will but tarry here, a litter shall be sent with all due speed to convey her home; or should she feel herself too unwell to proceed so far, it shall render her in honoured safety to my roof, where she will be blithly received, until such time as her parents can be apprised of her situation. Say, lady, wilt thou accept such entertainment and care as the Lord of Berkeley may offer?'"

Tales of a Rambler. Smith, Elder, and Co.

One author classifies ramblers as fashionable, boring, sentimental, and inquisitive, assuming to himself the character of the latter, which he considers as one who trudgeth a-foot when other men ride, taketh his time leisurely, passeth over nothing he thinks worthy of observation, and scrupleth not to ask for information from the cow-boy to the lord of the manor. The incidents of his ramblings are narrated in a series of tales, which, with illustrations, constitute a very pleasing volume.

Elements of Conversation. By Theodore Hook.—Punning.—Puns may be divided into different classes: they may be made in different ways, introduced by passing circumstances, or by reference to by-gone events; they may be thrown in anecdotically, or conundrum-wise. It is to be observed that feeling, or pity, or commiseration, or grief, are not to stand in the way of a pun—that personal defects are to be made available, and that sense, so as the sound answers, has nothing to do with the business. . . If a man is pathetically describing the funeral of his mother or sister, or wife, it is quite allowable to call it a " black-burying party," or to talk of a " fit of coffin;" a weeping relative, struggling to conceal his grief, may be likened to a commander of "private tears;" throw in a joke about the phrase of " funerals performed," and a re-hearsal; and wind up with the anagram real-fun, funeral. I give this instance first, in order to explain that nothing, however solemn the subject, is to stand in the way of a pun. It is allowable, when you have run a subject dry in English, to hitch in a bit of any other language which may sound to your liking. For instance, on a fishing party. You say fishing is out of your line; yet if you did not keep a float, you would deserve a rod; and if any body affects to find fault with your joke, exclaim—" Oh, vous bête!" There you have line, rod, float, and bait, ready to your hand. Call two noodles from the city in a punt, endeavouring to catch small fry, " East Angles;" or, if you please, observe that " the punters are losing the fish," " catching nothing but a cold," or that " the fish are too deep for them." Call the Thames a "tidy" river, but say you prefer the Isis in hot weather. . . . Personal deformities or constitutional calamities are always to be laid hold of. If anybody tells you that a dear friend has lost his sight, observe that it will make him more hospitable than ever, since now he would be glad to see anybody. If a clergyman breaks his leg, remark that he is no longer a clergyman, but a lame man. If a person is seized with apoplexy, affect to disbelieve it, although you know it to be true, in order to say—and then, to carry the joke one step farther, add, " that it is not a fit subject for a jest." A man falling into a tan-pit you may call " sinking in the sublime;" a climbing boy suffocated in a chimney meets with a sootable death; and a pretty girl having caught the small-pox is to be much pitted. On the subject of the ear and its defects, talk first of something in which a cow sticks, and end by telling the story of the man who, having taken great pains to explain something to his companion, at last got into a rage at his apparent stupidity, and exclaimed, " Why, my dear Sir, don't you comprehend? the thing is as plain as A, B, C." " I dare say it is," said the other, " but I am D, E, F." . . It may be as well to give the beginner something of a notion of the use he may make of the most ordinary words for the purposes of quibblelam. For instance, in the way of observation:—The loss of a hat is always felt;—if you don't like sugar, you may lump it; a glazier is a pane-taking man; candles are burnt because wick-ed things always come to light; a lady who takes you home from a party is kind in her carriage, and you say " nunc est ridendum" when you step into it; if it happen to be a chariot, she is a charitable person; bird's-nests and King-killing are synonymous, because they are high trees on; a Bill for building a bridge should be sanctioned by the Court of Arches as well as the House of Piers; when a man is dull, he goes to the sea-side to Brighton; a cockney lover, when sentimental, should live in Heigh Ho-bufn; the greatest fibber is the nearest to re-lie upon; a dean expecting a bishopric looks for lawn; a suicide kills pigs, and not himself; a butcher is a gross man, but a fig-seller is a grocer; Joshua never had a father or mother, because he was the son of Nun; your grandmother and great-grandmother were your aunt's sisters; a leg of mutton is better than Heaven, because nothing is better than Heaven, and a leg of mutton is better than nothing. . . Races are matters of course. An ass never can be a horse, although he may be a mayor; the Venerable Bede was the mother of Pearl; a baker makes bread when he kneads it; a doctor cannot be a doctor all at once, because he comes to it by degrees; a man hanged at Newgate has taken a drop too much; the bridle day is that on which a man leads a woman to the halter; never mind the aspirate, punning's all fair, as the archbishop said in the dream. . . Puns interrogatory are at times serviceable. You meet a man carrying a hare: ask him if it is his own hare or a wig?—there you stump him. Why is Parliament-street like a compendium? Because it goes to a bridge.—Why is a man murdering his mother in a garret a worthy person? Because he is above committing a crime. Instances of this kind are innumerable; and if you want to render your question particularly pointed, you are, after asking it once or twice, to say, " D'ye give it up?"—then favour your friends with the solution. . . Pons scientific are effective whenever a scientific man or men are in company, because, in the first place, they hate puns, especially those which are capable of being twisted into jokes which have no possible relation to the science of which the words to be joked upon are terms; and because, in the next place, dear laughing girls, who are wise enough not to be sages, will love you for disturbing the self-satisfaction of the philosophers, and raising a laugh or titter at their expense. . . Where there are three or four geologists of the party, if they talk of their scientific tours made to collect specimens, call the old ones " ninny hammers," and the young ones " chips of the old block;" and then inform them that claret is the best specimen of quartz in the world. If you fall in with a botanist who is holding forth, talk of the quarrels of flowers as a sequel to the loves of the plants, and say they decide their differences with pistils. In short, sacrifice everything to the pursuit of punning, and, in the course of time, you will acquire such a reputation for waggery, that the whole company will burst into an immoderate fit of laughing if you only ask the servants for bread, or say " No" to the offer of a cutlet.—New Monthly Magazine.

After Admiral De Winter had been landed in England, Mr. Pitt or Lord Melville gave a dinner to the conqueror and the conquered, and at which most of the Cabinet Ministers were present. It is well known how hardly the victory was contested, for the Dutch had well sustained the reputation of the valour which distinguished them in the days of Van Tromp and De Ruyter. It was indeed rendered more easy to the English—if what was most difficult can be deemed to be rendered easy—by the dastardly flight of the Dutch Admiral Story, and four ship-of-the-line. In discussing the particulars of the action, Admiral De Winter insisted strongly upon this defection, and appealed to Admiral Duncan to say whether, if those vessels had [illegible] with the same hardihood that the rest of this fleet had exhibited, the victory would not, in all probability, have been on his side? To which the veteran replied by filling his glass, and saying, "Admiral De Winter, I am exceedingly happy to drink your health in this good company." A neat evasion of the question, and a most complimentary manner of bringing to the Admiral's recollection that he was a prisoner in England, without any assertion of superiority.

A Sailor's Will.—"To my old friend and messmate, Capstan, I leave all my gin tubs, rum kegs, beer jugs, glasses, and all them other public-house rigging and tackle. To Tim Hallyard, my best blue jacket and trowsers, provided they ar'n't worn out afore I die. To Bill Blake, my silver watch with the new blue hands, together with my best tobacco box, and the remaining cargo of pipes. And as to what money may happen to be on board the bank when I slips my cable, why that may be spent in grog after all my funeral expenses are paid. My funeral to be attended by such of my messmates as can get leave to attend (provided they don't get too much grog aboard afore the service begins); and as for an epitaph at top of my grave, why, just write "'Here lies Jack Helm—Stormy Jack—becalmed at last.'" —United Service Journal.

New York, July 9.—Among the passengers who sailed yesterday in the packet-ship, were Lord Altamont and his two brothers, all lads of 16 years and under, sons of the Marquis of Sligo. These youths arrived in this city about three months since, for the purpose of travelling among us for a few weeks, previous to their return to Europe. They had letters to an English gentleman, long resident at New York, and they sought advice as to the direction they should take, their mode of travelling, &c., all which was given in due form. "And now, my Lord Altamont," added the gentleman, "there is no necessity of your being called 'my Lord' everywhere on your journey. You can get along just as well without it—just as well if you call yourselves by your own family name of Mr. Brown. If you do not exact anything extraordinary, you will everywhere be treated kindly, and have all you want. Only pay attention to two or three things, and you will get through the country remarkably well." "Well, Sir, what are these two or three things?" inquired their Lordships. "Why, my Lord," replied the gentleman, "in the first place, in the general rush which you will see at the public ordineries, do not strive for the head of the tables, but quietly take the seats nearest the door; whenever you address the landlord of a country tavern, address him as 'General.' Every elderly gentleman with whom you hold a conversation should be addressed as 'Judge' or 'Squire;' and be very careful in addressing every coachman as 'Colonel!' Attend to these things, my Lord, and you may depend upon it you will get along smoothly enough." The hint was adopted, at least in part. The young noblemen usually travelled under the cognomen of Messrs. Brown, and were everywhere treated with the utmost attention.

A story which Sheridan was fond of telling was, that Lord John Townshend having won a good deal of money at Brookes's, he (Sheridan), who never played himself, and General Fitzpatrick, agreed to rob him on his way home. Upon stopping Lord John's chair for that purpose, the Irish chairmen said, "Sure, we know your honour mighty well, Mr. Sheridan, and have a great regard for your honour, but we cannot allow you to rob my Lord while he is in our custody." "Now," Sheridan used to remark, "I am at a loss to say which I was most flattered by, their affection for my person, or their opinion of my honesty."

THE CAFFRE WAR.

My dear ——, It is long since I have had this pleasure, and you probably thought that I was excused communicating with you by being mounted on a bullock in the wilds of central South Africa, or perhaps reposing under the sands of this mysterious land; but I am still, you see, in these civilised regions of the Cape, but girding up my loins to leave them soon.

I think I wrote you before of the extent of the invasion, which swept clean Albany, Somerset, and Uitenhage Districts of the Eastern Province; 500 houses were burnt, and 100,000 head of cattle, 1500 horses, and innumerable flocks of sheep carried off, besides every male murdered who could be found by those whom the saints here call the "poor Caffers." These pseudo-philanthropists represented that soldiers are not required for the defence of the frontier—that plenty of Missionaries and Infant Schools are the best defences against the South African barbarians (savages, they say, they are not). So the eastern frontier, from the Winterberg to the sea, was left to the care of 200 Hottentot Riflemen, whilst the 75th regiment (400 bayonets) was mostly at Grahamstown, and no other troops nearer than the Cape, 700 miles off. The war lasted nine months, from January to September 1835. Hintza, the great mover of the invasion, was shot, after due warning of the consequences if he attempted his escape: he braved this and suffered. The subordinate chiefs held out, encouraged to do so by the unnatural party of the London Mission, &c. in the colony: at last they were hemmed in quite at our mercy, and then they sued for peace, which was immediately granted. They then of themselves said, "We wish to become British subjects, we cannot then be eaten up by our native neighbours." Accordingly, the province of Queen Adelaide, 7000 square miles, was provisionally, till his Majesty's pleasure is known, added to this colony: it is the fine country between the Kye and Keiskamma Rivers (see Arrowsmith's excellent Map of the Cape Colony of 1834), and contains 80,000 Caffer inhabitants. The Fingo nation, liberated from Caffer bondage during the war, is "located" on the Clusie and Chumie Rivers, and amounts to 20,000; so that 100,000 souls have been added to the population of this colony (which, in the end of 1834, was 140,000) by our admirable governor, Sir Benjamin D'Urban, and by the operations of a war most assuredly not of our seeking. During our hard work in the fastnesses of Caffer-land, the enemy acknowledged to have had 4000 killed: we, in Red Jackets, Hottentots, Burghers, and Fingoes, lost about 600 men. We had no reinforcements of men or money from England, and the ruined colonists have got no compensation.

I go, in the first instance, to Natal, where there is a British possession, without a head, of 14,000 square miles, North, South, and West of the port, with 10,000 black and 100 white inhabitants, between the rivers Tugal and Umaimcoolo, and the third range of Mountains, Backqueen country.

We are now waiting to hear of the acknowledgment of the fine country of Natal as a British Colony, and of some protection being given to the white settlers there. Natal, and some part of the territory, was purchased by the Dutch in 1689, from the Chief Ingesé, for 29,000 guilders in merchandize, and became a British possession on the fall of the Cape and its dependencies in 1806. Dingan, of the Zoolahs, surrenders all claim to the rest of the 14,000 square miles. C. +

COAST GUARD SERVICE.

Sir,—As great inconvenience results to officers of the Navy, serving in the Coast Guard, from the irregular manner of the payment of the compensation in lieu of half-pay, it being very frequently ten days over the time it is advertised, added to which, there is a charge of 1*s.* for receipt, which is quite contrary to the usages of the service when an half-pay,—I shall feel much obliged if Numa, or any other of your able Correspondents, will inform me why, in opposition to the rules laid down in the half-pay advertisement, we are compelled to give a stamp receipt, and be subject to such unnecessary delay. ### ON THE SYMONDIAN CONTROVERSY.

Sir,—As "publicity is the soul of justice" (and, it might have been said, of improvement too in the arts and sciences), I am glad that the press is now teeming with matter on ship-building. I am convinced in my own mind that Capt. Symonds deserves well of his country for his efforts in ship-building, and I have no fear that ultimately his measures will be universally appreciated. Too much warmth and extreme feeling on the subject is to be deprecated, as that never does any good; only let the question be discussed temperately, and the spread of useful knowledge will be the consequence. The new system has for its chief principle an increase of beam in ships, and there could be adduced a hundred instances and proofs of its value; nay, it is certain that Naval Architects have altered their proportions in accordance, more or less, with what may be called Capt. Symonds's discovery. His ships may be built of heavier timber than others (though they are constructed securely and well), but nothing can wrest from him the important merit of adding to the stability of vessels in the cheapest and most efficient manner by increase of breadth, which ship-builders, regarding old precedents, would not have dared to do. More has been done by Capt. Symonds for improvement in ship-building than has been effected by any twenty other ship-builders that could be named, although he may not yet have effected all that may be desired. Your observations in one of your late numbers on this subject, respecting the use of African timber, must be taken into account in this controversy, as heavy timber is extremely disadvantageous to the sailing qualities of a ship. The weight of timber in an eighty-gun ship, like the Vanguard, is about 1650 tons, of which nearly 1300 tons is generally of oak. In the Vanguard, African timber has been substituted for about half the oak commonly used; therefore 650 tons of the heavy timber are used to the prejudice of the new system. As the specific gravities of seasoned oak and African are as 44 to 58 (the weights of a cubic foot of each being respectively 44 lbs. and 58 lbs.), the alteration will cause an addition of weight to the Vanguard of 207 tons, which is a serious detriment to her sailing qualities, more particularly in light winds. I have great faith, however, in her powers of sailing, if she be well trimmed and masted up to her stability, which the new ships have not been, at least in an equal degree, to the French ships of war.

As a specimen of the opposition offered to Capt. monds, allow me to allude to the five curious le inserted in The Hampshire Telegraph. What a great of good argument was thereby thrown away; and, by-by, a great deal of good indignation too! How the w fumed, and punned, and thundered, and all about nothi for the Vanguard has not, what may be called, heggm the least!!! Certainly the writer could never have h of the joke ascribed to King Charles the Second, of his s ing to the Royal Academicians to find out the reason a dead fish was heavier than a live one, and of his recal many learned dissertations on the subject, while it tu out afterwards there was no difference at all in the wei of the two states of the same fish! They should have certained the fact, or weighed the fish, for one fact is w a dozen moonshine reasonings. To talk of the Vangu being hogged; why, in twenty years her extremities will drop six inches! Alas! what will not misguided pas and envy do! How greatly will it pervert our decisions

MIDSHIPMEN'S PENSIONS.

Sir,—It has always appeared to me a case of extr hardship, that officers who received wounds or hurts du their servitude in the Navy as Midshipmen, and w granted, after due examination, pensions (however sm from the chest at Greenwich, should have those pensi taken from them on obtaining their commissions as Lieu

I am perfectly aware that no commissioned officer receive a pension but by order of the King in council, which is paid from money voted annually by Parliam for the Naval service; but surely there could be no great difficulty in continuing those small stipends on that food, nor would it, I am convinced, be objected to a generous nation; perhaps the largest pension would exceed 10*l.* or 12*l.* per year, and it may be considered men in easy circumstances so very trifling a sum, as to scarcely worth contending for; but not so—for, believe there are officers who have performed the most brill services now labouring under pecuniary difficulties, large families, to whom such an annual receipt would af gient relief.

Should you think proper to insert this in your valu paper it might draw the attention of Sir E. Codringto some other Member of Parliament, who, like him, ha interest of the Navy at heart. N

NAVAL CHARITABLE SOCIETY.

Sir,—It is with mingled feelings of pleasure and of I read in your widely circulated Gazette the exposé of uncalled-for expenses of the Royal Naval Charitable ciety, by your correspondent Nauticus, in whose opinio with many other brother officers residing in this influe Naval port, fully concur.

My pleasurable feelings were excited in viewing elaborate manner in which Nauticus has introduced subject, for which all the non-residents of London ca but feel grateful; my painful feelings arose at observing expenditure of our funds. The society is too feebly s ported, I regret to say, to admit of the extravagance ably proved by Nauticus. It was the general opinion that our annual office expenses did not exceed from 1 to 120*l.* With great anxiety I looked forward for a account of the meeting of the 11th instant, and h been much gratified, on the receipt of your valuable p this morning, to notice that Nauticus has met with an supporter in Philanthropist, who has detailed the resul that meeting, and his opinions thereon, with much per cuity. I regret, though not surprised at, the opposi which Nauticus met with; a party feeling no do reigned there, a mixture of, to use political language, formers and Tories.

I trust, and have no fear of the result, that victory ultimately crown the exertions of the Reformers, more ticularly with such able supporters as Philanthropist the old member alluded to by him.

I am induced to request, through the medium of y Journal, that you will, with your accustomed attention, publicity to this, in returning my warmest thanks to unknown friends and brother members, who supported cause of consistent economy; and I feel convinced Government will not hesitate in complying with the praye proposed our petition, to grant us the use of an offic some public building. The rooms at present occupied the exhibition of the Royal Academy will be soon vac by their removal to the National Gallery.

Previous to our present Secretary's retirement fro clerkship in Somerset House, we were not subjected office rent, which now falls heavy upon the much-decre state of our funds, it therefore more decidedly demands strenuous exertions in the cause of retrenchment; a decr of 100*l.* annually, as alluded to by Philanthropist, i object of vital importance to us. I fully concur in the that our brother officers, that have not joined our Ins tion, will see the necessity of aiding us in the support o praiseworthy an object. A Thirty Years' Subscri

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 6, 1836.

In our last week's paper we gave an extract from a letter that had appeared in the Greenwich Gazette, on the subject of the Royal Naval School, and we now proceed to make those remarks which we promised on that occasion.

A concise account of the Institution of the Royal Naval School may prove interesting to such of our readers as are not acquainted with its history.

In the beginning of the year 1831, Commander W. H. Dickson (knowing that the great majority of the deserving men, who had fought the battles of their country, had but a very small pittance upon which to bring up a family in a style suitable to their rank as officers and gentlemen) first started the idea of establishing a School for the sons of Naval and Marine Officers, on so moderate a scale of expense as to enable the less affluent of them to send their children there. And he further proposed to provide for the board and education of a certain number of the sons of such officers in necessitous circumstances gratuitously. This benevolent project could only be carried into effect by the pecuniary aid of the more wealthy members of the service, assisted by such patriotic individuals out of the service who might thus show their estimate of the debt of gratitude due to the Navy for the proud position in which it had mainly contributed to place the country. Meetings were accordingly called, the first of which was held on the 29th of April, 1831, and presided over by the late Sir J. Yorke, who was ever ready to do his utmost for the benefit of the Navy. Resolutions were passed, fixing the whole expense for the board and education of such pupils as paid at 25*l.* per annum, making it necessary that a parent should subscribe annually a day's half-pay to render his sons eligible to be named to the school, and giving the right of nomination to the payer of 10*l.* for one pupil, or the same right for two lives to holders of 25*l.* debentures, which last mode of acquiring the privilege of nominating a pupil gives each life in succession the right of continually having a pupil in the school. The King most graciously condescended to become its Patron, the Dukes of Cumberland, Sussex, Cambridge, and Gloucester, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Chancellor, and several other distinguished individuals, accepted the office of Vice-Patrons, and a Council of Administration was elected.

The late Dr. Bell endowed the Institution with the munificent sum of 10,000*l.* 3 per cent. Stock; His Majesty subscribed 100*l.* a-year; Lord Prudhoe gave 500*l.*; Lord Yarborough 300*l.*; Lord Manvers 200*l.*, and many noblemen and gentlemen subscribed from 100*l.* to 1*l.*, by which means the Council were enabled, in March 1832, to open a temporary establishment at Alfred House, Camberwell, their funds not being considered sufficient for the erection of a suitable building, and at the same time maintaining gratuitously the number of orphans and other children which the general meeting had decided on supporting at the school. Alfred House was fitted for the reception of 200 pupils. The experiment has most fully realised the speculations of its founders. The sufficiency and quality of the diet is not equalled by any similar establishment, the health of the children is superintended by a medical man attached to the Institution, and the excellency of the education bestowed is not surpassed by any school in the kingdom. This last assertion can be proved by reference to the Examiners' reports on the dismissal of the pupils for their holidays on the 14th of June last, and which report has been published by the Council, and may be obtained at the School Office in Jermyn-street, by all who take an interest in it. In short, the Naval Officer, however humble his means, has now the prospect of starting his child in the world with a good sound education, which in most instances affords a better prospect of success and happiness in life than the possession of fortune.

Can we doubt that such an Institution must recommend itself to the public, or that its permanent establishment shall be checked for want of funds to build its School-house with? Such cannot be the case in this wealthy and essentially maritime country. These comments bring us to the present state of the School and the object of its Managers.

The term of lease with the proprietor of Alfred House expires at Christmas 1837. To avoid the necessity of renewing it (the rent being 300*l.* a-year, independent of the constant demand for repairing and beautifying another person's property,) to enable them to extend the accommodation to 300 pupils, and to fix the School in a more conspicuous and desirable locality than Camberwell, the Council, with the consent of the last general meeting, resolved on building. Greenwich Park suggested itself to them as comprehending more advantages for such a school than any other spot in the kingdom. His Majesty was appealed to, and, with that gracious sympathy which he so invariably exhibits in every thing connected with the interests of "England's right arm of defence," at once bestowed a small portion of the Great Wilderness in Greenwich Park for the purpose of erecting the Naval School on. It was stipulated by the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, that a wall of a proper height, without any openings, should inclose the building from the Park, and that no entrance into the Park should be allowed for any purpose, excepting by the usual gates of admission. The privileges of the public would in no way have been infringed upon, they having been always excluded from the Wilderness. The beauty of the Park could not have suffered from the erection of a handsome building on a site hitherto tenanted by rabbits, and to build which not a dozen timber trees would have required to be cut down. And surely the privacy of Blackheath could not have been much interfered with by the erection of a fifty-fourth school, there being already fifty-three on the heath and in its immediate neighbourhood. The advantages to the neighbourhood, from such an establishment, have been set forth in this letter which we gave from the Greenwich Gazette in our last paper.

Surely under these circumstances we should have thought that there was no Englishman who would not have admired the benevolence and judgment of His Majesty in deciding on such a site for such a building, and therefore our disappointment, nay indignation, has been the greater to find that our Sailor King's gracious intentions have been opposed (we cannot bring ourselves to believe successfully, so much sanctity do we attach to the Royal Word when once given,) absolutely by an individual whose name encumbers the Navy List, and who, with some few other selfish parties, have, by unfounded and most exaggerated statements to an illustrious person, who has a life-interest in a residence in the Park, induced that illustrious person to use her influence with His Majesty for his revocation of the Royal grant. The known amiability of the illustrious individual alluded to gives us a moral conviction that had the Council fortunately anticipated the selfish enemy, and submitted the objects of the Institution to the noble individual, instead of opposition they would have had the warmest advocacy of one who appreciates fully what is due to the Navy of Great Britain.

In conclusion we beg to say, that even should so improbable a thing occur, as that His Majesty's gracious intentions towards this National object should be successfully opposed, the council have resolved on building in the neighbourhood of Blackheath; and that they are supported by the kindest feelings in favour of their object on the part of His Majesty's Commissioners of Woods and Forests. Therefore, we do most earnestly call upon the Navy and public to contribute their mite by subscribing to the fund, which has been devoted to the building of the School, as the means of extending the charitable objects of the Institution must be circumscribed in proportion to the sum drawn from its existing capital, for the purpose of erecting the School.

There is one feature in this most admirable school which we had nearly neglected to notice, but which, in our opinion, ought to strongly recommend it to the patronage of the high-minded and benevolent, it is, that so sacredly do the Council preserve the secret of the names of those pupils who are on the gratuitous and graduated lists that the head master himself is not in possession of it; and, unless their relatives inform them, the very boys so maintained would have no means of knowing that the full sum was not paid for their board and education. This secrecy of course prevents any distinction being made by the officers of the establishment between any of the pupils, and saves the poorer boys from the scoffs and jeers of their thoughtless companions.

We have been given to understand that in particularising certain corps for specific stations, we have been exceeding "the length of our tether;" but we cannot for a moment credit a report, that an indisposition to effect an early relief of the regiments abroad, since 1819, has been excited. However, in justification we will state, that we wrote what all the Army felt to be true; that we have no wish to appear distrustful of Lord Hill, or of his Staff at the Horse Guards; and that we merely urged, in proof of our assertions, facts and figures. In the late evidence of the Quarter-master-General, Sir W. Gordon, the state of the Army is briefly and candidly given, and in justification of all we have advanced, we shall quote the following question and answer, and merely observe, that we cannot understand why regiments ought to be relieved in ten years from every foreign station, while it is acknowledged that no relief from India takes places under eighteen years. This system, we feel assured, will not continue long, and no persons, we are satisfied, know and feel its injustice more than the authorities at the Horse Guards. It has arisen out of a small Army serving in large Colonial possessions.

Question.—"You are enabled, from documents in your department, to state to the Commissioners the manner in which the Army is distributed in quarters."

Answer.—"I am; and the best mode for me to proceed in giving this information will be, perhaps, in the following manner:—There are three regiments of household cavalry, whose ordinary duties are principally confined to their attendance on the King's person, and who consequently take no Colonial duty whatever. There are twenty-three regiments of Cavalry, four of which are employed in India, and, as those regiments in India cannot be relieved under a period of from fifteen to twenty years, more or less, it is evident that no prominent share of Colonial service falls upon the Cavalry. The division of Guards consists of seven battalions, and as their ordinary duties are also confined to the King's person and the palaces, they have never been called upon to perform any Colonial service whatever. There are 105 regiments of Infantry of the Line, of which 79 are abroad, and 26 at home; and of those 79 abroad, 20 are employed in India, and those employed in India have not been relieved under a period of from eighteen to twenty years; those employed in our other possessions ought to be relieved once in every ten years, but it has not been found practicable to carry that intention completely into effect, and, at this moment of speaking, there are regiments abroad whose service is from ten to eleven years, and the regiments who must relieve those, or part of those, in the course of this year, have not been at home four years, after a service abroad, all of them, of ten, and many of them above twenty years; and of those regiments that are first in turn to go, some of them, who have not been four years at home, have been employed in India above twenty years, and go where they may, they must serve ten years abroad. Consequently, there will be a period of thirty-four years of the service of those regiments, only four of which have been at home, and of those four years at home it happens, in some cases, that not one regiment sets its foot upon the English soil at all. For example, there is a regiment just disembarked from Ireland from the Mediterranean, which, in all probability, will be called on for foreign service again, without any chance of its being in England at all."

This honest and highly honourable evidence proves most fully all that we have stated. Shall, then, regiments which have four of their ten companies at home be relieved in ten years, while regiments in India, which have all their effectives in nine companies abroad, be relieved only after twenty years' service? We pause for a reply.

In our paper of the 16th July we published the General Order of the 4th of that month, in which the Commander-in-Chief of the British Auxiliary Legion states, that no power has been granted to him to decide on the question whether, by the conditions of the service, the officers, after having served in the Legion one year, have a right to retire with a gratuity after that period; and, with this General Order we contrasted the first and fourth clauses of the "conditions of service," signed "De Lacy Evans, Bryanstone Square, 22nd June, 1835," by which it appears to us that British subjects were to be admitted to the service of the Queen of Spain for either one or two years, as might be preferred by the individual engaging to enter Her Majesty's service.

General Evans has made his promised appeal to the Spanish Government; and as the matter must interest numerous individuals we have put ourselves to some inconvenience in devoting a considerable space to the publication of his further General Order on this subject.

The Spanish Government think proper to interpret the "Conditions" differently from the "Legion," and consider that no officer is at liberty to resign on the completion of a year's service, unless it had been duly specified at the time of entering the service. With this jesuitical argument, where would be the right to resign at the expiration of two years? At the time the "Conditions" were published they appeared to us as very absurd, but the subscribing party was bound to see them fulfilled to their very letter and spirit. We feel pain to find an officer of established gallantry, and all who recollect Lieutenant-Colonel Evans in the British service must give him that qualification, yielding to the paltry and despicable meanness of the Spanish authorities. The consequence of such a course is but too evident; the state of the Lancers and the 6th Infantry will be found in our columns; officers are throwing up their commissions; men are in almost open revolt; and the remnant of the British Legion, notwithstanding the "anticipations" in the "General Order" and elsewhere, will be sacrificed, unless there is an immediate change of system.

We are right glad to observe that the subject of the Light-Houses in the United Kingdom is at length taken up in earnest by His Majesty's Government. To those who have witnessed, as we have often done, the flagrant overcharges on our shipping for those beacons, but more particularly for the private lights, this prospect must afford great satisfaction, for never was any tax more unfairly collected than this has hitherto been in too many instances, and never one which, consequently, called more loudly for correction. Our pages have repeatedly shown forth those abuses, and the more we reflect upon their enormity the more do we congratulate the shipping interest on the measure, now in successful progress, which has been brought before Parliament by the Right Honourable the President of the Board of Trade.

Although, agreeing with Mr. Poulett Thomson in most of the propositions, which he has already stated, connected with the Light-house Bill, yet, we think with Mr. Warburton, that there ought to be some Naval officers forming part of the Trinity Board; and we yet would hope that this will be carried into effect, for surely it must appear to every one to be most ridiculous, that landsmen, such for example as the Right Honourable the Member for Tamworth (Sir Robart Peel), should constitute part of a Board, whose duties are wholly maritime.

To that part of Mr. Poulett Thomson's argument, in which he complains that our merchant Captains are very inferior to those of other nations, and which we fear is too true, we will only repeat that which we have said over and over again in our columns,—let those persons all undergo a proper examination, as is done in all other countries; in short, compel the Trinity Board to fulfil the enactments of their Charter in this respect, and then this evil will be speedily corrected.

It is, we believe, a very general complaint among Infantry Officers, that the muskets, issued by the Board of Ordnance, are not only of such a bad construction as to render correct ball practice with them almost impossible, but that the locks are so inferior as to cause them frequently to mis-fire, even under the most favourable circumstances. Although we are disposed to admit, that the arms now issued are defective, and that the introduction of an improved pattern will be most beneficial to the service; yet we beg leave to call the attention of officers to a practice, to which we think we may attribute many of the mis-fires which take place. We allude to the custom prevalent in many corps of polishing the locks and fronts of the hammers. We lately had occasion to compare a number of muskets with black locks, as they are issued by the Board, with others of which the locks had been brightened, and found that with the latter we had a larger proportion of failures than with the former.

We conceive, also, that the practice of dropping the butt of the muskets on the ground, in ordering arms, is injurious, (see page 8 of "The Manual and Platoon Exercises,") where for the third motion of the order "arms" it says, "drop the heel of it on the ground," &c. &c.; instead of this were the men directed to let the piece slip through the fingers, so as to avoid making any noise or shaking the musket, the difference of practice would not be observed by a spectator, and we should give our arms a better chance of continuing serviceable. It is highly probable, that the experiments now making with detonating muskets will lead to their general adoption; but the likelihood of such a desirable event should not prevent our striving to keep the imperfect weapon we are still obliged to use in as efficient a state as possible.

Our notice has been directed to several articles which have lately appeared under the signature of Mercator, in the Nautical Magazine, treating on Naval matters, but more particularly in elucidation of the much-canvassed subject of Ship-building. These essays are so unevenly written, and there is such a mass of absurdity mixed up with many hints which might be made available as regards a supervision of the construction of Merchant vessels, that it has puzzled us to discover whether the writer is at all times in jest or in earnest.—Assuredly, when he informs us, that the straight-sided Bristol built ship, with her breadth continued from the fore channels to abaft the mizen, is his beau ideal,—and we remember that such vessels are generally considered to be nearly the worst formed in the whole Mercantile Navy (being deep and narrow, and dull and heavy sailers with cargoes), we must take leave to question his judgment, particularly as he proposes, by the adoption of this continued breadth, to improve upon the Vernon and other vessels of Sir William Symonds's construction, having however never seen the ships themselves, or even the draught of such, and only taking his accounts of their performances, or rather non-performances, from the sinister statements put forth by the Surveyor's enemies.

We have already dilated on the immense benefit which would result from the possession of ships hat stability, which enables them to point their guns horizontally, under all circumstances of wind and weather, should a war ever bring them in contact with even the finest constructions of the old plan. Supposing the Barham and Vernon to be nearly qual in all other points, a glance at the reported eel, or inclination, of these ships during the trial ill at once convince every seaman of the immense nperiority of the latter in this respect; a superiity she would speedily display either in the deruction of her opponent, or by compelling her to duce her sail (and with it her velocity) to such extent as to enable her to choose and maintain fevourable position for engaging.

On the fourth day's trial, namely, 14th November, 35, the ships, under single reefed top-sails, top-allant-sails, and courses, going from eight and a alf to nine knots, the inclination was by signal as llows:—Vernon six and a half, Barham eight and a lf, Revenge ten and a half degrees. Now, as the rt end gun-carriage of a thirty-two pounder will t admit of its being depressed more than seven egrees at the utmost, it follows that neither the rham nor Revenge, if attacked from to leeward, uld have pointed their guns horizontally; and though the difference of one or two degrees heel ay not appear to be of much consequence, when is important circumstance is overlooked, it would found materially so in practice. Again, on reence to the reports, we find that the greatest heel e Vernon has ever inclined is six and a half, whereas e Barham's is set down at nine degrees, at which el her weather guns would be at two degrees eleation, and it is doubtful whether at this extremity er lee guns could all be laid horizontal.

A great deal has been said in ridicule of the Surveyr's plan of continuing the breadth of his ships for short distance above the load line, and designat g this projection bearing; but we are at a loss to now where he could have found a better term, or a ord more appropriate to what is effected thereby; is true it may not be a professional (that is a ck-yard) term, yet it is quite intelligible to anen, and its effects duly appreciated by them, sustaining the ship under her canvas, and renderg it impossible to press her beyond a certain int, that point being comprehended within the pacity of her weather guns for depressing as well lee guns for elevating; and so that this importt advantage is attained we shall not cavil about nes, certain that the round barrelled ships, rticularly those produced by the School, will el, and continue to heel the more they are essel, until the necessity arrives for reducing ir canvas, or probably letting fly their top-sail erts (as in the case of Actæon) when a capsize is prehended.

We think that if Mercator will visit one of the rveyor's ships, or inspect the draft of one (and ey are all on the same principle from the first-rate the brig), he will find reason to alter much of the inion in which he at present appears to indulge, e professes to be an admirer of the Surveyor's rinciple upon the whole, and undertakes to point t how it may be extended to advantage. We ink a more minute inquiry, as to the forms and apabilities of these vessels, will convince him that e mode he has pointed out, however suited for hips of burden, is not calculated for ships of war, nd that perfection is already very nearly attained.

Since the above was in print we have received the copy of a petition, purporting to have been forwarded to the Admiralty by Mr. Newman (the builder and owner of the "Paddy from Cork"), with a request that we would notice the contents. We shall endeavour to find space for that purpose shortly; but, in the meantime, we may observe, that we trust the necessity for our ship-builders "studying under French Naval Architects" has passed away, and this seems to be admitted by the aforesaid architects themselves, seeing that they have already adopted the principle under which our own Navy is regenerated.

We last week warned our readers to be prepared for the false reports, which a certain clique in the Duck-Yards impose upon our contemporaries, whenever the principle of Sir William Symonds's construction is concerned, and accordingly we find the most false and unwarrantable statements freely indulged in, and we doubt not these assertions will be taken up as texts to build some very elaborate reasoning upon the impossibility of the Vanguard's effecting that which she is probably now performing, namely, surpassing every ship of the squadron on points of sailing. Neither on the passage down Channel, from St. Helen's to Torbay, nor from Torbay to Plymouth, was any trial of sailing attempted, and so far from being obliged to make more sail to keep her station, the ships were all under the same sail, taking the same means usually employed in fleets to preserve their places in the line, and to those means (namely, shivering and sometimes backing the mizen-topsail) the Vanguard resorted more frequently than the others. The fact of bearing the Flag would, of course in this position, give the Belleraphon an advantage, as all the ships were dependent upon her movements; but we can assure our readers that nothing in the way of trial had been attempted, and the only thing satisfactorily ascertained, in the stiff breezes they encountered, which brought the squadron to treble reefed top-sails (at which time the Vanguard could have carried them single reefed,) was the stability of the several vessels. This was found so great in the Vanguard, as to induce her constructor to take out a portion of her ballast. Our readers may remember that some of our correspondents have asserted, that the ne plus ultra of ship-building would not be attained, until a vessel was produced, which would need no greater weight on board than that belonging to the victualling, stores, and armament. In this opinion we have always coincided, because it must be evident, that ballast per se can only be considered an incumbrance. In ships of a narrow construction it is requisite to carry a considerable quantity to counteract their great disposition to heel over, and eventually to capsize when the wind presses on the sails, was there not some counteracting weight; and the struggle, which is thus caused by the two actions, shows the principle of ship-building, which requires such means to sustain it, to be a bad one. On the contrary, where sufficient breadth is allowed, and the form of the body so disposed as to support the pressure on the sails, the quantity of ballast can be diminished accordingly; and it appears to us that, in large ships particularly, which carry a great weight of armament, it may be nearly, if not wholly, dispensed with,—and it is evident that to this desideretum the principle of Sir William Symonds very nearly approaches.

We are glad to find, that the Asia has been ordered to join the squadron, and that the ships will sail in company across the Bay. As she is one of the best, if not the best, sailers of our line-of-battl ships, we may form some judgment of the relativ merits of the vessels in the squadron, after a tri has been performed in company with that shi We had prepared some observations upon the re letive dimensions and weights of the vessels of th squadron, which want of space prevents our in serting this week, and probably before our nex publication we may be in possession of the resul of some trial, when the ships have been ordered t beat to windward or sail off the wind, without re spect to their stations in line of battle or sailing In the meantime we call attention to a letter upo this interesting subject, which will be found in ou correspondence columns.

Since writing the above we have received letter from the Fleet, dated at sea 2nd August. Ther had been two partial trials, in both of which th Vanguard had a decided advantage, weathering upon the other ships in an extraordinary manner under treble reefed top-sails and courses, with he ports open on both sides. This is no more tha we anticipated.

It has frequently been matter of remark and congra tulation to the United Service, that notwithstanding th habits which their profession might be supposed to en gender, and the early age at which most of its member enter upon their duties, that arts, and sciences, and ma nufactures are more indebted to their exertions than t any other class of men, and in this praise the officers o the East India Company's Service fully participate. I every department we shall find their active minds use fully employed, sometimes perfecting old inventions, bu more frequently introducing new, and availing themselve of their visits to all parts of the world to appropriat substances to useful purposes, which had been previousl disregarded, or their existence forgotten. We know o no more successful attempt to supersede the flock an other materials now in general use, by the introductio of a preferable one, than Captain Wildey has accomplishe as regards the Cocoa-nut Fibre, which he substitutes fo all the purposes to which straw, flock, tow, and othe highly objectionable articles are now appropriated. Eve horse-hair, which is admitted as the best of the material used for stuffing matrasses, &c., is very liable to injur in warm climates, to lose its elasticity, become matte and breed vermin; but flock and cotton, which are mor generally applied to this purpose, in addition to the abov objections, are extremely dangerous on account of thei retaining contagion; and are, moreover, heavy substances subject to decay from wet or moisture, and altogethe extremely ill calculated for the soldier, sailor, or mecha nic's bed, which requires to be shifted.

The fibrous coating of the cocoa-nut has long been ap plied by the natives of the East to stuffing matrasses, &c and, even in its rough unprepared state, is greatly pre ferred to other substances, being light, elastic, and fre grant, affording the idea in fact of a fresh heather bed It has been greatly improved, however, under a process o manufacture introduced by Captain Wildey, already adopted in many large establishments, patronised by th heads of several institutions, and bids fair to supersed the articles hitherto used for stuffing beds, chairs, &c fans, &c., having two great essentials in its favour. In ad dition to its other recommendations, namely, its cheap ness and durability. We invite our readers to examin the material, which may be seen at the Depot, 8, Agar street, Strand, and to those who wish for a clean, elastic and refreshing couch we strongly recommend it in prefer ence to any other material.

On Wednesday the Hon. G. F. Berkeley and th Hon. C. F. Berkeley were placed at the bar, Marlbo rough Street Office, before Messrs. Dyer and Chamber charged, the former with committing a most violent as sault upon Mr. Fraser, the bookseller, of Regent-street and the latter with aiding him in committing the assaul Mr. Fraser, upon presenting himself to be sworn, ap peared to have received most severe ill-treatment. Hi face was covered with large weals, and his hands wer bruised and bleeding. Mr. G. Berkeley said it was un necessary to go into the case, as he was ready to admi he had committed the assault. Mr. Fraser—You hav not only admitted that you have committed the presen assault, but you also stated at the station-house that yo would repeat it upon every opportunity afforded to you Mr. G. Berkeley admitted that he had also made thi statement. Mr. Chambers said that unless this ex pression was retracted, he should certainly not suffer th defendants to be admitted to bail. Mr. G. Berkeley then consented to retract the expression. Mr. Fraser stated, that he was writing at the desk in his shop, when the two defendants entered it. Mr. Craven Berkeley posted himself at the shop-door, and Mr. Grantley Berkeley came up to him and addressed him as though he was aware who he was. Witness inquired what was his business with him, and he said that he should wish to ascertain the name of the author of a critique upon the novel of Berkeley Castle, which appeared in the last number of Fraser's Magazine. Witness said he should be glad to know whom he had honour of addressing. The defendant said, "My name is Grantley Berkeley." Witness then told him that he could not give up the name of the author of the critique in question without further consideration, as it was not customary to give up the names of parties who furnished contributions of that description. He had hardly pronounced the words before he received a tremendous blow from the fist of the defendant, which felled him to the ground. He attempted to rise, when he proceeded to strike him over the face and body with the but-end of a horsewhip which he had in his hand. The defendant Craven Berkeley, during the time this proceeding was going on, stood at the door, in order to prevent any person from coming into the shop to his assistance. He at length was enabled to crawl away from the defendant Grantley Berkeley, and he then called out, and a man rushed from the street, passed Mr. Craven Berkeley, and came into the shop. Mr. Grantley Berkeley then desisted. A policeman came up, but he refused to interfere; and ultimately the defendants consented to walk to the station-house, from whence they proceeded to the office. At the station-house Mr. Craven Berkeley admitted he had accompanied his brother for the purpose of aiding him in committing the assault. The horsewhip alluded to by Mr. Fraser was a hunting-whip, very thick, and heavy enough to inflict severe punishment. Mr. Chambers asked the defendants whether they had any explanation to give on the subject of the charge? Mr. Grantley Berkeley—I admit, as I said before, having committed the assault, but I was justified in taking that proceeding by the provocation given me by the publication of the article in question. The Magistrates then consulted together and said, that the assault was clearly made out, and they had no other alternative than to call upon both the defendants to find bail, two sureties in 250*l.* each, and themselves in a like sum, to keep the peace towards Mr. Fraser.

(From a Correspondent).—"In consequence of the assault committed by the Hon. G. F. Berkeley, M.P., on Mr. James Fraser, the publisher of the Magazine, the author of the article which originally gave offence, Dr. Maginn, left his card at Berkeley House. A hostile message was forthwith sent by the Hon. member, and a meeting was agreed upon for 7 o'clock yesterday evening. Mr. G. Berkeley was attended by Major Fancourt, M.P., and Dr. Maginn by Mr. Hugh Fraser. The parties met in a field near the Edgeware Road, and after exchanging three shots without effect, Mr. H. Fraser withdrew his principal; no explanation or apology having been required or tendered."

(From another Correspondent).—"A meeting took place last evening between Mr. G. Berkeley and Dr. Maginn, the writer of the article in Fraser's Magazine. The parties met in a field off the New Barnet road, and after exchanging three shots, Dr. Maginn was withdrawn from the ground by his second. Mr. G. Berkeley was attended by Major Fancourt, and Dr. Maginn by Mr. Hugh Fraser."

We recommend Editors to adopt the motto,—"Put your trust in God, and keep your powder dry."

Statue of George III.—The erection in Pall Mall East of this statue, which has so long employed the labour and talents of Mr. Matthew Cotes Wyatt, the artist, took place on Wednesday. Among the persons on the platform were the Duke of Cumberland, the Duke of Rutland, Lord Jersey, Lord Hill, Lord Forrester, Lord J. Manners, Lord C. Manners, Lord Scarbrough, &c. At about half-past three the Royal Standard was hoisted, and the Duke of Cumberland and other noblemen having advanced to the front of the figure, a signal was given and its covering fell off amid loud cheers. As a work of art this superb group stands most proudly prominent. It is a perfect representation of the venerable Monarch George III. and his favourite charger. It embodies great spirit in the design, with great fidelity of portraiture. There is nothing outre, absurd, or exaggerated. It is of the finest bronze, of a gorgeous gold colour, varnished to resist the effects of the weather, and is placed upon a base of Portland stone, 12 feet in height, of a chaste and simple construction. The following is the inscription for the pedestal:—"To his Most Excellent Majesty George the Third, King of Great Britain and Ireland, and Defender of the Faith. A Monarch who was the safeguard of Christianity, without the honours of a saint; and the conqueror of half the globe, without the fame of a hero; who reigned amidst the wreck of empires, yet died in the love of his people, when peace was established throughout his wide dominions, when the literature and the commerce of his country pervaded the world, when British valour was without a rival, and the British character without a stain."

Mr. N. M. Rothschild expired at Frankfort on the 28th ult.; he continued perfectly sensible to the last moment. The immediate cause of his death was a low fever of little more than a week's standing. Mr. N. Rothschild has left seven children, four boys and three girls. He was born at Frankfort, which town he left more than twenty years ago, and returned again, where he died in the heart of his family, who were assembled to the number of sixty individuals. The body of Mr. Rothschild (accompanied by the whole of the family, with the exception of his son Nathan, who left London last week for Frankfort) arrived on Thursday night about eight o'clock in the river. It is not yet known when the funeral takes place.

The Dukedom of Roxburgh, Marquisate of Beaumont and Cessford, Earldom of Kelso, &c., being Scotch honours, his Grace will not be entitled, on coming of age next year, to a seat in the House of Peers.

Affair of Honour.—Wednesday morning a hostile meeting took place between Captain Lockhart and a gentlemen named Kenrick, in the Phœnix Park. Two shots were exchanged between the parties. Pope's villa at Twickenham, which has encountered many changes since the poet's death, has always been considered classic ground. There are, however, but few remaining memorials to remind the visiter of its original. The weeping willow, planted by Pope, was sacrilegiously cut down by as arrant a Goth and despoiler as he who rooted up the mulberry-tree planted by Shakspeare in his garden at Stratford-upon-Avon. The grotto under a part of the house, and the urn to the memory of his mother, whom he fondly and affectionately loved, placed on a pedestal in the garden, are the only preserved relics of Pope's taste and affectionate sensibility in that favoured retreat.

Brighton Railway.—After the most costly and prolonged contest in the two houses, upwards of 80 days in Committees, Stephenson's line of railway has followed the fate of Rennie's, Cundy's, and Gibbs's, and was thrown out on Monday afternoon in the Lords' Committee, by a majority of 17 to 8 Peers. The resolution which disposed of it was as follows: "That it is inexpedient to proceed further with this Bill during the present session." The minority was, Richmond, Duke, Portland, Strafford, Queensberry, Glengall, Beaufort, Westmorland. The majority, Verulam, Cumberland, Warwick, Bayning, Monson, Mountford, Wynford, Redesdale, Lake, Strangford, De Lisle, Abingdon, Gage, Clanricarde, Teynham, Exmouth, Berwick. Two only of the minority, and four of the majority, voted without hearing the discussion or evidence. The decision therefore, so far as regards attendance, was bona fide. The principal reasons for rejection were the decided objection of the great majority of the inhabitants of Brighton Stephenson's line, and the appearance in the Lords' Committee of the Brighton Junction Railway, a line uniting Brighton with the London and Dover (south-eastern) at Hoxted, a cutting of not more than thirty miles. The announcement of the result at the Stock Exchange was received with three loud cheers. Brighton will have to wait another year for railway connexion with the metropolis, and will be ruined if one is not obtained. The contest has cost upwards of 100,000*l.*, and been remarkable profitable to the legal profession.

BRITISH AUXILIARY LEGION.

GENERAL ORDER.—San Sebastian, July 23.

In the General Order of 4th inst., the Lieut.-General stated the circumstance of seven officers who claimed to resign their commissions and retire with a gratuity of half a-year's pay, on the ground of having served one year with the Legion, alleging that the conditions of service entitled them to this option; the Lieut.-Gen., not having any power to decide on such a claim, referred it for the consideration of Government, and having been honoured with the following reply, he loses no time in publishing it for the information of those officers and men who may have entertained this impression.

"The Government of her Christian Majesty have heard with lively feelings of regret, that the officers in question should have given to the terms of their contract an interpretation so different from that of the Government, who distinctly understood that no officer was entitled to resign at the expiration of one year, unless his intention of so doing had been duly specified at the time of entering the service. And further, that if the Government had not conceived that this reciprocal understanding existed, it would have been their duty to ascertain before the expiration of the twelve months, the number of officers who proposed to avail themselves of the privilege, in order to make such arrangements as circumstances and the Queen's service might render expedient.

"No such arrangements have been made, because it was not known to the Government that any officers had made the specification in question as to time. If, however, there are officers who really made a specific agreement for one year on entering, the Government will offer no opposition to their availing themselves of the stipulation, however much the loss of their service might be regretted.

"Nevertheless her Majesty's Government entertain a conviction that other and higher motives than the right or wrong interpretation of a contract would induce the officers in question to reconsider their intention of resigning.

"It is further observed on the part of her Majesty's Government, that they, in common with this country at large, have looked upon the officers of the British Legion as volunteers in the great cause of constitutional freedom, and that they were now, as their brave countrymen in former days, engaged in a struggle for the overthrow of oppression and despotism in a country bound by so many ties to England, and with which to British soldiers so many glorious associations are connected; declaring therefore, that they should be slow to believe that English officers or soldiers would voluntarily leave their task unconpleted and abandon the posts so recently acquired by their valour, at a moment the most critical of the war—at a moment when the Queen and the nation were looking to them with gratitude and with hope, when the Government had, in the midst of unequalled difficulties effectually provided for the remedy of their just grounds of complaints as well as against the recurrence of them. At a moment, in short, when the services of the Legion were best appreciated and most required. The Government could not think that, even were the terms of the contract those which it was sincerely believed they were not, the British officers would pursue a course so prejudicial to the cause they have adopted, or that they would now relax in those efforts which have been so gloriously commenced, and which have shed such lustre upon British arms."

Such is the decision of her Majesty's Government on this subject; and it seeming it might be satisfactory also to submit the matter for the judgment of his Britannic Majesty's Ambassador in this country, the Lieut.-General is informed by the British Ambassador that his opinion is precisely in unison with that of the Spanish Government as above stated.

It is clear from the above that any officers who should attempt to absent themselves from this force, unless they have made an express agreement for a limited service of one year, or unless they shall have the sanction of Government for doing so, will be considered by Government as having forfeited all right to gratuity or advantage of any kind resulting from the conditions; and also all right to any arrears of pay, which may be due to them esides being liable to such other penalty as military law r circumstances may admit.

The Lieut.-Gen. has himself no more interest in this atter than any other individual of the Legion, except- g that as senior officer of it for the time being, he els more anxious, for the honour, respectability, and rosperity of the corps generally, than any other person n do; and he has no doubt that any insubordination on is subject, or any attempt to oppose in the slightest egree the just and reasonable decision of the Govern- ent which he publishes in this order (an attempt the ast reflection must show would prove abortive), he re- eats that any insubordination or unmilitary conduct uld not but be injurious to the honour, the respectabi- y, and prosperity of the whole corps, and still more so the individuals guilty of such conduct.

In like manner any attempt of one part of our body to andon or divide itself from the rest, could not but be screditable and injurious to the whole body, and this, rhaps, at the instigation of some few interested indivi- uals who may have personal or unworthy motives of eir own for thus endeavouring to abandon their com- des, disgrace themselves, and disturb good discipline. he Lieutenant-General therefore strongly warns the od, the gallant, and well-disposed soldier, against y such designing and ill-conditioned persons, who ould not for a moment be listened to, and who will not cape detection.

The Government, however, as the Lieut.-General ticipated, will cheerfully give leave to any to retire, d with the gratuity proportioned to their service, who n bring any proof to show that they specified on enter- g the service that they desired to serve only for one ar: and, as the Lieut.-Gen. is informed that there may suma few regiments, who are so situated, he hereby rects that the three senior officers of every regiment d corps will, without delay, form themselves into a mmittee of inquiry to receive any claims of agreement r limited service which may be made, and where any stimony in support of the claims can be given, verbal r written, the most liberal construction will be given to , and the date of enlistment or engagement of each in- ividual so situated will be taken down, and a report ade on the subject. But even if there should be per- ons so situate they will not receive any arrear or gratuity ntil after those who are still gallantly serving are pro- ided for.

The Government declare their earnest determination n their letter contained in this order to perform their art, namely, to provide faithfully the pay, rations, and lothing of the troops. The Lieut.-Gen. fully believes hat every exertion is making to this end; and it is his ncessing effort by his representations, as is well known, o provide, as far as in his power, for all the wants of he Legion. The rations are at present good, arrange- ents for bringing up arrears of pay are made, and the nnual clothing is about to be sent from England; and he Lieut.-Gen. is determined, so far as depends on him, hat a complete settlement, and payment of all balances p to the end of the year shall be made, so as to obtain ore regularity for the future.

And after all, it is probably but for a few months now hat the Spanish Government will require the services of he Legion; for the Lieutenant-General hereby expects ntelligence of the total destruction of the rebel column, hich has had the temerity to advance towards Galicia, nd which has been incessantly pursued by General Espartero nearly 300 miles. This will render available or the vigorous prosecution of the war in three pro- inces twenty or thirty additional battalions. Thus a ost decided moral and military result must ensue, hich may bring the war to a much more rapid and tri- mphant close than the weak-minded or discontented ave expected.

The Lieut.-Gen. has only to add, that he is authorised state that crosses of merit for the glorious action of th May are now in course of being manufactured in England, and, it is expected, will be completed and ready be conferred in two or three weeks hence. This is a ecoration which every soldier of sense and honour who ay be so fortunate as to receive it, will justly prize to he latest hour of his life. The Commanding Officers of rps and departments will please to make out nominal sts of all under their respective command, who may have he requisite claim to this distinction, and will forward he same to the Adjut.-General's office.

Double rations of meat and wine will be issued to- orrow to the Legion, on account of the anniversary of er Majesty the Queen Regent. By command, (Signed) OLIVE DE LANCEY, Dep. Adj. Gen.

Fitzgerald. 17th—Capt. Richardson, 6th reg., having solicited per- mission to withdraw his resignation, the Lieut.-Gen. cancels the same; Capt. Richardson to be Major 4th reg. v. Ross, prom., 13th May. 18th—Quartermast. Kenny, 10th reg., having been reported unfit for his duties, is struck off the strength of the Legion.

The following officers having tendered their resigna- tions, they are accepted, and these officers will be struck off the strength of the Legion from the following dates: —Captain St. Leger, 4th reg., 30th June; Lieut. Har- rington, 10th reg., 16th July; Lieut. Quill, 10th reg., 16th July; Lieut. Price, 8th reg., 12th July; Volunteer Kean, 8th reg., 12th July.

July 23—The dismounted men of the 1st Lancers, now in San Sebastian, will be employed on garrison and fatigue duties, under the orders of the Commandant.

Why does not Lord Palmerston accede to the request of Brig.-Gen. Evans, of the Hon. East India Company's Service, and afford accommodation for the immediate re- turn of the footpads to England?—John Bull. [The impertinence of the above paragraph will not justify its being treated with contempt, as in that case it might be supposed that an application had been really made by Brig.-Gen. Evans to Lord Palmerston to afford accommodation for the return of the Legion to England. We have au- thority from Brig.-Gen. Evans for stating that no such application was made by him to Lord Palmerston.—Morning Chronicle.]

In the recent affair at Fontarabia the Royal Marines lost: killed—Privates Richard Hardon, Woolwich divi- sion, and Thomas Heywood, Chatham. Wounded—a Serjeant; Corporal Flanagan, Woolwich Division; Pri- vates James Sweetman, ditto; Elia Cooper, Plymouth; James Harris, Chatham; Samuel Richardson, ditto; George Warn, Plymouth; Daniel Fisher, Portsmouth; John Lott, ditto; John Hilton, Woolwich; Richard Jarvis, Plymouth.

The agitation of the question as to the option of con- tinuing to serve in the Legion beyond the expiration of one year, spread from the officers to the men; and it having been ascertained that among the Lancers this agi- tation had arrived at a considerable pitch, directions were given by General Evans to Colonel Kinloch to ascertain quietly what men wished to avail themselves of the sup- posed right to retire, in order that some decision might be come to upon the matter. By mistake it was put into the regimental orders, that the names of the Lancers situated in this manner should be sent to the Command- ing Officer, and the result was, that about 80 placed themselves upon the list, and declined doing duty; about 40, however, withdrew their names subsequently, of their own accord. The remaining 40 were, upon the matter being reported to the General, ordered to be dismounted and disarmed, and they were marched into San Sebastian. Here they remained for three or four days. On the 24th July Lieut.-Col. Wakefield, on whom the command of the regiment devolved in consequence of Col. Kinloch having been ordered to Vittoria, ordered the forty men to be paraded and marched out to the barracks at the Misericordia convent. They did march through the city gate, but stopped short there, and refused to proceed; they stated their determination to quit the service. Notice of the fact was instantly sent to the Adjutant- General, and, in order to prevent a crowd blocking up the gate, the refractory soldiers were marched back to the arcades of the Plaza Vieja, hard by, where they remained in a perfectly orderly state for about an hour. Two companies of the 10th Infantry regiment were ordered into town, in order to escort the Lancers to their barracks as prisoners. On the arrival of these two companies in the Plaza, and being drawn up in admirable order in sec- tions, the Lancers gave them three cheers. Simultane- ously with the arrival of the Infantry, Col. Wakefield made his appearance on horseback, accompanied by the Adjut.-General, Col. de Lancey, Maj. Ebsworth, and some officers of the Lancers. A number of spectators had also assembled. As before stated, the 40 Lancers were drawn up in a double file under the arcades, and they cheered the Infantry, who they well knew were come to coerce them, (the Lancers were in their stable dresses, without arms; the Infantry fully equipped and armed)—not a single response was made to the cheers; the men of the 10th behaved in the most soldier-like manner. An officer at the head of about a dozen men advanced, and Col. Wakefield gave the order to his men to face to the right and march,—not one of them moved: the order was peremptorily repeated; it produced no other effects than a low murmuring. Upon this Col. de Lancey and Col. Wakefield drew their swords, and advancing upon the refractory soldiers, threatened them in the most cool and determined manner with instant punishment if they did not obey. Col. de Lancey ordered Maj. Ebsworth to direct his officer to do his duty: he did so, and, after a few symptoms of dogged resistance, the two first men were moved off under the charge of half-a-dozen of the 10th, then four more by another party, and the remainder by half-dozens; the whole were thus quietly marched out of town, and proceeded towards the Misericordia.

A drum-head court-martial was next ordered to be as- sembled for the trial of five of the ringleaders, and the result was, that they were sentenced to receive 500 lashes each. Immediately, one of them, a fine-looking man, was or- dered to strip (the other men being present), which he did at once, and not a murmur was heard; such was the influence Col. Wakefield had over his men. However, just as the punishment was about to commence, the offi- cers stept forth, and respectfully interceded with the Col. on the behalf of the five culprits; stating that they would be answerable for their future good conduct and that of the others. Under these circumstances, Col. Wakefield took upon himself to pardon his soldiers, and ordered the whole party to proceed to the stables, and take their horses to exercise, which they did with alacrity. A parade was then ordered for the following morning, and the duty went on for the remainder of the day with perfect regularity and order.

Unpleasant symptoms have been displayed in the 6th regt., chiefly composed of Scotchmen. This arises out of the agitation of the question as to the period of ser- vice. Notwithstanding the communication to the men of the general order on the subject, a copy of which was inclosed in my last, the majority (nay, almost the whole) of this regiment persist in claiming their discharge at the expiration of the first year on the 1st of August.

We hear that the health of Gen. Evans had consider- ably improved, but that a dysenteric complaint is preva- lent at St. Sebastian, and that 120 Royal Marines at- tacked by it had been received into the hospital.

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Monday, 1st August.—The Drogheda and Dublin Railway Bill was read a third time and passed.—An address was agreed to, to his Majesty, praying him to appoint competent persons to consider the various lines of communication in Ireland, with a view to see which could be most usefully applied in the construction of railways.—The Marriages and Births Registration Bill was read a third time and passed.—In committee on the Established Church Bill, the Earl of Ripon objected to the suppression of the bishopric of Sodor and Man, in which he was joined by the Bishop of Rochester and Lord Lyndhurst. No amendment, however, was moved. On the first clause being read, the Bishop of Exeter moved an amendment, the effect of which was to prevent the commissioners from subsisting as a perpetual corporation. The amendment was rejected, as was another amendment, to the effect that nothing in the Bill should extend to authorise the commissioners to recommend the alienation of any episcopal land or hereditaments, except in the case of the see of Durham, for the purpose of augmenting small livings. The other clauses were agreed to.

Tuesday, 2d August.—The Paper Duties Bill was read a third time and passed.—The Earl of Devon presented a petition from Mr. Charlton, M.P., praying the House to afford a remedy for the evil arising from the 71st section of the Municipal Act of last year.—The Duke of Richmond moved the second reading of the Poole Corporation Bill. It was opposed, and the Bill ordered to be read a second time that day three months.—The House went into committee on the Stamp Duties (Newspapers) Bill, for the purpose of postponing it till Monday next.—The Universities (Scotland) Bill was, on the suggestion of the Duke of Wellington, postponed till next session.—The Oyster Fisheries Bill was read a second time, and ordered to be referred to a select committee.

Wednesday, 3d August.—The Civil Bill Courts (Ireland) Bill was read a third time and passed. No other business of any interest was transacted.

Thursday, 4th August.—On the motion of the Duke of Richmond, the report of the committee on the Brighton Railway Bill was received, after which the Noble Duke moved that the Bill be re committed. Lord Wharncliffe moved as an amendment, that the report be now taken into consideration. Their Lordships then divided on the motion of the Duke of Richmond—non-contents, 44; contents, 42; majority, 2.—The Marquess of Clanricarde moved the second reading of the Stafford Borough Bribery Prevention Bill, upon which the Earl of Devon moved as an amendment that the Bill be read a second time that day three months. After some discussion their Lordships divided, when the amendment was carried by a majority of 16, and the Bill was consequently lost.—The Charitable Trustees Bill, and the Roman Catholic Marriages Bill, were also thrown out on amendments by the Duke of Wellington.—The Marriages Bill was read a third time and passed.

Friday, 5th August.—The Copyright Bill, and the Highway Rates Bill, were read a third time and passed.—Lord Exmouth inquired if Government had received any information of the evacuation of Vittoria by Cordova and the Christinos troops, and the subsequent possession of it by the Carlists? Lord Melbourne believed his Majesty's Government had received no information of the kind.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, 1st August.—Mr. Walter brought forward the resolution of which he had given previous notice, to the effect—"That the House, early in the next session, would institute an inquiry into the operation of the Act of 5th William IV., intituled 'An Act for the Amendment of the Laws relating to the Poor in England and Wales,' and particularly with regard to out-door relief—the separation of husbands from their wives, and of parents from their children, in the union workhouses." Lord J. Russell defended the Poor-law Amendment Act. After a lengthened debate the House divided—for going into the order of the day, 82; against it, 46; majority, 36.—In answer to a question from Captain Boldero, Mr. C. Wood stated that no orders had been sent out to the northern coast of Spain to recal the marines now serving under the command of Lord John Hay, and that none of them had been made amenable to the disgraceful decree issued by Don Carlos. He had no objection to lay Lord John Hay's despatches respecting the affair at Fontarabia on the table.—The House went into committee on the Customs Bill, when Mr. C. P. Thomson stated, that owing to the prosperous state of the revenue he was enabled to propose the reduction of duties on a number of articles, in addition to those which he had stated on a former occasion. He proposed to reduce the duty on pepper from one shilling to sixpence a pound, pimento from fivepence to threepence per pound, cloves from ninepence to sixpence, and a similar reduction in mace. He also proposed that maps and charts should pay only a duty of one penny each, that castor oil should be reduced from 1*s.* 6*d.* per pound to 1*s.* 3*d.* per cwt., and that foreign silver plate should be admissible at a duty of 2*s.* 6*d.* per ounce, instead of the present duty of 5*s.* 6*d.*, and gold plate at 1*l.* per ounce, instead of, as at present, 3*l.* 16*s.* He mentioned several other articles, the duty upon which he proposed to modify, and added that there were minor articles which he would not trouble the House by specifying. The reductions were generally approved of, and the Bill was, after a short discussion, reported.—The amendments of the Lords to the Tithes Commutation Bill were agreed to after some discussion.—Mr. Wakley having moved the third reading of the Medical Witnesses Bill, it was moved as an amendment that the House be counted, when there appearing to be only 39 members present, the House adjourned.

Tuesday, 2nd August.—Mr. C. Wood presented copies of the despatches received from Lord John Hay, relative to the recent attack on Fontarabia, and the subsequent operations, and lists of the killed and wounded amongst His Majesty's forces serving on the coast of Spain.—Mr. O'Connell gave notice, that early in the next session he would move that it be referred to a committee to inquire and report whether or not it be necessary for the public weal and the interests of the realm that a reform should be effected in the House of Lords, extending the principle of representation to the peerage, by altering the qualifications of the electors and the mode of election.—The Ecclesiastical Leases Bill was read a third time and passed.—The Greek Loan Act was read a second time.—Lord J. Russell moved that the Irish Church Bill, as amended by the Lords, be taken into consideration this day three months. Upon this motion an amendment was proposed by Sir R. Peel, to the effect that the amendments be now considered. After a long and an animated debate the House divided—for the original motion, 260; for the amendment, 231; majority for Ministers, 29.

Wednesday, 3d August.—Mr. P. Thomson presented the resolutions adopted by the select committee on the subject of railways, which were agreed to.—On the motion of Mr. Divett, the writ for Stafford was suspended until Thursday week.—The Handloom Weavers Bill was postponed until next session.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer moved the second reading of the Jewish Civil Disabilities Bill. Sir R. Inglis moved as an amendment that the Bill be read a second time that day three months. After a short discussion the House divided, when the motion was carried by a majority of 17, and the Bill read a second time.—The Medical Witnesses' Bill was read a third time and passed.

Thursday, 4th August.—The House met at twelve, for the purpose of further considering Mr. Warburton's motion for a select committee on the Trouthecke case. After a long debate the motion was negatived without a division.—At the evening sitting the Customs Duties Bill, and the Court of Chancery (Ireland) Bill, were read a third time and passed.—Lord J. Russell, in moving the further consideration of the report of the committee on the Registration of Voters Bill, stated the names of the barristers whom he should think qualified to act as revising barristers. The names were:—The Right Hon. T. Erskine, Chief of the Court; Messrs. Fraser, Rogers, Long, Robinson, Maltby, Praed, West, O'Grady, Reynell, and Alexander. Several members objected to the appointment of Mr. Erskine; but ultimately the several clauses of the Bill were agreed to.—The Gold and Silver Plate (Scotland) Bill was read a third time and passed.—Lord Morpeth moved the third reading of the Church Temporalities Bill, upon which Mr. Brotherton moved that the House be counted, and it appearing that 40 members were not present, the House adjourned.

Friday, 5th August.—The Horton's Estate Bill was read a third time and passed.—The Militia Ballot Suspension Bill went through committee without observation.—The Assessed Taxes Bill was read a third time and passed.—Sir E. Codrington presented a petition from Mr. R. Milner, who complained that his name had been erased from the Navy List, and praying that means should be afforded him of proving the injustice of the punishment inflicted upon him. The gallant Admiral presented petitions to the same effect from Lieutenants Lee and Bryant. Mr. C. Wood was happy to inform the Hon. and Gallant Admiral and the House, that circumstances had been brought to the knowledge of the Admiralty which satisfied them that the charges made against Lieut. Bryant were wholly without foundation. As a matter of course, Mr. Bryant's name would be restored to the List. (Hear.) Sir E. Codrington said that this circumstance showed the propriety of the parties being brought face to face.—Sir J. Graham, before the House went into committee of Supply, wished to ask a question of the Government. Towards the end of last Session certain resolutions had been come to for the purpose of consolidating the offices of Treasurer of the Navy, Paymaster of the Army, and Master of the Ordnance. They had now arrived at the last day of Supply, and he had seen the Navy and Army Estimates, in which all provisions for these offices were omitted; and what he wished, therefore, to ask was whether those regulations were prepared, whether an estimate was to be submitted to the House, whether the money had been paid on the 5th July, and if paid out of what fund? Mr. Baring said that the resolutions to which the Right Hon. Baronet referred, required very great consideration; but he believed they were in such a state of preparation as would enable them to be shortly submitted to the House. With respect to the payment of the salaries, it was quite true that, in accordance with the resolutions, they had been suspended; but as, under the circumstances, these resolutions had not been carried into effect, the proper course would be to submit a separate vote for the payment of the salaries.—Sir E. Codrington moved for a return "of all officers, of whatever rank, who have been deprived of their half-pay without their consent, or the investigation of a Court-Martial, from the year 1790 up to the present period, with the alleged reasons for such deprivation; also a return of any persons whose half-pay has been restored to them subsequently to such deprivation, with the alleged reason for such restoration." Mr. C. Wood would not consent to parade a list of the cases and causes of dismissal for the last forty-six years; but if any individual case were brought forward, he would be ready to give every information. Sir E. Codrington expressed his willingness to withdraw the motion, with the intention of bringing it forward in a more confined shape, viz. merely a return in those cases wherein the parties themselves were anxious to have it made. Mr. C. Wood objected to the withdrawal of the motion, which was negatived accordingly.—Mr. Maclean rose to bring forward his motion for certain returns connected with the Auxiliary Legion in Spain, but was prevented from doing so by the rules of the House. He, however, made some observations on the subject, which produced a lengthened discussion, in the course of which Lord Palmerston defended the policy pursued by the Government of the country.—[We shall notice this debate next week].

Two young officers of the Walloon guards, mounting guard at the palace one day, were discussing together their respective chances of promotion and success in the career they had embraced. After comparing notes, they both came to the conclusion that the army was, at best, a beggarly profession, with a vast deal more tinsel than gold about it, especially in time of peace. But what was to be done? "Let us go up to the king, and ask him for a good benefice in the church," said the one. "With all my heart," said the other; "but the worst is that I don't know a word of Latin." "Bah! so much the better. I suppose you thought I was a professor of Salamanca? Trash! let us ask for the canonica, and get it—the Latin will come of itself." So said, so done: they drew up a memorial, setting forth in strong terms their horror at the dangers, and vanities, and temptations of this world, and their wish to serve God, in peace and good-will to all men. They got themselves announced, were admitted to the royal presence, and, whether from caprice or being amused at the freak, their request was granted. One of them obtained a canonry of Toledo, and is only lately dead; the other still lives in the comfortable enjoyment of a rich stall in Arragon.

Naval Surgeons.—So late as 1802, the King of Sweden engaged some British Surgeons to serve in his ships of war; their perplexity and mortification may be imagined, on finding that they were expected to shave the whole ship's company as a duty belonging to their station.

Warranted to Keep in any Climate.

ENGLISH PEOPLE DIE from neglect- ing the Use of Lavements."—See Victor Jacquemont's ters, Vol. I. page 122. The Manufacturers respectfully nu- nce, that a Domestic Lavement Apparatus has at length n invented, which does not tease people with screwing and ng, or require the fuss of Basins, Chairs, and other trouble ome ablutionaries; it has no elastic materials to cause inconvenience d expense by decaying and becoming defective; and, lastly, as the peculiar property of injecting the fluid in a continued rrent, which, at the same time, gives the additional advantage excluding the admission of air. Having been constructed by professional Inventor with a view to remove those objections d difficulties which have hitherto appertained to all Lavement achines, the Manufacturers confidently aver that Dr. Scott's ven-Pump will be found extremely commodious by every in- vidual—even the most infirm person or timid female may anage it with the most comfortable facility. In fine, this unique d elegant Apparatus supersedes all former inventions of the nd, and should be in the possession of everyfamily, particularly individuals habitually requiring aperient medicines, or suffer- g from indigestion and disorders connected with a confined faulty state of the bowels. An eminent Physician, who has ld an important station in the Honourable Company's Ser- ce for thirty years past, has thus expressed his opinion of this achine:—"I am convinced that the introduction of Dr. Scott's ysso-Pump into India will tend greatly to the preservation f Life; and it is a desirable thing that every family should be rovided with it. It is admirably suited for hot climates, as it oes not possess any elastic tubes, the heat kind of which are ery perishable and annoying in any country; but decay most uickly in tropical climates. In short, I think that Scott's Patent Lavement Machine should form an item in every outfit to In- dia." Orders to be addressed to SAVORY and CO., Chemists and Medical Mechanists, 369, Strand,

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY.

AS the following letter received from Major-General Sir Henry Wheatley, Keeper of the Privy Purse, testifies:—

Sir,—I am honoured with the King's command to express his Majesty's sense of your polite attention in sending the two bottles of Essence of Ginger. His Majesty has been pleased to direct me to forward you ten pounds in payment for it—inclosed you will find that amount.—I am, Sir, your's obediently,

St. James's Palace, June 25th, 1835. H. WHEATLEY.

To Mr. Decimus Woodhouse.

WOODHOUSE'S ÆTHERIAL ESSENCE of GINGER is particularly recommended to all cold, phlegmatic, weak, and nervous constitutions; it is certain in affording instant relief in Cholera Morbus, Spasms, Cramps, Flatulence, Languor, Hysterics, Heartburn, Loss of Appetite, Sensation of Fulness, Pain and Oppression after Meals; also those Pains of the Stomach and Bowels which arise from Gouty Flatulencies; Digestion, however much impaired, is restored to its pristine state, by the use of this Essence for a short time, if taken in Tea, Coffee, Ale, Beer, Porter, Cider, or Wine; it corrects their Flatulent tendency.

The undernamed, and 208 other Medical men have given certificates of their unqualified approbation of the value of the Essence, as also of its superiority over all other similar preparations. Drs. James Johnson, Physician to his Majesty, A. T. Holroyd, S. Ashwell, B. Rowley, A. Middleton, C. London, D. Davies, Surgeon to their Majesties, J. Pereira, G. Pilcher, F. Salmon, F. Tyrrell, J. H. Curtis, Aurist to his Majesty, C. Millard.

This Essence is prepared only by DECIMUS WOODHOUSE, Operative Chemist Extraordinary to his Majesty, 18, King William-street, New London bridge; and sold by him, wholesale and retail, in bottles 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., 10s. 6d. and 21s. each; and may be had of all Medicine Venders.

FRUIT SEASON.—Each succeeding year proves, more extensively than its predecessor, the advantage of using the Patent Brandy, diluted with water, as a substitute for Beer, or other fermented liquors; a recommendation strongly urged by the principal members of the faculty; and never more important than at the present season, when the natural indulgence in the use of fruit renders the choice of a safe and wholesome beverage an action great importance. The established purity, and freedom from acid, of the Patent Brandy, expressly and exclusively certified by Chemists of the first eminence, and further substantiated by its constantly increasing sale, (exceeding in the last year that of the preceding year by between twenty and thirty thousand gallons,) warrant J. T. Betts and Co. in drawing public attention to its superior qualities, not only as a beverage, but also with reference to its use in fortifying home-made Wines, in the preparation of Confectionary and Preserves, and for general culinary purposes.

As Distillers, J. T. Betts and Co. cannot send out less than two Gallons of their Patent Brandy; which may be obtained at Eighteen Shillings per Imperial Gallon, of the highest legal strength, at the Distillery, No. 7, Smithfield Bars, leading to St. John Street, which is their only Establishment.

THE VEGETABLE SYRUP of BE VELNOS.—At this period of the year, when, from the increased heat in the atmosphere, inflammation of the blood is of more frequent occurrence, the use of a medicine which cools it, without debilitating the system, must be evident and advantageous, if not indispensable. Of such a nature and property the experience of more than half a century has proved that the Vegetable Syrup is unquestionably possessed. It is of peculiar efficacy in correcting, purifying, and sweetening the blood; and those who are afflicted with Scrofula, Scurvy, Scorbutic Eruptions, and many of those melancholy diseases arising from the impurity of the blood and juices, should, especially at this season, enter without delay upon a regular course of the Vegetable Syrup. The effect of this medicine in promoting insensible perspiration, is such as not to interrupt either business or pleasure, it operates on the animal juices, and requires only the common restraint of moderation in diet. It is dissolved in the chyle of the stomach, is conveyed by the circulating fluids, and corrects their tendencies to all those diseases which originate in vitiated blood. It is a safe, though a powerful, substitute for mercury, and removes those evils which an unnecessful use of that mineral occasions.

The Syrup is prepared by Mrs. Canham, No. 32, Berners'-street, Oxford street, and sold by her, and, with her authority, by all respectable Medicine Venders in town and country.—See Mrs. Canham's recently published Treatise on Scrofula, Scurvy, Consumption, and Diseases of the Blood and Liver. Sold by Ridgway and Sons, 169, Piccadilly.

TEETH.—Gold is the only material with which decayed teeth can be filled with any perma nently beneficial result: the various cements to which so man impossibilities are unblushingly attributed, being amalgama mercury, with silver, tin, &c., quickly combine with the acid of the mouth, and thus, forming muriates of those metals, tur the teeth black, and ultimately destroy them.*

GREIG THOMSON, Surgeon Dentist, informs the Public th he has succeeded in making a preparation of gold, which, wit out inflicting the least pain, effectually arrests the progress decay, and resembles the teeth in point of colour much mo than any other invention now in use.

G. T. continues to perform all the operations of Dental Su gery, and to fix natural and artificial teeth upon the most im proved principles, combined with the utmost moderation terms.

SAFETY and EFFICACY is the motto adopted by ROWLAND and SON, as applicable to every requisite for the Toilet which they have had the honour of suc- cessfully introducing to general patronage, and it particularly distinguishes ROWLAND'S KALYDOR—at this season, there- fore, when the brilliancy of the Female Complexion is susceptible of permanent injury from the prevalence of a degree of heat nearly assimilating with that of the tropics, it is of vast import- ance to Ladies to bear in constant remembrance that this in- valuable preparation is perfectly innoxious, and decidedly free from Mineral Astringents, dangerously repellant in their action its inherent qualities are those of diffusing refreshing and deli- cious coolness; protecting the complexion from sun-burn, tan, freckle, and discolouration; and of sustaining through life that purity, smoothness, and elasticity of the skin, on which mainly depends continued freshness of appearance and the contour of youth.

To prevent imposition, the name and address is engraved on the government stamp, which is affixed over the cork of each bottle.

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL, unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, preserving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, rendering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and sustaining it in full under the different varieties of atmosphere.

Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO.,

Perfumers to the Royal Family, No. 63, Oxford Street, London.

Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and Co. were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to the Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individual who divulged it to them, or whose head would inevitably have paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties successively employed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn oaths of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three centuries.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed the greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and most uncivilised countries great value is set upon a fine head of hair. The great care is proverbial that is paid to the cultivation of the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, and art is there well known to succeed in entrivalling even the far-famed beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during the period of three centuries, and has been found undeviatingly successful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, soft, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess (as is done in some instances) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair upon cast iron—it will do no such thing; but, if regularly applied, it will re-produce the hair where nature ordained its existence, it lost from those causes to which baldness is referable; it will promote the growth of the hair generally.

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY, sustain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a brilliant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a pure LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, unsophisticated with the deleterious articles usually employed to dye Oils red, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the hair, and although an oily substance, the

ORIENTAL OIL DOES NOT RENDER THE HAIR GREASY, and is therefore free from the general complaint against every other article in present use for the same purpose, including those filthy substances miscalled Bears' Grease, which are neither more nor less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil submitted to various manipulations to divest them of the fetid animal smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform principle. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dews of the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprive it of which it soon withers and dies; so the hair, unless properly nourished, becomes weak and gradually drops off; for, minute as a single hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human hair will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface covered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, and which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tendency, the hair is destroyed thereby: thus it will be observed that those persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in life, which is merely caused by the acid caustic nature of the perspiration settling on the hair and being absorbed, which entirely destroys it; but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will prevent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury; and if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely removes the scurf, without the assistance of the dandruff combs, an operation so distressing to the heads of children.

Price 3s. 6d., 6s. 6d., and in pint bottles, with glass stoppers, 12s. each.

N.B.—HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL is particularly recommended to the notice of Merchants and Shippers Trading to the East and West Indies, being the only article for the hair that will survive a voyage to the East without turning rancid.

SARSAPARILLA.

"Great praise is due to Mr. Hillyard for his very clever and much needed preparation of Sarsaparilla. His mode of preparing it preserves the necessary active qualities, which, according to the old mode, were allowed to evaporate, thus rendering it one of the most sure, as well as simple, remedies in purifying the blood."—United Service Gazette.

"In justice to one of the many preparers of Sarsaparilla, we must give the meed of praise to Hillyard's condensed preparation, knowing some friends of ours who have received much benefit from its use."—Fraser's Literary Chronicle.

A CERTAIN and MOST SPEEDY CURE for all URETHRAL DISCHARGES, GLEETS, SPASMODIC STRICTURES, IRRITATION of the KIDNEYS, BLADDER, URETHRA, and PROSTATE GLAND.

From JOSEPH HENRY GREEN, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London.

"I have made trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba. From BRANSBY COOPER, Esq., F.R.S., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c. &c.

"Mr. Bransby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony of the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases with perfect success. From WILLIAM HENTSCH, Esq., No. 3, Furnival's Inn, Holborn, late House Surgeon to the Free Hospital, Greville street, Hatton Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I know of: the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly,

SCROFULA AND SCORBUTIC AFFECTIONS.—ALTERATIVE TONIC POWDERS and PILLS.—A certain specific for the removal of scrofula, glandular, and scorbutic affections, secondary symptoms, eruptions of the skin, pains in the limbs, ulcerated sore throat, chronic rheumatism, local and general debility, loss of appetite, depression of spirits, and all diseases arising from an impure state of the blood. Persons in the habit of taking quinine will find these Powders by far the most efficacious tonic. Prepared only by the Proprietor, M. O. WRAY, 118, Holborn Hill; and sold in packages at 4s. 6d., 11s., and 21s. each; and wholesale, by Messrs. Barclay and Sons, 95, Farringdon Street; Butler, 4, Cheapside; Sutton and Co., 10, Bow Church-yard; and retail, by Stralling, Gate of the Royal Exchange; Sanger, 150, Oxford Street. Lowe and Hornblower, 47, Blackfriars Road, London; and all respectable Patent Medicine Vendors in Town and Country.

SARSAPARILLA.—Mr. WRAY, of Holborn-hill, the Proprietor of the ALTERATIVE TONIC POWDERS, having observed constant disappointment attending the exhibition of the pharmaceutical and other preparations of Sarsaparilla, induced him to set on foot, with the assistance of the ablest experimental chemists, an analysis of its properties; the result of which proves that true Sarsaparilla, carefully selected and separated from all impurities, is in substance most effectual, and that the various preparations under the denomination of decoctions, extracts, essences, syrups, &c., hitherto used, can never be depended upon for producing any real or permanent benefit. But, though Sarsaparilla in substance only is to be preferred, yet the action may be materially assisted when combined with auxiliaries. By a trial of many years' continuance, he has found that the Alterative Tonic Powders he now offers to the Public have justified his most sanguine expectations, and therefore feels himself bound by motives of humanity to confine them no longer to private practice, but to allow the public the full advantage of so valuable a medicine. Persons in the habit of taking quinine will find his powders by far the most efficacious tonic.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove:—

"Sir,—For many years I suffered by Corns; latterly I felt such excruciating pain, having five on my left foot, that the frequent bathing, paring, and filing of them in no way relieved me. For months I could not wear boots, and for ten or twelve days not even shoes. I tried ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN SOLVENT, of which I find you are the Proprietor: after using it two days, I could wear shoes, in four days, one of the Corns, the most painful, was entirely eradicated. By this one I suffered more in particular, as it was between my toes. I have in a week after, and since, been able to wear boots. Having experienced this benefit in eight Corns in my own person, and having recommended this Solvent to many Patients of mine, who all have been cured, I deem it but just to give you this testimony, to use it as you may think proper. I am, Sir, your obedient servant, D. EADEN, Surgeon Dentist."

1, Southampton-street, Strand,
19th March, 1836."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely inefficacious but mischievous: it is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Sold by J. A. Sharwood, 55, Bishopsgate Without, in Bottles, at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.; and, by appointment, by most Medicine Vendors.

HEALTH, BEAUTY, and LONG LIFE—An eminent medical writer has remarked, and experience has proved the fact beyond dispute, that those who are attentive to keeping the Stomach and Bowels in proper order, preserve health, prevent disease, and generally attain robust, cheerful, and healthy Old Age. For that truly desirable purpose are particularly adapted, being prepared with the Sulphate of Quinine, Extract of Chamomile Flowers, and the most choice stomachic and aperient drugs of the Materia Medica.

They have in all cases proved superior to every other medicine in the cure of Stomach and Liver Complaints, Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Sensation of Fulness, Sick Head-ache, Pain and Oppression after Meals, Habitual Costiveness, Flatulence, Shortness of Breath, Stomach Coughs, Spasms, Worms, and Fits in Children and Grown Persons, and all Disorders incident to the Stomach and Bowels. They are also truly efficacious in the cure of Colds, Agues, Asthmas, Rheumatism, Gout, Jaundice, Dropsy, and Gravel, and an excellent restorative after any excess or free indulgence at table, as they gently cleanse the bowels, strengthen the stomach, sweeten the breath, cheer the spirits, brace the nerves, induce a healthy action of the liver, improve digestion, and invigorate the whole system. Females who value good health and personal appearance, should never be without them, as they purify the blood, remove obstructions, pimples, cutaneous eruptions, sallowness, &c., and give the skin a beautiful, clear, healthy, and blooming appearance. Persons of a plethoric habit who are subject to head-ache, fits, giddiness, dimness of sight, drowsiness, sleeping noise in the ears, which indicate too great a flow of blood to the head, should be particular to take them frequently. They are so mild and gentle in their action that children and persons of all ages may take them at any time, as they do not contain mercury or any ingredient that requires confinement or restriction of diet. Many healthy aged individuals, several of them highly distinguished Members of the Royal College, who know their value, make it a rule to take them two or three times a week, by which they remove the causes that produce disease, preserve their health, and keep off the infirmities of age, retaining, in a surprising degree, all the energy, vigour, vivacity, and cheerfulness of their youthful days. They should be kept in every family as a remedy in case of sudden illness, for, by their prompt administration, cholera morbus, cramp, spasms, fevers, apoplexy, and other alarming complaints, which too often prove fatal, may be speedily cured or prevented. Numerous patients, whose cases had been considered hopeless, have been restored to sound health by them. This can be proved by the testimony of thousands, and shown by letters from numerous patients who have benefitted by their unrivalled efficacy. To describe all their excellent properties, and the cures they have performed, would fill volumes, and exceed credibility; in fact there is scarcely any disease to which the human frame is subject that they will not either prevent or cure, and none in which they can possibly do harm.

Prepared only by J. W. STIRLING, Chemist, 86, High Street, Whitechapel, in Boxes at 1s. 6d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each, and may be had of all the principal Medicine Venders in the kingdom.

FURTHER CONFIRMATION OF THE UNFAILING VIRTUES OF

OLDRIDGE'S BALM OF COLUMBIA.

January 25th 1836.

GENTLEMEN,—I regret that I have not earlier acknowledged to you the great benefit which I have derived from the use of your Balm of Columbia, which, in my own case, I have happily found to possess all the virtues you ascribe to it; I at first, and by mere accident, purchased a Bottle from one of your Agents merely as a trial; and until lately, was unaware of its justly famed and great celebrity, or of your being resident, and having a principal establishment in England, otherwise I should have felt pleasure and a sense of duty to you and the public in making this acknowledgment before. About four years ago, I found my hair rapidly falling off, not occasioned by any bodily illness, and to such an extent was my head really bald that I was compelled to wear a wig; about three afterwards I began to use your Balm, and after the lapse of nine months, and the application of only three 3s. bottles, I was enabled to leave off the wig, finding my hair quite restored to its pristine strength, which it has retained ever since.

I am, Gentlemen, yours very obliged,

BENJAMIN BRIDGE, 31, Little Newport Street, Leicester Square.

PROSPECTUS OF THE DEPOSIT &

LOAN BANK COMPANY.—CAPITAL, £500,000,

With power to increase the same, if necessary.

In 100,000 Shares of 5*l.* each. Deposit, 1*l.* per Share. The remaining 4*l.* to be paid in two Instalments, namely, 2*l.* per share at each call, of which two months' notice shall be given.

Office, pro. tem., No. 29, Essex Street, Strand.

Secretary, Mr. W. MONTAGUE.

THE object of this Company is to afford the means of immediate pecuniary assistance to every one (of whatever station in life) who will deposit satisfactory security, in goods or otherwise, for the repayment of the Sums advanced, with equitable remuneration for the same, during such period as the loan may be required.

The extensive business transacted by those already engaged in lending money on deposits, and their immense profits, are in themselves sufficient reasons for the establishment of a Deposit and Loan Bank; but pecuniary facilities, such as this Company will be enabled to afford to every class of Society, by means of their large Capital and resources, are not at present attainable through the ordinary channels of deposit and loan.

It is intended that the laws, enacted for the regulation of those persons who are already occupied in similar pursuits, shall be scrupulously observed by this Company.

The abrogation or partial repeal of the Usury Laws, recognising the principle that "those who lend money are entitled to an equitable remuneration," and the Company will avail itself of the advantages to be derived by a fair, just, and honourable observance of this principle.

The business of the Deposit and Loan Bank will be divided into several departments—all of them to be conducted on such liberal scale, as will be consistent with the accommodation of the public generally, and the protection of the interests of the Shareholders.

Among the advantages to the Shareholders, it is intended that every one holding five or more Shares may make deposits of money at any time with the Company (agreeably to a scale hereafter to be determined), for which he shall be entitled to, and shall receive as interest thereon, 5*l.* per cent. per annum. And such Shareholders (holding two or more shares) who require pecuniary accommodation, shall always be entitled thereto, and shall not be called upon for a higher rate of interest than 7*l.* per cent. per annum, upon any loan they may obtain by the deposit of their goods, &c., as security.

Arrangements are making to extend to the Provinces the benefits offered by this Company, Branches of which will be established in most of the principal Towns throughout the Empire.

Applications for Shares to be addressed (post paid) to the Secretary.

W. MONTAGUE, Secretary.

PORTSMOUTH, August 12.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Sovereign transport arrived on Saturday from Halifax, with a few invalids and condemned ordnance stores. She has gone on to Woolwich. The Cracker has sailed to cruize off Brighton. There has not been any other naval movement during the week. The Madagascar went sails this day, and will go out of harbour on Monday. She has been delayed in consequence of a defect in her capstan. Pique and Inconstant are getting on but slowly for want of seamen; they have their top-masts up, and are fitting the lower rigging. Victory and Volcano are in the basin in the hands of the dock-yard artificers. The Herefordshire and Cornatic have sailed this week for Bombay. The Wellington came in from the river on Thursday to take on board her passengers for Madras.—Ships in Port.—Britannia, Inconstant, Victory, Madagascar, Pique, Royal George yacht, Excellent, Beacon.

WOOLWICH DOCK-YARD, August 12th.—(From our own Correspondent).—The Rhadamanthus st.-v. stepped her foremast on Friday afternoon, and the Yard riggers commenced setting up her rigging. She is being fitted up with all possible despatch. It is expected that Commander Evans (her former Captain) will again have her. At 3 o'clock, P.M., the funeral of Atkinson the policeman took place, he was borne to the grave by eight of his comrades, four being pall-bearers; 2 divisions followed, consisting of 16 men, 2 serjeants, and 2 Inspectors (Messrs. Aldrich and Appleby), Lieut. Pearse, the Director of Police, also attended in undress uniform. As the gallant officer subsequently informed the men, it was no part of his duty so to do, but he so acted to give the force a due estimation for respectability in the eyes of the towns-people, as this was the first casualty in it since its formation under him. An immense concourse of the "natives" were assembled to witness the procession, and the churchyard was literally crammed. The Alban st.-v., Lieut. Tinling, returned here on Monday, and was immediately warped into the basin. She will require and have new boilers. Lightning, Admiralty st.-yt., Lieut. Shambler, has hauled out of the basin (where she has been lying better than 4 months) on Tuesday, and brought up alongside the Salsette hulk, to take on board her stores. She is thoroughly painted and fitted, and only requires the aid of the civil engineers to connect her engines. The Firefly st.-v., Lieut. J. Pearse, is being rigged as fast as possible by what hands she has, as she is still entering men; great praise is due to the yard engineers for their exertions on her wheels and engines. Intelligence is looked for here as to how the Pluto st.-v. "behaves herself" under the two heavy guns which have been placed on her quarter-deck and forecastle, they having been mounted in accordance with the opinion of the master-shipwright. He contends that it will prevent her rolling so much as hitherto; but a great number differ with him. The Alban st.-v., Lieut. Tinling, will not be paid off as has been reported, but after she has got new boilers will go to the Mediterranean. Rennie, tender, came up from Sheerness on Wednesday and sailed again on Thursday. Ships in the Port—William and Mary yt., Capt. Sir S. Warren, C. B., K., C.H., Lightning, Admiralty st.-yt., Lieut. Shambler. In Dock—Blazer. In Basin—Alban st.-v., Lieut. Tinling, Rhadamanthus, Confiance, Echo, Flamer, Firefly, Lieut. J. Pearse, and Messenger, Mr. J. King.

MILFORD HAVEN, August 10th.—(From our own Correspondent).—The Skylark revenue cutter, Lieut. Palmer, returned to this port last week, with the loss of bowsprit and topmast, which she carried away in a heavy sea off the Bishops. She is now undergoing a refit in Hubberstone Pill. The Carysfort, and sister ship to the Cleopatra, constructed by Capt. Sir Wm. Symonds, will be launched from Pembroke yard on the ensuing Friday. Visiting that establishment this week, I was struck with want of accommodation existing in the military guard-house there. The guard-officers and men are crammed into a common work-shed. This is the more extraordinary, as money has been granted both for building a guard-house as well as a residence for the director of police, who at present is obliged to live out of the dock-yard, and is consequently allowed a certain sum in lieu of a house. The members of the Admiralty having highly deprecated the plan of applying money for one service which had been voted by Parliament for another, will not surely use the 2000*l.* mentioned in this year's navy estimate, page 40, for any other than "for a guard-house and surgery," as there mentioned. There is a large ship in the offing, which is supposed to be the Musgrave, 74, from Plymouth, for our quarantine station. There is to be a regatta here on Wednesday next, of which Capt. Deans, R.N., Inspecting Commander of the district, is Steward. The gallant Capt. is also to take the chair at the public dinner in the evening. The Coast-guard, under the inspection of Capt. Deans, is in a most efficient state. At Pembroke Dock there is a station, superintended by Lieut. Connor, R.N.; and along the southern cliffs of the county, which border the Bristol Channel, and which used to be such a notorious place for smuggling, men are placed at short distances, by which the hitherto extensive contraband trade has been almost entirely destroyed. The Mountaineer steamer is now under weigh for Liverpool. She calls here on her passage to and from Bristol and Liverpool, which proves a means of great facility in removing to either of these important towns from this place and neighbourhood. As considerable difficulty would arise in executing the rraegements entered into at Pembroke yard in case of fire, om so many of the workmen residiog at a considerable atance from their employ, should such an event happeo night, it is expected the Board of Admiralty, et their approachieg visit, will have their attention drawo to the subject. the rules drawo up every officer has a particular station lotted to him in case of fire, eod each company of shipwrights, and every gang of labourers, have their stated places ointed out. These rules could not be properly brought to operatioo, for half the men reside across the water, and places far distant, even on the same side the river.

PLYMOUTH, 11th August.—Vice-Adm. Lord A. Beauclerk entertained the Capt. eod Officers of the Brazilian orvette, Dous de Julho, eod a large party, at the Admiralty House, oo Wednesday evening last. H.M.S. Endymion, 50, Capt. Sir S. Roberts, had arrived at Vigo on 9th June, having returned from a cruise in search of some ardioian vessels reported to be on the coast with Miguelites on board, but no such vessels were seen or heard of. Cosmus, 18, Capt. Hamilton, came into harbour on Wedesday to be paid off. Drake, lighter, sailed on Wedoesday with stores for the eastern yards. Tortoise, lighter, sailed on Saturday with stores for Falmouth. The Portsouth Buoy Boat arrived here on Saturday with newly raised eamen. Fly, 18, Com. R. Eliot, is ordered to be docked. Fulgrave, 74 (lazarette), is ready, eod will sail the first air wind, for Pembroke. Satellite, 18, is ordered to be rought forward for sea service. Moorings are ordered to e prepared for two frigates at Gibraltar, and for the Alliator, 28, at Alexandria, where they are to be stationed as nal depots. Minden, 74, sailed on Wedoesday, and Hercules, 74, on Sunday morning, to join the squadroo under r C. Paget. Emerald, yt., and Partridge, tender, which ad arrived from the Eastward, also sailed on Friday eod aturday. The squadron under the command of Rear-dm. the Hon. Sir C. Paget, consisting of the Bellerophon, 0; Vanguard, 80; Pembroke, 74; Minden, 74; Hercules, 74; and Cornwallis, 74; with the Scylla, 18; eod Emerald yt., came to anchor in the Sound on Monday. Hercules put to sea again yesterday morning, eod proceeded to the eastward.

The Carysfort, 26, a sister ship of the Vestal, just aunched at Pembroke, is ordered to be fitted at Plymouth, nd will be shortly commissioned. Great competition exists r the command of this and all other ships of Sir Wm. ymonds's construction.

It is rumoured that the St. Vincent will be shortly commissioned for the Mediterranean, in consequeoce of the Caledonia being ordered home.

Considerable astonishmeot has been excited at Portsouth in consequence of orders having been recived to cut own the quarter-deck and forecastle ports of the Inconstant, as to admit of carronade slides. It is reported that, though built for the express porpose of competing with Iqux and Castor, she is considered too weak to carry the me armament as those ships, and that in place of 42 cwt. 2-pounders, she also receive either 17 cwt. carronades, or 25 rt. gunnades, on her quarter-deck and forecastle. Should this be the case, it will give her a great advaotage in light winds, nd going free, as she has the same spread of canvas as e rival ships.

While the Comus, which has arrived at Plymouth, was ing off Tampico, she lost an officer and two of her crew, the upsetting of a boat, in crossing the bar. On the at's going over, two of the crew clung to the bottom, but r. C. R. Price, mate (son of Mr. W. Price, Surgeon of .M.S. Excellent), and the other two of the crew, named hn Aishton and Henry Baker, were drowned. The two en who were saved, were 36 hours in the water, and drifted miles outright of land, when they were again driven here by a change in the wind to N.E.

It is understood that the Dock-yard craft will shortly be ced under the command of Second Masters, and the ews be borne on the books of the ships bearing the penant of the respective Captains of the Ordinary.

The additional half-pay to Pursers will be granted to ch only as declare themselves fit and willing for active ploy. To such officers as fail to satisfy the Admiralty of eir inability to continue active service, either by infirmity former service, the increase will not be granted; and ch of such cases must undergo a fresh medical examiation.

The officer in command of the Coast Guard station at oreham having been ordered to remove to the station at ngston, in the port of Arundel, was proceeding thither on onday, in a galley, containing his trunks and luggage, ing with him three of the men belonging to the station, mes Boyden, Barrett, and Tyrrell. When off Goting a all suddenly came on and capsized the boat, and the ree men above named all perished. The officer escaped clinging to the galley, whence he was taken in a state great exhaustion by a pilot-boat.

Mr. Brown, Master, R.N. (late Romney), Inspector of arrant officers' accounts, Somerset House, is appointed sistant-master attendant at Chatham (vice Lothian proted), under the same pay and regulations. Mr. Brown succeeded in his late situation, and under the same regulations, by Mr. Benjamin Hunter, master of the Prince Regent yacht, fitting at Deptford for the Imaum of Muscat. The yacht will proceed very soon for her destination, under command of Capt. Corgen, who brought the Liverpool now Imaum, 74, to England. The yacht is now rigged and lies in the Basin, Deptford, where her splendid gilding renders her well worthy of a visit.

Mr. Penny, foreman of Sheerness Dock-yard and Model-loft, has superannuated on 150*l*. per annum.

Capt. Coryton, Royal Marines, Woolwich, to recruiting, Norwich.

The Firefly, steamer, Lieut. Pearse, at Woolwich, will be all complete for sea last week in Aug.

Mr. Wm. Ellis, of Woolwich, to be foreman of labourers at Bermuda, and has sailed with four labourers for that place this week.

The Prince Regent, transport, was all well at Corfu end of June. The Jupiter, 50, will leave Iodia beginning of next month.

The Ocean, 80., at Sheerness, is to be fitted in every respect to enable her to receive the Admiral's flag, should any circumstances occur to send the Howe to sea.

One of the large docks communicating with the Basin, Sheerness, is widening so as to admit the largest class of men-of-war, and be equal to the largest dock in Portsmouth.

"The Vanguard, of 80 guns, and 2589 tons, has been beaten on all points by the Bellerophon, of 80 guns, and 2056 tons."—Plymouth Journal.—[Capital! Our contemporary is endeavouring to hoax his readers, and we are only surprised that he has not quoted the Admiral commanding the fleet as his authority. The Vanguard has beaten all the ships. See our remarks elsewhere.—ED.]

Mr. Deane brought up four guns on Thursday from the buoy off part of Spithead, where it is supposed the Mary Rose was sunk about three centuries ago; two of these guns iron; one about fifteen feet long.

Mr. James Turton (1814) has been appointed Master of the Temeraire for duties of the ordinary and pilotage of Sheerness.

The following midshipmen passed for Lieutenants at the Naval College on Tuesday:—Mr. Benjamin Francis Helpman, late Rapid; George Templeman Kingston, Tyne; Lauchlan Bellingham Mackinnon, late Ocean; Arthur Tower, Pique; Samuel Fowell, Rolla; Samuel Pritchard, Madagascar; Shirly Apthorp, Russel; Edwin Thomas Hendre, Excellent; John Bradly, Britannia.

2d Life Guards—On Tuesday this regt. under the command of the Hon. Col. E. P. Lygoe, C.B., were reviewed in the north part of the Home Park, Windsor, immediately beneath the North-terrace. There were six carriages from the Castle, in the first of which were the King, the Queen, the Princess Augusta, and Prince Ernest of Hesse Philippsthal. Sir A. Barnard, Sir C. Thornton, and the ladies and gentlemen in the suite of their Majesties and of the Princess Augusta were in the other carrioges. Lord Hill and several officers of his staff were present. The regt. went through various movements, performing the sword exercise, &c., and concluded by advancing in parade order, the band playing "God save the King." His Majesty spoke in the highest terms of encomium on the precision with which the various evolutions were performed, and on the general appearance of the regiment. The ground was kept by the 7th Hussars and a guard of the Royal Reg. of Horse Guards and of the 7th Foot. Three military bands were in attendance. In the evening the King entertained the whole of the Officers of the Life Guards and the Commanding Officers of the Blues and 7th Fusiliers, with a grand banquet. The magnificent gold service was used on the occasion. The Hall was decorated with the colours, and in the Music Galleries were stationed the bands of the regiments.

Coldstream Guards, 1st. batt.—The right wing on board the Albion steamer arrived at Dublin from Bristol on the 7th inst., and disembarked.

1st Foot, 1st Batt.—On arrival from the West Indies last spring, their former distinguished commanding officer, General the Duke of Gordon, had a splendid pair of colours wrought for this veteran and gallant corps, with the usual honorary devices, elegantly impressed, descriptive of the many glorious battle fields in which the Royals bled and conquered. The noble and gallant Duke did not, however, survive to witness the presentation of the new colours, a ceremony which it is probable will shortly take place.

2d—Capt. Grecoville is appointed Aide-de-Camp to Maj.-Gen. Sir George Elder, on the staff of the army in Madras.

6th—Col. Sullivan has taken the command of his corps at Bombay, from England, and Lieut. Tighe, Ensign Blackly and Atkins have also joined.

Several noblemen and gentlemen of the Household are invited. Lieut. Whitmore is appointed to the Salisbury recruiting station v. Lieut. Primrose, 36th, transferred to Bristol. Yesterday his Majesty had again the Fusiliers in the north part of the Little Park in marching order, when they underwent a close inspection. This highly disciplined regiment afterwards went through a variety of manœuvres, much to the satisfaction of the King.

8th—The Paymastership is vacant by the death of Capt. Hill, who fell a victim in two days to fever at Up Park Camp, Jamaica.

11th—were healthy at Barbadoes by the last accounts.

17th—Lieut. Owen is appointed Town Adjutant at Van Diemen's Land.

Among the prisoners made at Arroyo de Molenos were the French 34th, taken chiefly by the British 34th. The drums and the baton of the Drum-Major are still with the English 34th.

35th—The comp. ordered from Macroom, and the detachment from Shibbereen to Cork, to be withdrawn.

81st.—Lieut.-Col. Maclean has sailed for the Mediterranean.

89th.—Advices from Trinidad represent the service corps to be very unhealthy after their late removal from Barbadoes. Dr. Barry has fallen a victim to fever. Also a Subaltern of the regiment, and a Captain's wife. Sickness was proportionably great and fatal amongst the non-commissioned officers and privates. Lieut.-Col. Doherty has arrived from the West Indies.

90th.—The Valleyfield tr., from Cork to Ceylon, with the first division under Major Slade, arrived out, after a tedious passage, early in March.

Royal Artillery, Head Quarters.—A bell tent and two marquees were pitched on the barrack field on Saturday last, as the officers played a match at cricket with the Mary-le-bone club; at the close of the day, as the match was not finished, the Mary-le-bone club were 128, and the Artillery officers only 121; yet they can howl a good ball, to judge by the practice at the mortar battery on Mondey and Tuesday, both round shot (from howitzers) and shell being in requisition. On the latter day, however, the shells were thrown "rather wide."—Lieut.-Col. J. Jones, A.D.A.-Gen., has joined from leave. Major Bissett's company, 6th battalion, go into the field batteries, vice Capt. Wilson's. The Commandant, Maj.-Gen. Maclean, is going on leave of absence, and the command of the garrison devolves on Maj.-Gen. Dixon. Serjeant Wilkinson and the remainder of the band have volunteered, by permission of Col. Drummond, C.B., to attend a bazaar or fancy fair, which is to be held in the romantic roughs belonging to the widow of the late Lieut. Tanswell, on the 25th inst. The proceeds are to be added to a fund which has been some time collecting from a subscription got up by the benevolent exertions of Mrs. Tanswell, and a daughter of the late Maj.-Gen. Dixon, for the purpose of making an allowance to the gunners' wives during the transit of their husbands to a foreign station, until whose safe arrival is reported the women are left destitute with the families. The affair is likely to "come off" very productive, as the elite of the garrison have promised their support and patronage, including the officers in the port. The corps went through a drill field day in infantry evolutions on Wednesday, and exhibited a very decided improvement in firing, and steadiness under arms. Lieut.-Col. Forbes is appointed to command the Artillery in the south western district of Great Britain, in succession to Lieut.-Col. Gilmour, placed on retired list. The co. of the eighth batt., under command of Capt. Stephens, with Lieuts. Gilbert and Francklyn, have gone to Athlone, to replace Major Blachley's troop of the Horse Brigade, gone to Dublin. The ordnance guns in charge of Capt. Stephens' co. comprise three six pounders, and 24lb howitzer, with all the necessary materials.

Royal Horse Artillery.—Capt. Saunders and troop, with Lieuts. Wardn and Taylor, have replaced Capt. Stephens' comp. at the Ordnance barracks, Limerick.

After marching past in review order, &c., the inspecting officer took each troop seperately and put them through a number of evolutions, which were executed in a manner better than could be expected from men so seldom together.

Capt. N. Boyes is appointed Barrack-master at Gresham's town, Cape of Good Hope, in place of Lieut. Griffiths; Capt. Mackinnon is appointed Barrack-master at Stoneyhill, and Port Royal, Jamaica, in place of Lieut. Matheson, deceased; and Capt. Lieut. Deacon, 19th, succeeded Lieut. Taylor, 65th Reg., as Fort Adjutant at Barbadoes.

There is a report that the King intends to confer the Guelphic Order on many Officers holding the rank of Captains and Lieutenants.

The following depots compose the Provisional Battalion at Chatham under Col Weare, K.H.:—Depots of the 2d, 3d, 4th, 6th, 9th, 13th, 16th, 17th, 20th, 21st, 26th, 28th, 31st, 39th, 40th, 41st, 44th, 45th, 49th, 50th, 54th, 55th, 57th, 62d, 63d. Of these depots the fixed establishment is 1 Captain, 4 Serjeants, 4 Corporals, and 1 Drummer. To these company depots recruits are sent from the several districts which are raised for the regiments in India when they fall below their regulated number. The recruits are embarked for India yearly, in June and July, and with them the officers returning from sick leave, leave on private affairs, or on appointment. From 70 to 80 officers proceed thus to join their regiments. It is generally thought that the wishes of the Lieut.-Cols. in India are averse to the system of indulgence pursued towards the officers appointed Ensigns, who are frequently permitted to remain at Chetham a whole year prior to joining their regiments. It has been frequently noticed that young men who proceed to join the head-quarters direct are better disposed to learn their duty than those who have only a smattering acquired at the depot.

The 80th regiment, now in Chatham, has been considerably reduced by embarkation of the Guards over convicts. On the 6th inst., Lieut. Stewart of the Buffs, Lieut. Skully, and 29 men of the 80th, embarked for N. S. Wales; and on the 13th inst., Captain West, 80th, Ensign Eman, 41st, and 29 men, 80th, will embark for Van Diemen's Land.

A melancholy occurrence took place at the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, on Thursday last. A party of gentlemen cadets were bathing, and one of them, named —— Dick, was unfortunately drowned; prompt assistence was afforded, but the utmost medical skill failed to restore the vital spark.

We stated some time since that a party of Turkish gentlemen were under the direction of Maj. Dundas, R.N., and Assistant Inspector of the field train, studying the science of gunnery. The variation of our uncertain climate has within a few days proved fatal to one of them.

The Duke of Wellington and Lord Hill dine with the Junior United Service Club, this day. The Duke will leave town next week on a tour.

Head-Qrs. of the Army in Jamaica:—Royal Artillery, Port Royal; 8th Regt., Up Park; 22d, Stony Hill; 37th, Maroon Town; 56th, Falmouth; 64th, Fort Augusta, and all pretty healthy. Lieut.-Col. Nicholl, Ensigns Locy and Reynolds, 84th, have arrived out; also, Capt. Wood, 37th, Capt. Tiling, 64th, and Mr. Kelly, Master 64th Band; Capt. Dillon, 64th, Stipendiary Magistrate, was detached from Clarendon on duty to Dry Harbour mountains. Dr. Black, 84th Regt., had sailed for England on leave.

The Master Gen. of the Ordnance and the Surveyor Gen. proceed on an official tour to the stations of their department, immediately after the prorogation of Parliament.

Maj.-Gen. Lord F. Somerset held a Levee at the Horse Guards on Tuesday, which was attended by several officers of distinction.

The following depots are without Captains at present:—the 2d, 3d, 13th, 16th, 17th, 26th, 40th, 44th, 45th, 62d, and 63d. The young officers of these regiments, who join the depots, have frequently to seek advice and guidance from the Captains of other depots. What are the Colonels of those corps about that they do not remedy this evil? We know that they receive monthly returns; but do they open them? No,—"there's the rub!"

Assist.-Surgeon Dartnell, of the hospital staff, has been removed from the garrison of Montreal, Lower Canada, to take the medical charge of that of Penetenguishene, on the coast of Lake Huron, Upper Canada.

East India Intelligence.

The mails from Madras, the Cape of Good Hope and Ascension, were burnt in the Premier, from Madras to London, which we reported last week as having been totally destroyed off the Isle of Ascension, on the 30th May.

A deputation consisting of the following leading gentlemen connected with India, (Mr. Hutt as leader), Lord W. Bentinck, Messrs. Crawford, Morrison, Ewart, Lock, Thornely, Bagshaw, Kerr, Arbuthnot, Colvin, Palmer, Woolley, Thornhurn, Daniell, De Vitre, Grant, Bonar, Adams, Major Head, Capt. Alsager, Thornton, Barber, Larkins and Nairn, had an interview at the Board of Control, with Sir John Cam Hobhouse, the chairman and deputy chairman of the East India Company, on the subject of a regular and expeditious communication by steam with India, via, the Red sea; and a plan adequate to the accomplishment of the desired object was submitted for their consideration. It is now expected, that this project will be carried into effect. It is wholly independent of the steam vessels now preparing to proceed to India by the Cape of Good Hope, which are designed to form a part of the Indian navy. Petitions from India, supported by the strongest influence, have been opportunely transmitted to this country, and laid before Parliament during the past week.

Literary Notices.

Sketches of English Literature; with Considerations on the Spirit of the Times, Men, and Revolutions. By the Viscount de Chateaubriand. 2 vols. H. Colburn.

The author of "Atala" and the "Genie de Christianisme," is unquestionably the most eloquent of French writers, and we are not far wrong when we add that he is also the vainest—Milton, Byron, and other great men are his parallels; but we must excuse all this in a Frenchman, whose vanity has been so continually fed by his countrymen: he has been their ideal of genius, and of all that is great and good, and we do not think that the series of essays he has now produced will diminish the estimation of his character. These volumes are certainly both remarkable and amusing. M. de C. tells us that he has not kept close to his subject; he has treated of everything:—the present, the past, the future;

"I digress hither and thither. When I meet with the middle ages, I talk of them; when I run foul of the reformation, I dwell upon it; when I come to the English revolution, it reminds me of our own, and I advert to the actors and the events of the latter. If an English royalist is thrown into gaol, I think of the cell which I occupied at the prefecture of police. The English poets lead me to the French poets; Lord Byron brings to my recollection my exile in England, my walks to Harrow Hill, and my travels to Venice—and so of the rest. The book is composed of miscellanies which have all tones, because they relate to all things: they pass from literary criticism, lofty or familiar, to historical observations, narratives, portraits, and recollections, general or personal. That I may not take any one by surprise, that the reader may know from the first what he has to expect, that he may be aware that English Literature forms but the ground of my medley, the canvas for my embroidery, I have given a second title to this work."

We will now take at random some specimens which will justify our praise of the work.

Reputation.—"Truth formerly had great difficulty to spread itself; it lacked a vehicle; the daily and free press was not then in existence; the literati formed a separate world; their estimate of each other was scarcely known to the public. Now, that assailing or admiring journals sound the charge of victory, a person must be very unlucky not to know during his life time his precise value. With these contradictory sentences, if our glory commences sooner, it also finishes sooner; in the morning an eagle, at night a hittern. Such is human estate, particularly in France: if we possess any talents, we take the greatest pains to depreciate them. After raising them to the pinnacle, we roll them in the mud; we then recover our former position, and then degrade ourselves afresh. Who has not for a few years past seen opinions change twenty times concerning the same name? Is there then at present any thing certain and true upon earth? We know not what to believe: we hesitate about every thing, we doubt every thing; the strongest convictions in the morning are extinguished before night. We cannot endure reputations; all admiration seems to be a robbery of us; our vanities take umbrage at the least success, and if it lasts any time, they are on the sack. We are right glad, at the bottom of our hearts, when a man of merit happens to die; it is one rival the fewer: the provoking noise made about him prevented our hearing that of the fools and the creaking concert of mediocrities. We hasten to pack up the celebrated defunct in two or three newspaper articles; we then cease to mention him; we never more open his works; we solder up his frame in his books as we do his body in his coffin, despatching the whole to eternity through the medium of time and death. Now-a-days, every thing grows old in a few hours; reputation fades, a work passes away in a moment. Poetry has the same fate as music: its voice, fresh at dawn, is hoarse at sunset. Every one writes! nobody reads seriously. A name uttered three times annoys one."

Though Bonaparte entertained towards De Chateaubriand the strongest feeling of hostility, we have the following liberal estimate of the Emperor:—

Napoleon.—"When Napoleon for the second time quitted France, it was asserted that he ought to have buried himself under the ruins of his last battle. Lord Byron in his satirical ode against Napoleon, says:

> 'To die a prince—or live a slave,
> Thy choice is most ignobly brave.'

This was an incorrect estimate of the hope still kindling in a soul accustomed to dominion and thirsting after the future. Lord Byron imagined that the dictator of kings had abdicated his fame with his sword, that he was about to die away in utter oblivion: Lord Byron should have known that the destiny of Napoleon was a muse, like all other great destinies; this muse knew how to change an abortive catastrophe into a sudden turn of fortune, which would have revived and imparted fresh youth to its hero. The solitude of Napoleon in his exile and in his tomb, has thrown another kind of spell over a brilliant memory. Alexander did not die in sight of Greece; he disappeared amid the pomp of distant Babylon: Bonaparte did not close his eyes in the presence of France; he passed away in the gorgeous horizons of the torrid zone. The man who had shown himself in such powerful reality vanished like a dream; his life, which belonged to history, co-operated in the poetry of his death. He now sleeps for ever, like a hermit or a paria, beneath a willow, in a narrow valley surrounded by steep rocks, at the extremity of a lonely path. The depth of the situation which presses upon him can only be compared to the vastness of that tumult which had surrounded him. Nations are absent, their throng has retired. The bird of the tropics, harnessed to the car of the sun, as Buffon magnificently expresses it, speeding his flight downwards from the planet of light, rests alone for a moment over ashes, the weight of which has shaken the equilibrium of the globe. Bonaparte crossed the ocean to repair to his final exile, regardless of that beautiful sky which delighted Columbus, Vasco de Gama, and Camoens; stretched upon the ship's store, he perceived not that unknown constellations were sparkling over his head; his powerful glance for the first time encountered their rays. What to him were stars which he had never seen from his bivouacs, and which had never shone over his empire? Nevertheless, not one of them has failed to fulfil its destiny; one half of the firmament spread its light over his cradle; the other half was reserved to illuminate his tomb."

The Despatches of Field-Marshal the Duke of Wellington. Compiled by Lieut.-Colonel Gurwood. Vol. VI. John Murray.

We hail with more than ordinary pleasure the publication of another volume of this invaluable collection of Correspondence, private and official, of our most consummate General; a correspondence of which we may say with truth that every line is characteristic of the master-mind of the Duke of Wellington, and honourable to his head and heart. Many of the letters are splendid compositions;—and evidence of the unremitting anxiety of the Duke for the honour and welfare of his troops, and his confidence in them and himself may be gathered from every page. Sincerely do we wish, for the benefit of the service, that we could transfer a considerable portion of this work to our columns; but we must be content to select a few passages and letters that will interest all military men. The present volume includes from April to the end of November, 1810, perhaps the most important period of the Peninsular War.

Deserters from the Enemy.—"I request you to pay Senor Echevarria all the expenses which he has incurred for the encouragement of desertion from the French army, and for the support of deserters, and to tell him that I request him to encourage desertion by the following measures. Let him send trusty persons to assure soldiers in the French army, induced to desert, that they shall be received here and treated in every respect as British soldiers; that their arms and horses, if they should bring them, shall be bought from them and paid for; that they shall have their option of enlisting into the British service or not; that if they choose to enlist they shall receive a bounty, and shall have the choice of enlisting into any of the foreign corps with this army, or in England; and that if they do not choose to enlist, measures shall be taken to send them out of the Peninsula, and to facilitate their return to their own country. I request that all deserters may be sent to the head-quarters of the army, and all expenses incurred on their account shall be paid."

Desertions from the British Army.—"The desertion from nearly all the regiments in this army must have appeared extraordinary to the Commander-in-Chief, and must have given him as much concern as it has to me. Till lately, desertion from a British army on service was a crime almost unknown; and I am concerned to add, that I have reason to believe that many of those who have deserted have been guilty of the worst description of that offence, and have gone over to the enemy. I attribute the prevalence of this crime in a great measure to the bad description of men of which many of the regiments are composed almost entirely, and who have been received principally from the Irish militia. A sufficient time has not elapsed since these men have entered the regiments of the line, to form their habits to regularity and discipline; the non-commissioned officers, in the second battalions principally, are very bad; and I am sorry to add that the subaltern officers are not of the best description, and that I do not think so much attention has been given by them as might have been expected to form either the non-commissioned officers or the soldiers to those habits of regularity which a soldier ought to have."

Further Crimes.—"A detachment seldom marches, particularly if under the command of a non-commissioned officer (which rarely happens), that a murder or a highway robbery, or some act of outrage is not committed by the British soldiers composing it. They have killed eight people since the army returned to Portugal in December; and I am sorry to add that a convoy has seldom arrived with money that the chests have not been broken open, and some of the money stolen by the soldiers in whose charge it was placed, although invariably under the command of an officer; and they have never brought up either shoes or other necessaries which could be of use to them, or which they could sell, that they have not stolen some of the articles committed to their charge. The orders to the army, and the Provost's establishment, which is larger than was ever known with any British army, will shew the pains which the General Officers, the Commanding Officers of regiments, and I have taken to prevent the commission of these crimes, which, indeed, are not very frequent at the regiments, although they are committed sometimes even there; and the General Courts-Martial which have been assembled, and sitting almost constantly while the army has been halted, and sometimes as many as three sitting at the same time in the different cantonments of the army, will shew the pains which have been taken to convict and punish those who have been guilty of these crimes. But the inhabitants of the country have such a respect and affection for the British nation, and particularly for the military qualities of the soldier, (who presumes upon his military reputation to commit many of the crimes of which he is guilty,) that it is most difficult to prevail upon the inhabitants to give testimony of the injuries they have received, and they will rarely point out the person who has committed the offence; and the soldiers themselves will rarely tell the truth before a Court-Martial. The sentences of the Courts-Martial are also carried into execution; so that everything that precaution and discipline could do to prevent crimes, and that trial and execution of sentences could do to punish those who have been guilty of them, has been done, but hitherto without much success. I am concerned to be obliged to make to the Commander-in-Chief so unfavourable a report of an army which has shown that it possesses many excellent qualities; but it contains facts which ought not to be concealed from his knowledge."

And again—

"Several have lately been convicted before General Courts-Martial, and have been executed, an example which I hope will have effect, as well upon the officers as the men. Upon the former I hope it will operate to induce them to take more pains to keep their men in order, and support the authority of the non-commissioned officers, and to instil into them a proper sense of their situation and duty; and I hope it will convince the latter that I possess the power, and am determined to exert it to punish those who are guilty of those disgraceful outrages. I am still apprehensive of the consequences of trying them in any nice operation before the enemy, for they really forget everything when plunder or wine is within their reach."

Definitions of Military Law.—"It, as applied to any persons, excepting the officers, soldiers, and followers of the army, for whose government there are particular provisions of law in all well-regulated countries, is neither more nor less than the will of the General of the army. He punish either with or without trial, for crimes either declared to so, or not so declared by any existing law, or by his o orders. This is the plain and common meaning of the te military law. Besides the mode of proceeding above d scribed, laws have been made in different countries different times to establish and legalise a description of mil tary constitution. The Commander-in-Chief, or the gover ment, has been authorised to proceed by military proce that is, by Court-Martial or Council of War, against pe sons offending against certain laws, or against their o orders, issued generally for the security of the army, or the establishment of a certain government or constituti edious to the people among whom it is established. both descriptions of military law there are numerous i stances in the history of the operations of the French arm during the Revolution; and there is an instance of t existence both of the first-mentioned description and of t last-mentioned in Ireland during the rebellion of 179 when the people were in insurrection against the gover ment, and were to be restrained by force."

"Alverca, 23d July, 1810.

"My dear General,—I received in the night your let of the 22d. I have been much annoyed by the foolish co versations and reports and private letters, about the 16 Light Dragoons. General Cotton wrote to me shortly af the affair of the 11th, to request that the conduct of th regiment might be inquired into; to which I replied, that your report you had not made any charge against the 16 and that it would not be just towards that regiment to ma their conduct the object of inquiry, for a failure which a peared to me to have been produced by various unfortun accidents, which could not be prevented. . . Two three days afterwards, General Cotton came here, and t me he had traced some of these reports and conversation General ——. Upon which I had General —— and h before me. After having pointed out to the former the convenience and impropriety of a person in his situat circulating any reports about the troops, I declared my termination, if I heard any more of it, to oblige him come forward with a charge against the 16th. So matter stands here. . . In respect to the business it it appeared to me from the first that it would and must h succeeded, notwithstanding the gallantry and steadines the French infantry, if various accidents had not preve the execution of the plan, as first formed; and I have st this as my opinion in the report which I have made u the business. . . Your own report points out clearly variations from the original plan, and the different a dents which occurred in the execution, among which, certainly must be classed the charge of the 1st squadron of 16th, to the left of the Hussars; and the delay between first charge by Talbot, owing to the 1st and 2d squadron the 16th having gone off after the cavalry. But even t the infantry would not have got away, if the squadr coming out of Barquilla had not been taken for the ene . . . I can only say, that I have never seen an att by our troops in which similar, if not greater, accidents mistakes have not occurred, and in which orders have been given, for which no authority had proceeded from Commander, and in which there were not correspond accidents and failures. This is to be attributed to the experience of our officers, and I must add, to some go qualities in them, as well as in the troops. . . All t would not much signify, if our Staff and other officers wo mind their business, instead of writing news and keepi coffee-houses. But as soon as an accident happens, ev man who can write, and who has a friend who can re sits down to write his account of what he does not kn and his comments on what he does not understand, these are diligently circulated and exaggerated by the i and malicious, of whom there are plenty in all armies. T consequence is, that officers and whole regiments lose th reputation, a spirit of party, which is the bane of all armi is engendered and fermented, a want of confidence ensu and there is no character, however meritorious, and no tion, however glorious, which can have justice done to it have hitherto been so fortunate as to keep down this sp in this army, and I am determined to persevere. . . respect to the 16th Light Dragoons, they appear to affair to have conducted themselves with the spirit alacrity of soldiers. They failed in the intelligence, coolness, and order, which can be acquired only by exp ance; but it would be too hard to impute to them, al the failure of complete success, which may be traced li wise to other accidental circumstances; and it would equally cruel to allow the reputation of this regiment t whispered away by ignorance, idleness, and slander. and I agree entirely upon the whole matter, and I h gone into this detail just to explain to you what has pa here, and upon what principle I have acted.

Ben Brace; the Last of Nelson's Agamemnons. By Capt. Chamier, R.N. Author of "The Life of a Sailor," &c. Second Edition, with new Introduction, Songs, &c., and George Cruikshank's Illustrations. R. Bentley.

Captain Chamier's literary reputation has been greatly ised by "Ben Brace." A vein of rich humour runs roughout this story, relieving the more serious parts in n happiest manner, and carrying the reader with still creasing pleasure even to the end of the work. So ng as the name of Nelson is dear to Englishmen (and will be in the recollection of our readers that this story letes the life of this great chief, from his boyhood to s glorious death off Trafalgar), so long will this tional work be popular.

The following humorous letter from Ben to the thor we extract from the introduction to the second ition:—

"Greenwich Hospital, March.

"Sir,—As it's blowing great guns and small arms, top sails and marling spikes with their points downwards, ve got swog in my own cabbin, and am about to tell you hat I think of my Life. I'm much obliged to you, sir, or what I am—because I think it was my due. A an that has served under Nelson is somebody, even now, nen sailors drink tea, have no tails, wear no buckles, and e giving over baccy—except in pipes: smoke is all they ve now—the navy's all smoke, from the marine's trou- rs fresh pipe-clayed for Sunday's muster, to the top of the ok's funnal. There's one of those Reviewing chaps— must be a soldier from the name—says he can't find any ng new about Nelson in my life: tell him to look again there's more new yarns, and true ones, about Trafalgar an ever be read before or ever will again, without they py my life. Well, I've something more to say, which is is—and I'll run it off the reel though the line is wet. y wife and I had a rumpus about the book, because when came down to Greenwich every mother's son and daughter the place got a look at it. Bless you, the copy we ked for at Greenwich is so worn out, that you must send second edition, as they call it in the library.—Well, that's t it either; but this is it:—As my old wife was steering ong by the gates, up gets a cloud of young ones and gives r three cheers. She thought it was a mobbing her—so e comes home and swears she'll trip her anchor and be off Exeter. I told her she had better 'clear hawse' before e catted her anchor—and she'd have plenty of time to ss the messenger, for the roadsted was good, and the round mads for holding. She pays no attention to this, t she packs up for a full due, and says she, 'Ben, you'll me with me, won't you now?—So says I, 'Ma'am, I'm ased if I do—all the world come down to see me, and I all wait at home to receive them. What! Ben Brace out Greenwich Hospital?—never! Here I am—here I'll ck; and if any body wants to see me, if I'm out a walk- they've only got to ask anybody for Ben, for I'm in all ir memories—as my life has been in all their hands.'

a,—Now our most illustrious sovereign, lord, and master, s been graciously pleased to honour our Sailor-Surveyor the Navy with Knighthood, I feel assured that the jea- sy and envy of his traducers will fall into a lethargy, to ake no more with feelings of prejudice against the qua- ies of any one of his ships which he has launched to am the ocean, brave the whirlwind, withstand the pointed ck, to defend the standard of Great Britain and her do- ions. Several months have passed since I first respect- lly hinted my surprise, that the honour of Knighthood as withheld from a Sailor-Surveyor, when every previous urveyor from "THE SCHOOL OF MAUL" had been so ho- oured, as the customary insignia of the office of the Sur- eyor of the Navy. Whilst that honour was kept in reserve t was considered that our Sailor-Surveyor's peculiar art of shipbuilding met with the tacit disapprobation of our Sailor King, betrayed an appearance of apprehension at the Admiralty of the merits of his system, and kept the press in agitation, for and against it, since his appointment to the Surveyorship of the Navy; although, at every trial of each class of his ships and vessels, he so masterly and triumphantly exhibited his experience and practice as a seaman,—his scientific skill and acquirements as a shipwright.

If the Vanguard leads the ven of the experimental squadron under Sir Charles Paget, I shall not slumber (even after "wine and walnuts") tranquilly on my couch until the letters K.C.H. are spliced to the word KNIGHT, after the name of her renowned constructor, for I submit, that a Sailor-Surveyor is by right and justice entitled to an honourable and chivalric mark of distinction over the heads of these shipwright ORMENS, "the members of the school of Maul," who hacked, and hewed, and mauled out the spurious breeds of sea-asses, sea-mules, sea-hogs, sea-bears, and sea-boas *, which trotted or crowled on the seas from our royal arsenals, disgracing at once England's maritime art and pre-eminence, tarnishing her flag, wounding her honour, diminishing her fame and glory. Had the Vestal frigate and the Rover corvette been opposed to the Constitution, instead of the asinine Cyane, and the sea SARPENT, Levant, I "guess" there would have been "a pretty considerable" chance of a far different result.

Being (as it is supposed) a member of an amicable, humble, prideless society, I hope I shall not be counted, but one who speaks out boldly and unequivocally in suggestion, or in argument, what he feels and thinks to be true and fair, reasonable and proper, right and just, to enemy or friend, controvertist or opponent; therefore, friend Symonds, thou must not be out of temper with me, thy friend Tristram, if I revert once more to the masting of the razeed 74's, for, since our last tête-à-tête on that capsizing subject, I have read in the Naval and Military Gazette, that the Barham has been into MALTA to replace her sprung foremast, in which port, if I mistake not, she replaced her mainmast, when under the command of Sir H. Pigot. A mainmast sprung under one Captain, and a foremast under another, must convince all those who are convincible that the Barham, as a frigate, now drawing two feet less water, is over-masted with her original 74's masts, and deeper courses still; and also, since our last "converse sweet," I have read in the said Gazette that thy beauteous queen, Cleopatra, out-carries the Dublin, 50, another razeed 74. For these last two years I have proved to thee, by the repeated trials of the Alfred, Barham, and Dublin, with other ships, that they are incapable of carrying sail so long, or so safely as razees (under a greater spread of canvas and heavier rigging), than when 74's. Now, friend Symonds, as it is expected that the Alfred is to be shortly commissioned, why canst thou not direct her to be masted with the masts, yards, and sails, like those of the late double-decked 50's, Grampus, Salisbury, &c., and the difference of weight, between a 74's and 50's equipment, to be added to her ballast, which would not only save a great expense to our country, but make a razeed 74 turn to] windward, and carry sail like a Berwick smack.

"Among those knaves in these unblushing days, Who fabricate the lying song of praise;"

There is something so fascinating in a tête-à-tête, that I could commune with thee for ever, friend Symonds. Elevated as thy perfect system is in the opinion of thy brother officers, and in the maritime community of the kingdom, that system too supported by the enlightened and liberal majority of both Houses of Parliament, and copied by the rival Governments of France and America, thou mayst bid defiance to the envious tongue or pen of the disputent, or dispense with the fawning praise of the sycophant; thou hast extinguished the "school of Maule's ignis fatuus light of science," righted their boa-shaped sea-nondescripts, thrown on their beam-ends by their ever-shifting "ballast of scientific truth," and raised thyself to be what thou art—England's celebrated Royal Naval architect. After the triumph of the Vanguard, which I anticipate, pray permit me to cherish a hope, that thou wilt extend thy consideration to the mechanical (not the mathematical) shipwrights; to those skilful mechanics who have built thy models of beauty and symmetry, who now tread their native element in sylph-like forms, charming and enchanting the eyes and hearts of all beholders, as British beauties, "the fairest of the fair," with their modest air and gait, honour and grace their native land.

Angelic creatures! When embarked in steam-vessels which are not surveyed, classed, and registered in "Lloyd's Register of British and Foreign Shipping," from being drowned or crushed, from the fiery furnace, from the boiling cauldron, from steam explosion, from the chapter of accidents, which may arise from rotten hulls and from defective machinery. Good luck deliver them!

Yes, friend Symonds, to those shipwrights, as deserving and industrious workmen as ever handled an adze, saw, or maul, I entreat thee, by virtue of our long existing friendship, commenced, confirmed, signed, and sealed, in the Naval and Military Gazette, to extend thy hand of protection. When skill, and care, and the finished stroke have been exhibited in the workmanship of each keel, stem, stern, timber, plank, beam, or knee, framed or shaped, in the construction of the "British bulwarks," by their skilful hands, with incredible celerity, to invade the land of the distant foe, to attack the fleets of hostile flags, to protect Britannia's foreign plantations, her commercial fleets, and her storied home, is it not hard and unjust in the extreme that they should be repaid by that country, which has so faithfully served in the hour of need, with neglect and inadequacy when danger is not at hand? No other class of mechanics under the crown are deprived of the earnings of "the sweat of the brow" during six working days in the week. "Six days shalt thou labour, and do all that thou hast to do," says the commandment of our God. "Ye shipwrights, five days, or five days and a half only, shall ye labour for the maintenance of yourselves, your wives, and your children," say the avarice and injustice of an ungrateful country.

Are the last words forgotten of Peter the Great, the Emperor of all the Russias (on embarking from Deptford Dock-yard, in which he had worked as a shipwright, on board of a British man-of-war, for his dominions), "England, land of the arts, the brave, and the free; of liberty, of commerce, of peace, and of plenty, fare thee well. Has I but thy shipwrights and thy sailors, my empire should soon be as great and as free, and as flourishing as thine?"

THE MEN OF BATHURST, &c.

SIR,—I have just seen one of your papers, in which a correspondent remonstrates with me for having, in a letter (extracts from which appeared in the Naval and Military Gazette, in 1835), conveyed an bad impression of the men of Bathurst. I kept no copy of that letter, and have not seen the Number of your paper in which it appeared; therefore I do not exactly remember what I said; but certainly I had no intention to attack the whole of the settlers of Bathurst, for being intemperate livers. I had ocular demonstration that some of them did not give the climate (and that the mouth of the Gambia is not to be trifled with) fair play. I stated what I saw, and I think I should travel to very little use if I went about praising every thing and every body, and being afraid to censure what I found amiss. I thank Salamander for the gentleman-like tone in which he notices my communication, but have not altered my opinion of some of the men of Bathurst, "that they are not sufficiently careful in their living." I do not mean to say that the community of Bathurst is intemperate, but some members of it are. I lament this, but it is true; and that, generally speaking, Europeans between the tropics seem to be less careful of health than in the temperate regions. I have seen this in Africa and in the East and West Indies, and in this respect the men of Bathurst are no worse than others, and I hope they will not quarrel with me for telling them plainly my mind.

Salamander again says, I praised too highly the state of the establishment on the Gold Coast. I know the means are very inadequate to keep the forts of Cape Coast Castle, Accra, Anemaboe, and Dixcove, in perfect order, and I think they ought to be entirely overhauled, re-mounted with brass guns, have an increased militia and armouries—for the importance of them is such, that twelve months' shots of Cape Coast Castle alone exported, I believe, in 1834, produce in gold dust, ivory, and palm oil, to the value of 200,000*l*. All I meant to convey was, that Governor Maclean, to the extent of his means, had the Gold Coast Establishment in good order. "What can I say more?"

NAVAL PROMOTION AND EMPLOYMENT.

SIR,—As several writers have justly censured Mr. Hume for his false assertion in Parliament that the Navy and Army were the best paid services in England, it would have been but fair also to have noticed that part of his speech (the truth of which is undeniable), viz. "that the promotions in the Navy are almost entirely given to the aristocracy in preference to those whose claims are length of service and merit;" and you, Sir, who have with so much zeal and talent called Lord Hill's attention to the great injustice done to many regiments by keeping them too long and out of their turn in unhealthy climates, will, I trust, also notice the injustice of sending such young Captains as Russell, Graham, Paget, Grey, Eden, and others, who, if I mistake not, have all entered the Navy since the Peace, to enrich themselves with freights on the South American station; for, whatever may be their personal merits, and from which I by no means wish to detract, they are only known in the service by the rapid manner in which they have passed over the heads of old and meritorious officers to the high rank they at present hold, while officers whose long services during the war, and whose merits, are considered, if not nobly connected, are sent to less favoured stations; if, after many years' application, they are so fortunate as to be honoured with a command.

You will greatly oblige many of your readers by informing them why Murray has discontinued his excellent plan of placing opposite the names of officers the dates of their different commissions in his Navy List for the last quarter.

FAIR PLAY.

[On the first point we have, during the last three years, repeatedly expressed our sentiments, and shall resume the subject at no distant period. With regard to the Navy List, we assure our correspondent that Mr. Murray has not a voice in the question. Our occasional comments have contributed materially to the improvement of that publication, and we should be glad to see the dates of all Commissions inserted both in the Navy and Army Lists. —ED.]

THE INQUIRY INTO THE CAUSE OF THE INCREASED NUMBER OF SHIPWRECKS.

SIR,—A short time ago I received through the hands of a friend, the Naval and Military Gazette of 14 May, 1836. Page 311, containing a letter (signed "A Mid. in the Triumph") and I beg leave to call your attention to the following extract, from the same. "At the breaking out of the war in 1803, the fleet in the Mediterranean were without Midshipmen, and on board the Triumph Quarter-Masters were doing their duty;" this part I beg leave to contradict. In May, 1797, I was appointed Lieutenant of the Triumph, and continued on board that ship till March 1804, a period of near seven years, during which time, she was commanded by the following distinguished officers—the late Adm. Sir Wm. Essington, Sir Eliab Harvey, Capt. Scacomb, with the flag of the late Lord Collingwood, and Admiral Sir Robert Barlow; each and all of those officers, had their full complement of Midshipmen, young gentlemen of good connexions, and by no means of the class from which Quarter-Masters are usually taken. The statement respecting a Mr. H——, Master and Part Owner of the ship in the Smyrna Trade, captured by a French privateer, and said to be picked up from a boat, by the Triumph, when off Toulon, is equally groundless, as no such circumstance took place during the time the Triumph was in the Mediterranean; nor can I imagine the motive for such a misrepresentation, by one who states himself to have been "once a Mid. of the Triumph.") Your kindness in inserting this in your impartial Journal will very much oblige.

LIEUTENANT ROYAL NAVY.

George Town, Island of Jersey, July 22, 1836.

EMPLOYMENT OF STEAM-VESSELS FOR SUPPRESSING SMUGGLING.

SIR,—I have lately seen it stated, as well in your valuable and influential Journal as others, that during the short space of one month it has been ascertained, from undoubted authority, that 600 tubs of contraband foreign spirits were destroyed by smugglers, on perceiving the approach of the Vulcan steam revenue cruiser. Now, I would ask, and by whom, could this information be possibly obtained? The smugglers themselves would certainly not "give tongue," or, if they did, would "cry" falsely; and the crew of the Vulcan must indeed have astonishing powers of omniscience, if they could vouch for the fact. I rather think this is a "spat thrown out to catch a whale," verbum sat.

That steam-vessels in the Channel, employed for the prevention of smuggling, must, at the present time at least, prove of utility, cannot be doubted; but that assertions of this wild nature will be believed, is beyond what may be expected from a stretch of the most fertile imagination. Soon, too, will similar craft be procured by the contraband tradery, when they find sailing ones ineffectual.

Craving the insertion of these remarks in your forthcoming number, by which, as not being exactly consonant with your sentiments on the subject, your candour will be made manifest, I remain, &c.

2d August, 1836. PHILOTHEORUS.

THE CASE OF MR. MORDAUNT RICKETTS.

SIR,—Since, without solicitation on my part, you unhesitatingly expressed your opinion on the "Refutation" which I published, of the charges preferred against me by the Honourable East India Company, I take the liberty of furnishing you with a copy of a final appeal which I lately made to the Court of Directors, on the injustice of their proceedings against me. You will perceive, by the reply of the Court, that they have not attempted either to deny the facts, or to answer the arguments advanced in that appeal. They shrink still, as they have done from the first, from entering upon any matter which would lead to an exposure and consequent examination of the principles on which they have acted, and I therefore see nothing to prevent me from submitting the grounds of my complaint to the judgment of the public, as I now do in self-justification.

MORDAUNT RICKETTS.

Lake-House, Cheltenham, 15th July, 1836.

To the Honourable the Court of Directors of the East India Company.

GENTLEMEN,—On my application for the payment of my annuity from the Bengal Civil Service Annuity Fund, in May, 1835, I was informed that it was for the present withheld. On making a similar application on the 2d inst., the answer which I received was, "we have no annuity for Mr. Ricketts." In the former instance the Honourable Court appears to have stopped my pension, in transitu, in anticipation of the future operation which their influence, or at least, which the influence of the resolution they had passed, purporting to dismiss me from the service, would have upon the Managers of the Fund in India, in inducing them to discontinue their payments to me upon the construction of the 13th regulation of the Bengal Civil Service Annuity Fund. In the latter instance the Court may possibly have a substantial declaration, or an expressed determination of the Managers, to act upon.

If, however, the Managers have, in truth, come to any decision on the subject, they could only have done so on the presumption that the vote of dismissal passed by the Court against me was valid, and applicable to my case. And as the influence of the Honourable Court is most powerful with their civil servants (from which body the Managers are selected), and as there can be no doubt that any alteration the Court might make in their views of my case would effect a corresponding alteration in the decision regarding my annuity, I trust that previous to my adopting the legal measures I contemplate against the Managers, there can be no impropriety in my once more addressing the Court on the subject of the peculiarity of the circumstances under which they have thought fit to exercise against me the strongest powers of a governing body. There can be no doubt that if the Court were to intimate an opinion, that my pension would be restored to me, the opinion would be adopted. I am entitled, therefore, to consider, not only the declaration of my guilt, and the resolution for my dismissal, but also the stoppage of my pension, as the act of the Court; and I associate the latter with the former, inasmuch as it proceeds from the communications they must have made to the Managers of the Fund, and as it was the contemplated result of the measures which they shaped against me.

As the matter stands, then, the Court have pronounced a sentence so explicit against my character, and have directed a blow so vindictive against my property, as could only be justified by the previous establishment of unequivocal guilt upon unexceptional evidence.

It is not, however, to defend my character that I now address your Honourable Court. The nature of the correspondence I had with them last year, and their refusal to give me an opportunity of entering into the merits of the matters of which, as they then informed me, I had been accused before them, imposed on me the necessity of resorting to the public press, in order to exhibit a full refutation of every one of those charges in detail. And the unanimous assurances of my friends have satisfied me that my character needs no further vindication. Upon this head, therefore, I am at ease.

But I have yet a demand upon the justice of the Court; I make it with all respect. They have passed a resolution dismissing me from their service, and connecting this resolution with the 13th regulation of the Bengal Civil Annuity Fund, they withhold from me that share of its proceeds in which I have, by purchase, acquired a vested interest; and I call upon the Court to give their consideration to the reasons which I have to offer, why they should in justice revise their proceedings in both these matters. It were more becoming the position of both parties that I should owe the restoration of my property to their sense of justice, than that I should be driven to appeal to the British laws or the British legislature for redress.

Should the Honourable Court, on a review of the real nature of their proceedings against me, see reason to believe that they have violated any great principle of justice, it cannot be derogatory either to their dignity or their integrity to retrace their steps. A call of this nature is daily made upon our Courts of Law, and implies neither presumption in the applicant, nor any imputation on the judges. I proceed, then, with the strongest hope, to lay before the Court the grounds on which I plead for a reversal of their judgment. And first, as to the resolution of dismissal.

The Court, I apprehend, will not silence me in limine, by the assertion of any power inherent in them, of dismissing their servants at the mere avowal of their will; for when they notified to me my dismissal, they assigned a cause for their act, arising out of certain allegations which were made to them regarding my conduct at Lucknow; and indeed there are certain laws of their own by which they themselves are restrained, which regulate the mode in which charges brought against their civil servants are to be dealt with. These laws forbid the Court to proceed to the extreme act of pronouncing a judicial and penal sentence, like that pronounced against me, until some criminating facts have been established upon evidence, until some case of guilt has been absolutely brought home to the party suspected, according to the precise mode of proceeding which they enact.

On this principle the Court must be understood to assume, by the very resolution which they have passed against me, that some case of guilt has been proved upon me, by proceedings conducted according to the provisions of these laws, which were expressly framed by the company to prevent accusation from being mistaken for proof, and suspicion from furnishing the same ground of action as crime.

But I now entreat the Court to inquire, which of their regulations which regard the conduct of an investigation of charges brought against their civil servants, has been observed in my case, or rather, which of them has not been violated. No solemn commission was issued by the Governor-General for the purposes of the inquiry; no two commissioners were appointed to conduct it; no call was made on me through my agents or friends to answer the complaint after the evidence had been produced; no report declaratory of my guilt was made by the party who conducted the investigation; no further report expressive of an approval of such investigation was appended to it by the Governor-General: and yet, according to regulations 8 and 10, of 1806, 17, of 1813, 11, of 1814, 8, of 1817, all these are preliminaries indispensable to the pronunciation of any sentence by the Court, excepting that of acquittal. I am not now arguing the question of my guilt or innocence, but I humbly submit to the Court, that as a governing body sitting judicially, they are bound to consider such an investigation, as my case has alone undergone, as an informal, incomplete, extra-judicial, and ex parte proceeding, which cannot be acted upon by them, but in defiance of their own laws.

The Court cannot say that by such an irregular investigation I have been tried, or even if that were a trial they cannot say that a verdict of guilty has been pronounced against me by those who tried me; and I therefore, upon the failure even of the moral and judicial grounds upon which they profess to have founded their resolution for my dismissal, respectfully, but firmly, call upon them to rescind it.

I feel justified in making this call upon the Honourable Court, not upon the question of my innocence, which, as I have said, I abstain from now discussing, because it could not now be entertained in a manner satisfactory to a party, but upon the fact of the Court having had no sound foundation for their resolution, even had the resolution itself been applicable to the circumstances in which I stood when it was passed. But, in the next place, I further call on the Court fairly to ask themselves, as men of honour, whether the attempt to consider me still in their service in 1834, is consistent with the simple integrity in which Justice should be administered, and whether it be not, at best, a dangerous abandonment of fundamental principles, in order to accomplish a particular object. There was nothing in my position at the moment to contra-distinguish my case from those of the rest of the retired servants. I had taken every step, without one exception, which had been by invariable custom received by the Court as an actual resignation of the service. No one retired servant had taken any further step towards the announcement of his retirement than that which I myself had taken. Whatever then was my position in respect to the Company, was also the position of all who had acted like me. And again I call upon the Honourable Court to ask themselves whether they ever for one moment considered all the other Civilians on the retired list and all the other annuitants on the civil fund, as actually in their service, and consequently amenable to their authority on the 30th June, 1834, the date of my dismissal. Surely they cannot say that they were consciously maintaining a secret bold over all the retired servants, of which the latter were dangerously ignorant. But if they did not consider them in their service, with what uprightness can they persevere in an assertion with respect to my case, which they abandon with respect to all others similarly circumstanced?

Anecdote of Horne Tooke.—Mr. Holcroft, the author of the Road to Ruin, was one of the most violent and fiery-spirited of all that motley crew of persons who attended the Sunday meetings at Wimbleton. One day he was so enraged by some paradox or raillery of his host that he indignantly rose from his chair, and said, "Mr. Tooke, you are a scoundrel!" The other, without manifesting the least emotion, replied, "Mr. Holcroft, when is it that I am to dine with you? Shall it be next Thursday?" "If you please, Mr. Tooke," answered the angry philosopher, and sat down again.

The ancients were enthusiastic in their praises of beautiful hair. Apuleius, in the second book of his Florida, says that Venus herself if she were bald, though surrounded by the Graces and the Loves, could not be pleasing even to her husband, Vulcan. Stesichorus gave the epithet "well-haired" to the Graces, and Simonides bestowed the same upon the Muses.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 13, 1836.

THE question of the legal authority of the Board of Admiralty, or rather of the prerogative vested in the King, and exercised ot the recommendation of his advisers, to dismiss Officers from his Royal Service, without any other inquiry than he may be pleased to direct, was again brought under discussion on Friday se'nnight in the House of Commons on Sir Edward Codrington presenting the petitions of several Officers whose names had been erased from the Navy List without the formality of Courts-Martial, or any open inquiry, under which the parties aggrieved were allowed to rebut the ex-parte charges brought against them. As the Gallant Admiral adopts what appears to us an erroneous view of this question, and has more than once endeavoured to substantiate his opinion by citing the case of Lord F. Beauclerk, and many (indeed the generality of Naval Officers) consider the proceeding to be not only illegal but arbitrary and unjust, we shall endeavour to explain the true position of the matter, to prevent our half-pay readers being led away by an hypothesis, which, we fear, too many of them indulge in.

We cannot at this moment refer to the whole particulars of the case above quoted, but we think it is generally understood, that his Lordship, then Lieutenant on half-pay, was ordered on service, refused to take up his commission, and, being removed from the List in consequence, brought an action and recovered damages, at the same time establishing the principle, that half-pay was a reward for past service, of which he could not be deprived without a proved offence. Such is the general impression throughout the service, of the result of this case. We shall presently show that it is at varience with former precadents, and also observe that, should the fact be once established to the satisfaction of the public, that half-pay was not bestowed in the nature of a retention for future service as well as a reward for the past, we should not consider it of the value of a year's purchase. It would be preposterous to point to a list of some thousands of officers, for whose half-pay large sums are annually voted, and then inform the public that it was optional on their part whether to serve again or not;—half-pay may be truly denied a stipend, paid for the support of officers, when, owing to various causes, no means existed of employing them on active service, and also available for those who, from age or infirmity, were incapable of such; but that the King possesses the power of removing any officer (able, but refusing to serve) from the list is a fact well established,—and we may remark, that it was not in allusion to those officers* who tacitly consent to this proceeding (having probably engaged in more profitable employments in civil life), that Mr. Wood observed in the debate, that "he had never known the case of an officer dismissed unless for unbecoming conduct," but to those against whom charges had been made and substantiated.

That the Royal prerogative assumes, and has by long prescription exercised, the power of removing officers from the list cannot be doubted. This power has been directed against the highest officers in the service, and against persons of great weight and influence in the state; and we will relate two instances where it was enforced, after the parties had been acquitted by Court-Martial of the crimes charged against them.

The Earl of Torrington was tried at Shearness in December, 1690, for misconduct in the action of the 30th of June of the same year off Beachy Head, and, although the Court unanimously acquitted him of any imputation whatever, he was removed from the list of the Navy by the King, and never afterwards employed.

Again, in 1702, Sir John Munden was tried for miscarriage and neglecting to intercept a French squadron bound to the West Indies. When the Court not only acquitted the Rear-Admiral but declared that he had behaved with great zeal and diligence, notwithstanding which Queen Anna dismissed him from the Navy, as the following extract from the Gazette of the day testifies:

"Windsor, August 9th, 1702.

"The Queen having required the proceedings upon the trial of Sir John Munden, Rear-Admiral of the Red Squadron, to be laid before her, and having considered all the circumstances relating to the expedition to Corunna; her Majesty finding that Sir John Munden had not done his duty, pursuant to his instructions, does not think fit to continue him in her service, and has therefore declared her pleasure, that his Royal Highness the Lord High Admiral of England should immediately discharge him from his post and command in the Royal Navy, and his Royal Highness has accordingly given the necessary orders for it."

M'Arthur, in treating of this subject, gives the following opinion,—"That the Royal Prerogative may be exercised on all occasions in dismissing officers from the service, without putting them to the form of trial, is unquestionable," and he cites the above-mentioned cases in proof of this opinion.

In numberless cases has it been since assumed, and acted on down to the present time; and although, in some instances, great hardship has accrued to individuals, we shall always consider that in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, the power has been impartially exercised, never we believe wantonly or knowingly abused, and much exposure avoided by ridding the United Service of improper characters without inflicting disgrace upon their connexions, or injury to the honour and respectability of the Military profession. As long as one case of injustice is proved, however, we will maintain that it behoves the authorities to take care in recommending the exercise of this irresponsible power to the Sovereign, that they have availed themselves of the most impartial means to arrive at a just decision,—and as the Secretary of the Admiralty admitted in the House of Commons on Friday se'nnight, that it had been thought proper to revise one of the petitioner's cases, and to do him justice by removing the stigma from his name, and restore him to his rank and station in society, it appears to us, that the means usually adopted do not furnish a satisfactory, an unerring, or an equitable mode of arriving at the truth. We, therefore, repeat the suggestion, which we put forth some months back, that a Board of Officers should investigate every charge upon its merits, divested of legal quirks and subtleties, giving the accused ample opportunity for rebutting the accusation brought against him, and that no officer should in future be removed from the list unless his conduct is adjudged degrading by this Board, or by the recorded verdict of a jury in a criminal court.

The intention of Sir Edward Codrington was doubtless good, but we would submit to the Gallant Admiral that the publication of the transgressions of all officers convicted of improper conduct through the course of half a century must be harrassing to their surviving friends and relations, and revive an odium upon respectable persons from their unhappy connexion with individuals whose crimes and frailties are now forgotten,—and this is quite unnecessary, as Mr. Wood has volunteered to afford every information in his place in Parliament (thus of course making it public to the advocates of those who consider themselves aggrieved.

THE officers of the Army and their connection are well aware that with this paper originated the discussion respecting the unfair system of relief for regiments in the East Indies, and that the several articles we have given have attracted the attention of the public and forced the matter on the consideretion of the authorities at the Horse Guards. We intend to resume the subject shortly, but shall, for the present, confine ourselves to correcting the statements put forth by some of our contemporaries, as they are calculated to have a injurious tendency.

It is stated that "the 16th Foot will be relieved by the 18th, which will go out by detachments to New South Wales." This is not likely: the 16th are to be relieved by a regiment from New South Wales, probably the 50th, and the 18th will go out by detachments to New South Wales in the spring of next yeer.

It is stated "that the 54th Foot will be relieved by the 75th from the Cape." Nothing of the kind is yet settled.

It is stated "that the 3d Light Dragoons and the 15th Hussars have been selected to replace the 11th and 13th Light Dragoons, and will proceed to their new destination in about twelve months. It is not improbable that these corps will eventually go to India, but nothing has been settled, nor will either of these regiments be sent for two or three years.

The 80th Foot, now in progress of embarkation at Chatham, succeeds the 4th at New South Wales.

Finally, we understand that the reply to all inquiries regarding the destination of the regiments available for India is, "Lord Hill has not yet made arrangements."

THE following Order in Council respecting Civil Appointments in His Majesty's Navy, and holding out a certain reward—re-appointment—for the effective performance of duties, has just been promulgated:—

"In any Civil Appointment, after 15th July, 18[illegible]

* In most cases they are medical officers, who, having established themselves to practice, rather sacrifice their half-pay than quit their locality,—against the characters of these nothing was insinuated in the Secretary of the Admiralty's speech; but the debates (when Naval matters are canvassed) are so very imperfectly reported, that we are not surprised at Mr. Wood's thinking it necessary to correct misrepresentation, and to explain what he really did state.

no further time served by those who have held and are still holding their appointments shall be allowed to increase their retirement, and no Naval officer, appointed subsequently to the 16th July, 1836, shall be allowed any retirement until he has served five years; then, if he does not continue to hold his situation, he will revert to his half-pay with an addition of one shilling per diem. But, although every appointment issued now is during pleasure, and five years is named for the maximum for the addition of one shilling per day to his half-pay, instead of his retirement as formerly, it by no means follows, nor is it meant to be understood, that an officer who has held an appointment five years must, as a matter of course, vacate, he will, if found effective and efficient, be re-appointed."

During this week there has been a committee to inquire into the occupation of public quarters at Chatham, with the view to a reform. The abuses in quarters are nowhere greater than in this garrison, and they will never be entirely rooted out by the appointment of Local Committees; but let a Board of independent officers be sent to inquire at every station how the quarters are disposed, and we should soon have a reform.

We understand that Sir L. Greenwell particularly pointed out to the Inspector from London the very inadequate size of the mess-room into which the officers of the Provisional Battalion are crammed. The room is calculated to dine twenty-eight, and fifty have been fed in it by detachments. Why should this be, when two individuals have whole houses to live in large enough to hold 300 men? If it be the wish at the Horse Guards that young officers, not required in the slightest degree at the depots of Indian corps, should be retained at Chatham, they should, at least, have sitting room at their mess-table, which at present is not the case, and we only wonder that, under such circumstances, the scenes of the Isle of Wight have not been repeated. It is but justice, however, to add, that Chatham is one of the quietest garrisons in the United Kingdom at present, and is that which has in it the greatest number of officers.

We have elsewhere given one of two letters we have received on the subject of some remarks we offered in our Gazette of the 23rd ult., relative to steam-vessels being employed in the Channel in the summer months for the suppression of smuggling. To our Correspondents we must observe, that it was not the merits of the Vulcan steamer that we sought to uphold, but the principle, solely, that steam-vessels would be of vast use in protecting the revenue in the Channel during the summer months, and which opinion we still mean to adhere to and to defend; indeed, our Correspondents fully admit this, but they deny the qualities of the Vulcan in particular for this duty. We do not mean to assert whether six hundred or six thousand kegs have been lost to the smugglers by the services of this vessel, as we copied the statement from a provincial paper, which had a paragraph in it under the head of "Poole," giving this information. Certain it is, however, that three fast steam-vessels will do more for the suppression of smuggling, than twenty or fifty revenue cruisers, in the summer months.

We cannot but remark on the inadequate guards furnished for three hundred convicts and sometimes four hundred. Among these desperate men seamen are frequently found, and we consider it almost miraculous that ships have not been seized by them and carried into some port where escape might be effected. Fifty men are, at least, required to effectively guard 400 convicts, making allowance for casualties.

We are gratified to find that our anticipations of the success of the Vanguard have been fully verified. All accounts from the officers of the fleet concur in yielding the superiority to that noble ship. The trials have been but partial, owing to various circumstances, and indeed, hitherto, it seems to have been rather a trial of the skill of officers of the watch on board the several ships, to maintain their stations in order of sailing, than of the merits of the ships themselves; but upon each of the trials which have been permitted the Vanguard is allowed, on all hands, to have shown a decided superiority; and we cannot but deprecate the feeling which has led to the admission of such false and stupidly absurd statements as we have seen in some of the Port papers.

We are well aware how industriously these reports are propagated, and we have had many scores of them addressed to ourselves under different shapes. We well know also the source from whence they emanate, and that the parties care not what reports they assert so they can obtain currency for a week; but that respectable journals should lend themselves to such tissue of falsehoods, now dogonersted into slang, does indeed surprise us; however, it will tend to lessen their authority in other respects, and this they will find in the long run.

The squadron did not fall in with the Asia, which is much regretted, as, although one vessel has the advantage over others, it is impossible to know what her comparative speed is, with relation to ships whose sailing qualities are acknowledged until some opportunity of trial is afforded. We were in hopes that a cruise in company with the Asia would have ascertained this, but that ship has proceeded to her destination, probably to relieve the Caledonia, ordered home. In the mean time the squadron has put into Plymouth Sound, to complete four months' provisions, and will proceed on a cruise to the westward.

The extraordinary stability of the Vanguard is the admiration of the fleet. She carries her lower deck guns run out when going nine knots on a bowline under double-reefed topsails, and she could fight her guns on either side, or even sixty-eight pounders upon this deck, in weather when other ships would be obliged to bar in their ports. This of itself is an immense advantage (besides the benefit which the crew derive from dry and airy berths), for a line-of-battle ship deprived of the use of her lower-deck guns is brought, in point of force, inferior to those frigates which carry thirty-two pounders of fifty-six cwt. The Bellerophon appears a fine ship, but crank; she is well handled, and has the advantage of bearing the flag. But, of course, when decided trials are entered into to beat to windward for a certain point, or to run off the wind for another, every ship will perform her part as she best can, without regard to the motions of the Admiral.

The General Commanding-in-Chief, Lord Hill, has published an order to the Army in India, commenting upon the bad state of discipline in which His Majesty's 41st regiment has been for the last two or three years, and likewise upon the frequency of Courts-Martial in that corps. The order further refers to the late proceedings (published in this paper) between Colonel Sir E. K. Williams, K.C.B. and Lieut.-Colonel Purdon, of that regiment, and in consequence of which they are both permitted to retire from the service, either on half-pay or by the sale of their commissions. His Lordship, in remarking upon the crimes committed by the soldiers of the 41st regiment, states that they are of the most dreadful description. We need not point out how fully this proceeding confirms all that we have advanced regarding the necessity of a change of system in the reliefs of corps employed in the East Indies. We annex the Order:—

1. His Excellency, the Com.-in-Chief, has received a despatch from the Rt. hon. Lord Hill, Commanding-in-Chief the British Army, making reference to the General Courts-Martial held in the years 1834 and 1835, first on Lieut.-Col. E. Purdon, at the instance of Col. Sir E. K. Williams; and afterwards on Col. Sir E. K. Williams, at the instance of Lieut.-Col. E. Purdon, and to the general conduct of H. M.'s 41st regiment, at that period, reported on by Gen. the Right hon. Lord W. Bentinck.

2. Lord Hill says, that he considers it a duty imperative upon him to notice the state of that corps, and to take active measures to rescue it from its present condition, which he cannot but regard as highly disgraceful to the character of His Majesty's service. He remarks that in the short space of six years and a half 12 Officers of this Regt. have been arraigned before General Courts-Martial; and in proof of the extent to which the behaviour of the officer influences that of the soldier, he is informed that the catalogue of crime exhibited amongst the men is equally deplorable, and that murder, wounding with the bayonet, and the menace of life, figure amongst the offences which they have committed. That in February, 1834, his Lordship had occasion to animadvert upon the conduct of the officers of the 41st regiment. That the admonition appears to have been disregarded, and therefore he now feels it incumbent upon him to desire that the Commander-in-Chief in India will signify to Colonel Sir E. K. Williams, and Lieutenant-Colonel E. Purdon, that his Lordship can no longer incur the responsibility of allowing them to continue in a regiment which, under their superintendence and command, has arrived at its present degraded condition. That his Lordship does not forget the previous services of these officers, nor the fact that Sir E. Williams was acquitted of the charges which were preferred against him, but at the same time that he bears these circumstances in mind, he keeps in view also the concluding observations of the court which tried Lieut. Col. E. Purdon. These circumstances lead His Lordship to declare, that he cannot do more either for Col. Sir E. K. Williams, or Col. E. Purdon, than give them the option of retiring upon half pay, or from the service by the sale of their commissions.

3. His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief of the Madras Army will call upon these two Officers to report for the information of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief in India, which of the alternatives (not precedently mentioned) they may respectively adopt; and after he shall have made such report, he will grant the immediate leave of absence to return to England.

4. In communicating to the Army in India the very deplorable consequences of discord and want of good feeling between the officers of a regiment, His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief desires to point the attention of the officers of H. M.'s 41st regiment, to the discreditable position in which they have placed themselves by the conduct which his Lordship, Commanding-in-Chief, has detailed, not only amongst their brother officers in India, but in the eyes of the whole British Army, and he prays of them to let those feelings of mortification, which they cannot but deeply experience, operate as a stimulus to every practicable exertion to recover the good name of their corps, and to re-establish the high character which H. M.'s 41st regiment formerly enjoyed.

5. His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief has addressed this Order to the Army in India generally instead of confining it to the King's troops, because he regrets to be obliged to remark that recent circumstances and official reports have made him cognizant of disunion and disunion existing in some other corps (not H.M.'s) to a degree that is highly detrimental to the service. He, therefore, places thus prominently before them the consequences of such conduct, and as he is flattered and gratified to the highest degree by the attention which he feels the Army has paid to such advice as he has heretofore offered to them, so he is willing to believe that they will be equally attentive to the circumstance ich he now calls their observation, and that they will ke such beneficial reflections on the same as will not l to produce advantageous results.

The late Duel.—In consequence of the assault on the person of Mr. J. Fraser, Dr. Maginn wrote a note to Mr. Grantley Berkeley, stating that he was the author of the article in the last number of Fraser's Magazine, headed "Mr. Grantley Berkeley and his Novel." He shortly afterwards received a card from Major Fancourt, on the part of Mr. G. Berkeley, who stated that he was anxious to see Dr. M. on particular business. Dr. M. waited upon Major F., and it was agreed between them—the Doctor in the meantime procuring a second—that a meeting should take place the same evening, at seven o'clock. The place appointed was a field near St. John's-wood road. Mr. H. Fraser (no relation of the bookseller) acted as the second of Dr. Maginn, and Maj. Fancourt as the second of Mr. Berkeley. The parties were placed on the ground at a little before seven; and, in the first exchange of shots, Dr. M. fired rather high, which induced Maj. Fancourt to ask whether the Doctor had done it purposely not to fire at his antagonist. Mr. Hugh Fraser answered that he did not know. The pistols were again loaded, handed to the parties, and the second fire passed without taking any effect. The seconds here interfered, but in vain. A third exchange of shots took place, Mr. Berkeley's bullet grazing the heel of Dr. M.'s boot, and the Doctor's bullet grazing the collar of his adversary's coat. The seconds again interfered, and, without any apology, the parties merely bowing to each other, left the ground. Both parties behaved with the utmost coolness and determination, and not a word, with the exception of the word of command, and the question of Major Fancourt, passed on the occasion.

Application was made to the Magistrates of Marlborough-street Office, at a late hour on Friday evening, for their interference to prevent a duel betwixt Mr. G. Berkeley and Dr. Maginn, and warrants for the apprehension of both gentlemen were granted. The officers traced the parties from place to place, but they were not successful in meeting with either of them. About nine o'clock Mr. G. Berkeley was traced to Crockford's, and when informed of the steps which had been taken to prevent a breach of the peace, he pledged his honour that the affair had terminated an hour before; and under those circumstances the warrant was not enforced. On Saturday Mr. Craven Berkeley had an interview with Mr. Dyer in the private room, and assurances were given that no further breach of the peace will be attempted on the part of Mr. G. Berkeley.

Sir,—My attention has just been called to a statement in a Sunday print, to the effect that Dr. Maginn, in the late meeting with Mr. G. Berkeley, fired in the air. I should feel obliged by your favouring me with a few lines' space in your columns for the purpose of contradicting the above statement. Three shots were interchanged between Mr. Berkeley and Dr. Maginn; and I need scarcely add, that if the latter gentleman had not fired at Mr. Berkeley, it would have been impossible for me to have permitted the prosecution of the affair beyond the first shot. Indeed, the second of Dr. Maginn would, in such a case, have been imperatively called upon to interfere. I am, &c.

August 1st. C. St. John Fancourt.

While preparations were being made for the late duel, the lesser of the combatants underwent some raillery from his friend on the advantage he possessed in being much smaller than his adversary. The witty Doctor replied, that the seconds might chalk his size on the body of his opponent, and if he were so unfortunate as to hit the honourable gentleman on the outside of the line it should be considered unfair, and he would make the handsomest apology in his power.

On Monday last, Mr. Pocock, of Bristol, passed through the town of Chippenham in a carriage drawn by two air-kites, occasionally travelling at the rate of 25 miles per hour. In the vicinity of the town he was detained some time, in consequence of the web getting entangled in a tree.

English travellers, especially military men, will do well, during the next week, to visit the Belgic camp at Beverloo, where they will have an opportunity of witnessing the manœuvres of 16,000 men, under the immediate command of the King.

On the morning of Friday se'nnight, the family of a gentleman residing in Portland-place were surprised by discovering that one of the amiable daughters had eloped with a Mr. F——, who has for some time been attached to her. No suspicions of the fair fugitive's intentions were entertained, as there had been a party assembled at her father's house the preceding evening, at which she appeared as usual. The lovers were instantly united, and have since obtained paternal forgiveness. It is rumoured that another sister is about to be married.

Bristol and Bath are in the extreme of bustle in preparing for the meeting of the British Association for the advancement of science, to be held at Bristol on the 22d inst., which is expected to be numerously attended.

Elopement.—On Monday morning an elopement took place from the vicinity of Egham. The parties are a son of Mars and a lady of Egham. The gallant officer, it appears, has been staying for some time in the neighbourhood, and succeeded in carrying off the "ladye of his love" at an early hour, between two and three in the morning. The matter, it is said, is likely to become a subject for the gentlemen of the bar. The fugitives have proceeded to the Continent.

British Auxiliary Legion.—At St. Sebastian, it appears from a recent letter, considerable discontent prevailed among the British and Spanish troops, in consequence of the pay, which is their due, being withheld from them. The 8th reg., belonging to the British force, which was the first to express a determination to cease to serve unless its arrears of pay should be discharged, succeeded in getting a portion of them liquidated. The men of the 6th reg. next demanded their pay and their discharge too, alleging that the one year's period of service, for which they were engaged, had expired. Finding that they could get neither the one nor the other, they refused to perform the usual evolutions on the parade, when Col. Fitzgerald, commanding the brigade to which the 6th belongs, ordered the 3d reg., which was drawn up opposite the former, to prime and load. This order was, without hesitation, disobeyed, and the Colonel was loaded with execrations by the men of the 6th. In the end it was found prudent to allow those who insisted on returning to England to quit the service. Not less than 200 men belonging to the 6th reg. immediately left the ranks.

General Order.—"The Lieut.-General regrets extremely to find that so considerable a number of the 6th regiment have yesterday shown a disposition to abandon their colours and comrades in face of the enemy, on the assertion that their agreement with the officers who enlisted them was for a limited period instead of to the 16th of next June, the date mentioned in the Order of Council, when the service of the Legion in reality expires. It has hitherto been the boast of the British national character that its soldiers undergo privations and hardships without murmuring, or losing their discipline under such trials. And it gives him the highest satisfaction to find that, with a comparatively small and discreditable exception, the Legion have nobly sustained in this respect the reputation of British troops. The Legion have undoubtedly suffered severe privations and hardships since their arrival in the country, but these hardships do not exist at present, nor are they likely ever to occur again. The Lieut.-Gen. directs that the men referred to, belonging to the 6th, or Scotch Grenadiers, who passed the board of officers yesterday, shall from to-morrow discontinue to do duty with their corps, and be struck off the strength of the Legion from the same date. They will be sent to England when vessels are provided by the Spanish government. These men will be settled with in conformity to the orders of the 16th and 23d inst., by which it is directed that the arrears of officers or men going home shall not be paid until those of the officers and men still doing their duty have been satisfied, as the Lieutenant-General considers this but due in common justice to those who gallantly continue their services in the Legion.

The "Presse" states that twenty-seven Carlist officers, who were taken on board the Reyna Gubernadora, carried to Porto Rico, thence to St. Thomas's, and ultimately to London, have made their escape, passed through France, and at length rejoined Don Carlos, who has again received them into his service.

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY, 8th August.—The Turnpike Acts Continuance Bill was read a third time and passed.—The house went into Committee on the Stamp Duties Bill. Clause 11, which provides that every proprietor of a newspaper should be registered, with his name and residence, with the amount of his share or interest in the concern, and that this registration should be renewed every six months, having been read, Lord LYNDHURST moved that it should be rejected. After a debate of some length the committee divided upon the question of retaining the clause, Non-contents, 61; Contents, 40; Majority, 21. The remaining clauses were agreed to.

TUESDAY, 9th August.—The Lord CHANCELLOR moved the second reading of the Court of Session Bill, which was opposed by the Earl of Rosslyn, on the account of the lateness of the session. On a division the bill was lost by a majority of 10.—The Report of the Stamp Duties on Newspapers Bill was received.

WEDNESDAY, 10th August.—A message was brought up from the Commons desiring a free conference on the subject of the Municipal Corporations Amendment Act. Lord MELBOURNE remarked that a free conference had not taken place for nearly 100 years, and the consideration of the subject was postponed until this day, in order that precedents might be consulted on the subject.—The Stamp Duties on Newspapers Bill was read a third time and passed, after which the House adjourned.

THURSDAY, 11th August.—The Assessed Taxes Bill, the Court of Exchequer (Scotland) Bill, the Foreign Lottery Bill, the Ecclesiastical Appointments Suspension Bill, and the Gold and Silver Plate (Scotland) Bill, were read a third time and passed.—The Newspaper Stamp Duties Bill was read a first time.—A conference with the Commons on the subject of the Lords' amendments on the Municipal Act Amendment Bill having been agreed to, managers were appointed on the part of their Lordships, who having met the managers appointed by the Commons, and it appearing that they could not agree, Lord LYNDHURST moved that their Lordships adhere to their amendments. Lord MELBOURNE moved, as an amendment, that their Lordships do not insist upon their amendments. Contents, 29; non-contents, 40; majority in favour of adhering to the Lords' amendments, 11.—The Steam Carriages Bill was thrown out.

FRIDAY, 12th Aug.—The Edinburgh, Leith, and Newhaven Railway Bill, and the Slave Compensation Bill, were read a third time and passed.—Lord Melbourne moved that the Standing Orders be suspended as regarded the Newspaper Stamps Bill. On the motion of the same Noble Lord, the Bill was then read a second time, committed, reported, read a third time, and passed, without any observation.—Lord DUNCANNON moved the second reading of the Post Office Bill. The Duke of RICHMOND moved that it be read a second time that day three months. Lord Melbourne defended the measure, and the Duke of Wellington and Lord Ellenborough opposed it. Non-contents, 51; contents, 22; majority against the Bill, 29.—The House went into committee on the Registration of Voters Bill.—Lord WHARNCLIFFE moved that the part of the clause which referred to the constitution of the New Court of Revising Barristers should be omitted. A debate ensued. Lord Melbourne and the Lord Chancellor supported the clause, and Lord Abinger opposed it. For Lord Wharncliffe's amendment, 57; against it, 21. Lord WHARNCLIFFE proposed the insertion of a clause with a view to prevent persons having burough property to vote both for Members for the borough and for Knights of the Shire, by virtue of the same property. Viscount MELBOURNE opposed the clause. Contents, 54; Non-contents, 20.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 8th August.—Mr. POULTER moved the second reading of the Trinity Harbour Bill, which was opposed by the ATTORNEY-GENERAL, who moved, as an amendment, that it be read a second time that day three months. The amendment was carried on a division, and the bill was consequently lost.—Lord J. RUSSELL moved that the Registration of Voters Bill be read a third time, upon which Mr. AGLIONBY said, that since the passing of Col. Davies's Act, which provided that certain persons who should act as counsel, agents, clerks, &c., should not be entitled to vote, many persons were in the habit of voting, trusting to putting the parties to the expense and trouble of a petition. He therefore moved that such persons be subjected to a penalty not exceeding 100*l*., nor less than 10*l*., the amount to be ascertained by the verdict of a jury. The clause was ultimately adopted. —The names of Mr. Russell Gurney and Mr. E. Winslow were inserted in the Bill as Registrars, in the place of Mr. F. Newland and Mr. Alexander, who had declined to accept that office. Several other amendments were then moved and rejected, after which the Bill was read a third time and passed.—Lord J. RUSSELL stated the course which he meant to pursue with regard to the Marriages Bill, the Municipal Corporations Act Amendment Bill, and the Registration of Births Bill. With respect to the Marriages Bill and the Registration of Births Bill, he was disposed to move that the house do agree to the amendments made by the House of Lords in the bills; but with respect to the Municipal Corporations Act Amendment Bill, he would move that this house do still disagree to the amendments of the Lords.—The Ecclesiastical Appointments Suspension Bill, the Post-office Commissioners Bill, the Spirits (Excise) Bill, and the Common Law Courts Bill were severally read a third time and passed. The Malt Duty (Ireland) Bill was, after a short discussion, postponed until next session.—On the bringing up of the Pensions Duties Bill, Mr. HARCOURT moved a clause to exempt the annuity settled, in the reign of Queen Anne, on the descendants of John Duke of Marlborough from all taxes and deductions whatsoever. After a warm discussion, in the course of which three divisions took place, the clause was agreed to, and the bill was ordered to be read a third time on Friday. The house then went into a Committee of Supply on the Miscellaneous Estimates, the discussion upon which occupied the remainder of the sitting.

TUESDAY, 9th August.—Mr. ROBINSON gave notice that he should, early in the next Session of Parliament, submit a motion to the house for the reduction of the duty on marine insurances.—Dr. BOWRING inquired whether any interference had taken place on the part of England to induce the SWISS Government to violate the laws of hospitality, by giving up the refugees who had taken shelter in that country? Lord PALMERSTON said England had not been consulted; neither was the English Government, or English Ministry, a party in the matter. —Mr. C. Wood took the opportunity of correcting a statement which had found its way into a morning paper, as to what had fallen from him respecting the half-pay list. He had been made to say that his remarks were applicable to individuals who had been removed from the half-pay list for misconduct, and not to those who had retired from the service for some breach of duty, rather than stand a court-martial. Now what he had really said was, that his observations were never intended to apply to persons, especially medical men, who refused to serve, but only to those whose dismissal was the subject of complaint. He was anxious to take the earliest opportunity of making this statement, lest what he was reported to have said might have given pain to individuals. —Capt. BOLDERO moved for a copy of the charge and minutes of evidence of a court of inquiry, held at Sheerness in February last, touching the conduct of Lieut. Hill, lately in the command of H.M.'s steam-vessel Alban, who had been superseded without inquiry. The Gallant Member then stated the circumstances of Mr. Hill's case at Malta, from which it appeared that, after having got his written orders to proceed to England, he was desired by the Admiral's Secretary to stop and take home a passenger. He refused, but made a signal to see whether he was to go on to England or not. The signal was answered in the affirmative, and he went on. In consequence of the conduct of Lieut. Hill the Admiral (Sir J. Ruwley) sent a written order superseding him in the command of the Alban. This order Lieut. Hill objected to obey without previous inquiry into his conduct, and as it had some informality he resealed it and returned it. The Admiral afterwards admitted his error by recalling the order, but sent persons on board (one of whom we believe was Capt. Darres), who put Lieut. Hill under arrest on board his own ship, with a midshipman on one side and a marine under arms on the other, while search was made in the cabin for the despatches. They were found, and Lieut. Hill was subsequently ordered to proceed to England, but before he could go thither he was sent to the Lazaretto on the ground of insanity, although he was allowed to take with him both sword a pistols. In the end he was sent to England as a supe numerary Lieutenant on full-pay, and applied to the A miralty for an investigation of his case. A court of i quiry was therefore appointed, and the result was a let from the Admiralty to Lieut. Hill, stating that th thought his conduct "reprehensible." The Hon. a Gallant Mem..r complained of this decision, and of t consequences which had resulted from it, that of putti Lieut. Hill on half-pay, instead of re-appointing him to ship, although he had the certificates of six Admira fourteen Post Captains, and six other officers, und whom he had served, strongly in his favour. Mr. Ho seconded the motion, observing that Lieut. Hill was o of his constituents, and an honourable and intellige man. Mr. C. Wood would not enter into any detail the circumstances, but contended that the decision the Admiralty was conveyed in the mildest terms th could be employed. It had been the opinion of two, not more, officers, from the strangeness of the demeano of Lieut. Hill, that he was insane, and on this accou he had been sent to the Lazaretto. The case was extraordinary, and he did not apprehend that under no cumstances had an Admiral power to supersede an offi without inquiry. After his return it was thought, persons at the Admiralty, that Lieut. Hill was still booring under a delusion. The Admiralty had det mined at one time to send Lieut. Hill back to Malta, triol by a Court-Martial, but he had himself objected this course, and a court of inquiry was substituted, up the report of which the Admiralty had come to the o nion that the conduct of Lieut. Hill had been reprehe sible. The Admiralty was the proper tribunal to arr at such a decision, and they had also arrived at the c clusion, that Sir Jos. Rowley was justified in the cou he had pursued. Capt. GORDON knew nothing of case until he heard it stated this evening, but he thou that Lieut. Hill had been hardly treated. Mr. Hu had been acquainted with Lieut. Hill for nine years, adverted to the admission which he considered had b made, that the treatment of Lieut. Hill was contrary the usual rules of the service. If he had disregarded order, it was one which he was not bound to obey; if the Admiral had had any reason to complain of Li Hill he ought to have brought him to a Court-Mar It was absurd to contend that he was mad when he allowed to take his sword and pistols with him whe was sent to the Lazaretto. Although it was true tha had been allowed his half-pay, like the other officers the ship, it could not be disputed for a moment that stood unjustly disgraced in the eyes of the whole ser by the determination of the Board of Admiralty. L J. RUSSELL protested against the practice of bringing discussions of this kind. He thought that confide ought to be placed, in cases of this kind, not only in Admiral on the station, but in the Board at home. A ADAM allowed that the case was a very painful one, he had once had Lieut. Hill under his orders, and he then a very fine boy. On the part of the Admira there was every disposition to treat him with kindne but the fact was that he had been decidedly guilty of a obedience of orders. Sir R. INGLIS contended that time of the House ought not to be occupied with suc discussion. It was a professional question, and not at all affecting character. Capt. BOLDERO observed, t the worst that could be said of Lieut. Hill was, that had disobeyed an unlawful order. He would not div the House on the question. He had done his duty bringing it forward, and he would leave the rest to Admiralty. The motion was then negatived. [We h elsewhere noticed the case of this officer.]—The or of the day was then read for taking into considerat the Lords' amendments in the Municipal Corporati Act Amendment Bill, and Lord J. RUSSELL stated course which he intended to recommend with regard these amendments. There were two amendments, principle of which he could by no means agree to. was with reference to the manner in which the chairm was to be chosen to preside at the election of the ma and council of a corporation when there was an equa of votes; the other was with reference to the admi tration of charitable trusts. The first of these, if it stood alone, he might have conceded; but in the sec he could not concur. The Noble Lord concluded moving that the House disagree with the amendme The motion, after some discussion, was agreed to w out a division, and a conference appointed to allow Lords an opportunity of declaring whether they were termined to adhere to their amendments or not.—L J. RUSSELL moved the order of the day for going committee on the Benefices Plurality Bill. Mr. H thought that it was inexpedient to proceed with the during the present session, and hoped the Noble would not persevere in the measure. Lord J. Rus could not agree to the suggestion. Mr. HUME moved that the Bill be taken into consideration that three months. For going into committee, 66; for poning the Bill, 26; majority, 39. The House then into committee. Upon clause 2 being proposed, Hume moved, as an amendment, "That from and after the passing of this Act no spiritual person holding preferment in the Church of the value of three hundred pounds net shall hold any other preferment therewith;" but the amendment, after some discussion, was withdrawn.

Wednesday, 10th August.—On the motion for the House going into committee of Supply, Mr. Mackinnon expressed a hope that he should be allowed to proceed with his Bill on the Law of Patents. Lord J. Russell thought it would not be advisable to proceed during the present session with any Bills brought forward by private members which had not been read a second time; and he should feel it his duty to move that Bills so situated should be postponed. The House then went into a Committee of Supply, when several of the estimates for miscellaneous services were voted.—The Stamp Duties on Newspapers Bill was brought down from the Lords, and, on the motion of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the amendments made by the Lords, on account of their interference with the privileges of the House, were rejected, and the Bill was laid aside. The Chancellor of the Exchequer then brought forward a new Bill, which was read a first time.

Thursday, 11th August.—A new writ was ordered for Sheffield, in the room of John Parker, Esq., appointed one of the Lords of the Treasury.—The Exchequer Offices Bill, the Prisoners' Counsel Bill, the Slave Owners' Compensation Bill, and the Newspaper Stamp Duties Bill, were read a third time and passed.—The amendments of the Lords on the Registration of Births Bill were agreed to.—The Lords' amendments on the Marriages Bill were taken into consideration, and, after a strong opposition had been made to them by several Honourable Members, who divided the House upon them, they were all agreed to. The Free Conference was then held, when it appearing that the Lords adhered to the amendments on the Municipal Corporations Amendment Bill, Lord J. Russell moved that the amendments be taken into consideration that day three months, which was carried. A discussion ensued on the question, moved by Lord J. Russell, that the House agree to the Lords' amendments on the Established Church Bill. The principal amendment objected to was that which declared it not to be necessary that a Welsh Bishop should speak the Welsh language. For the Lords' amendment, 51; for the original clause, 45; majority, 6. The other amendments, after considerable discussion, were agreed to.—Lord Palmerston moved the third reading of the Greek Loan Bill. Mr. Robinson moved, as an amendment, "that it be read a third time that day three months." The amendment was negatived, and the Bill read a third time and passed.—On the motion of Mr. Hume the writ for the borough of Stafford was suspended until ten days after the commencement of the next session of Parliament.—The Tithe Composition Bill, and the Civil Officers Declaration Bill, were read a third time and passed.

Friday, 12th Aug.—Mr. P. M. Stewart brought before the House a petition on the subject of the Trade with Java, which occasioned a long discussion.—A message from the Lords reported that their Lordships had agreed to the Newspaper Stamp Duty Bill without any amendment.—The order of the day for the further consideration of the report on the Bribery at Elections Bill was then read, but only 33 Members being present, the House adjourned.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

Spain.—On the 25th ult. the Republican Constitution of 1812 was again proclaimed by the populace in Malaga, in the midst of the most inhuman excesses. The Civil and Military Governors were put to death in the most savage manner. Most of the Government officers were compelled to flee. Immediately on the news becoming known at Cadiz the proclamation was instantly responded to, and Seville, Valencia, Cordova, Barcelona, Saragossa, Jaen, and Granada, have followed the example by a similar manifestation of feeling. In each of the places the authorities of the present Government have been completely subdued. Letters from Madrid dwell on the great excitement which prevails in that capital occasioned by the news from the provinces. Some acts of violence were committed in the streets on the night of the 31st ult., and shouts in favour of the "Constitution" raised by a few individuals, who were immediately dispersed by the armed force. The ministers, it is said, have ready for instant publication a royal ordinance declaring Madrid to be in a state of siege.

The Onate Gazette of 2d inst. gives a despatch from the Carlist Comm.-in-Chief, Villareal, dated Campo d'Honor, July 29th, and addressed to General Cordova, stating, that as he had been informed that the Queen's General had recently issued an order that all the corps in the countries occupied by the Carlist troops should be burnt and destroyed, he (Villareal) had also directed the Generals under his command, that if the above-mentioned order was really issued and carried into execution, 20 chiefs and other officers, who are in their hands as prisoners, should be taken to the advanced posts and shot, by way of reprisal.

Holland.—The King has reviewed the army at the camp of Reyen, and was received with enthusiasm by the soldiers and the inhabitants of the neighbouring town of Telburg.

The Canadas.—According to the accounts received from Upper Canada at Halifax, the elections were going on; nine radicals had been thrown out, and their places filled with Conservatives. Bidwell, Perry, and M'Kenzie stood the lowest on the poll lists in the counties for which they were candidates. Sir Francis Head is idolized by the respectable portion of the population. All was quiet in Lower Canada. Lord Gosford was spending the summer in Montreal and its neighbourhood. H.M.'s ships Rainbow, Champion, and Wanderer were employed affording valuable protection to the fisheries in the St. Lawrence, Bay Chaleur, Bay of Fundy, and on the coast of Newfoundland.

Theatres.

Lyceum.—On monday evening, Mr. Barnett's clever opera of "The Mountain Sylph" was performed for the first time this season at this house, and proved that the managing committee have acted wisely in reviving it, for the Theatre has been well attended every evening this week. Two changes have been made in the cast since it was last played, and neither for the better. Miss Shirreff performs the part of Eolia, originally played by Miss Romer, and Mr. Bland that of Hela, performed by Mr. Phillips. Miss Shirreff executes the music of her part with great sweetness and fine taste, but does not act the Sylph with the playfulness, feeling, and naiveté of her predecessor. Mr. Bland deserves praise for his exertions in the part of Hela, considering that art and nature have done very little for him. After the opera, the new farce of "House Room" was played for the first time, and proved successful if the absence of disapprobation may be deemed success. This farce is one of the most absurd, improbable, and ill-constructed pieces we ever witnessed, and has the great fault of most of the pieces produced here; namely, that all the characters in the farce are sacrificed to make one important, and that one of the most slender pretensions. The bustling ease and impudence of Mr. Wrench, in the part of Major Slenderpurse saved the piece; and a much worse piece it could not have saved. Surely with such a company better farces ought to be produced at this theatre.

Queen's.—"The King's Word," a burletta produced at Drury Lane theatre, was played at this house on Monday evening for the first time, and introduced a Mrs. Manvers from the Liverpool theatre to a London audience. This lady has a pleasing face, and a good figure, but her articulation will we fear prove a sad drawback to her success. She may be found a useful member of the company, but is certainly unfit for the principal business. In the burletta of Midas, we had Mrs. Waylett in her favourite part of Apollo, she warbled her charming ballads in the most exquisite style, and met with a rapturous encore in "Pray Goody" and "Awny! away to the mountain's brow." The Midas of Mr. Conquest was very amusing. Miss Lee, and Miss Pincott, looked and played the parts of Daphne and Nysa extremely well; but for the rest—except Mr. Suter in Silenus—the least that's said the better. There's plenty of room for improvement.

LIEUT. CHARLES THOMAS HILL, R.N.

[We have received the following Memorandum of this Officer's Case: the observations thereon in the House of Commons will be found fully reported in our Paper of this day.—Ed.]

On the 2d June, 1835, then serving on board the Vernon, he was appointed by Sir Josias Rowley, the Com.-in-Chief in the Mediterranean, to command the Alban steam-vessel, instead of Roupel, invalided, and was confirmed by Admiralty Commission, dated 20th July.—He was actively employed from that period in the conveyance of mails and despatches, and in attendance upon Earl Durham through the Archipelago and in the Bosphorus; and on the morning of 17th Dec. last, quitted Malta for England, in execution of written orders, received from the Com.-in-Chief.—He was soon afterwards recalled by signal, and, without any inquiry or alleged misconduct, removed suddenly from his command, deprived of his property and sent on shore, and left locked up in the Lazaretto, unprovided with the common necessaries of life.—He stated his helpless and degraded condition to the Governor of Malta, and then, after a lapse of more than two days, an order was delivered, requiring him to do his duty as a Lieutenant of the Flag Ship, but he was not released from the Lazaretto until the 3d of January, and then, contrary to his wish, was placed on board the Mastiff brig and conveyed to England, where, upon arrival, he was again sent adrift on shore.—He represented the facts of his position in writing to the Secretary of the Admiralty, which was not noticed, and, after a lapse of ten days, presented himself there, where he was told that their Lordships intended to send him back to the Mediterranean, to be tried by a Court Martial, and required him to furnish a list of witnesses necessary to his defence, to which he respectfully submitted the impracticability, no charge, up to that moment, having been alleged; but expressed his readiness to meet any inquiry upon his conduct, wherever their Lordships might be pleased to direct, and, in conformity to their instructions, proceeded to Sheerness for that purpose.—A letter from Sir Josias Rowley was for the first time read to him (of which he has no copy) wherein it was implied that the Admiral was displeased with his conduct; but, as far as he could collect, in the course of the examination of witnesses, which occupied two days, there was no proof of the constructive disobedience of orders, or mental incapacity, set forth in any of the accompanying written statements, and that his dismissal from the command of the Alban under the eyes of the whole crew, specially called on deck to witness it, was not only most oppressive and unjustifiable, but, as a precedent, may be most dangerously detrimental to the discipline of the Navy.—The report of these proceedings has not been made known to him, and the minutes of evidence taken have been refused.—The property, consisting of plate, furniture, wine, &c., of which he was deprived, in value two hundred pounds, has not been restored to him,—and the pay which he has recovered has been calculated at a diminished rate.—The removal of an officer in command without his consent is forbidden by the printed instructions: (1) if he disobey orders, or otherwise misbehave, there is a remedy prescribed; (2) and if he be sick or otherwise incapacitated, there are quarters, or an asylum provided, suitable to his malady.—The injury of credit and character which have followed as a consequence of this unauthorized and arbitrary act, and the alarm and inconvenience occasioned to his family and connexions by the malicious and inconsiderate reports, for the circulation of which it afforded a pretext*, are grievous and aggravated, and seem to call for a remedy which he has sought in vain at the hands of the Lord Commissioners of the Admiralty.

"A Captain or Commander of any of H. M. ships or vessels, is not to be removed without his consent from the command of the ship or vessel to which he has been appointed." "The pay of all Commission and Warrant Officers shall cease, on their being superseded." Page 23. Art. 35.—"An Officer on half-pay shall not be appointed to a ship, nor shall he receive any commission or employment whatever from a Com.-in-Chief, or any other Officer, without express directions from the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty."

"If an Officer shall receive from his superior an Order, which he may deem at variance with any Article in the King's Regulations or in these Instructions, or with any particular order he may receive, &c., he is to represent in writing such contrariety, and if, after such representation, that Officer shall still direct him to obey the Order he has given him, he is to do so."

Copy of a Memorial attached to a Schedule of a Servitude, commencing 13th July, 1809, and ending Feb., 1833.

I Admiral Sir Thomas Williams, do hereby certify that I have perused all the Certificates and letters above stated, and find them to be correct in point of servitude, and besides highly favourable testimonials of Mr. Hill's conduct and character.

Given 30th June, 1833. Thomas Williams.

To Thomas Holmes, Esq., Hull.

No. 8, Adelphi Terrace, London, 29th January, 1836.

Sir,—I beg to inform you that the Alban steam-vessel, of which Lieut. C. T. Hill had the command, is arrived at Woolwich, with the intelligence that Lieut. Hill was left behind in a state of derangement to be conveyed home in the Packet. I have received several packages from the ship, which I retain in my possession until further orders. I will therefore thank you to inform me what I am to do with them, and also what is the intention of his friends with regard to Lieut. Hill on his arrival. Waiting your reply, I remain, &c., G. M'CRINDELL, for C. CLEMANTSON.

Thomas Holmes, Esq., Hull.

No. 8, Adelphi Terrace, London, 12*th Feb.*, 1835.

SIR,—I beg leave to inform you that one of my Clerks saw Lieut. C. T. Hill this morning at the Admiralty; he evidently appears to be labouring under an illusion, and I think it would be advisable for some of his friends to see after him; he refused to give his address; I shall be glad to hear from you on the subject, and in the mean time will endeavour to trace him to his lodgings.

I remain, &c., CHARLES CLEMANTSON.

P.S. Since the above was written, a circumstance has come to my knowledge that renders it highly advisable for Lieut. Hill's future welfare, that his friends shall immediately take charge of him. C. C.
